important is it that the people should be educated and how educated? Not by colleges, not by high schools; they are very well; but they are out of the reach of the great mass. They are to be educated by common schools. The New England system of common school education must reach the whole mass of our people, or this country, perhaps we may say, cannot be sustained. In view of that, this bill is immensely important. I trust the bill will pass. I shall take up no time in speaking upon it, because I know it is important to bring it to a vote at once.

Mr. SUMNER. I am unwilling that this bill should be embarrassed by any question of words. I am for the bill in its substance, whatever words may be employed. Call it a bureau if you please, or call it a department; I accept it under either designation. The Senator from Connecticut has not too strongly depicted the necessity of the case. We are to have universal suffrage, a natural consequence of universal emancipation, but that I fear will almost be a barren scepter in the hands of the people unless we give them also education. From the beginning of our troubles I have foreseen this question. Through the agency and under the influence of the national Government education is to be promoted in the rebel States. To that end we need some central agency. That, if I understand it, is to be supplied by the bill now before us.

Call it then I say a bureau, or call it a department; but give us the bill, and do not endanger it, at this moment, in this late hour of the session, by any unnecessary amendment. For myself, sir, I would if I could give it the highest designation. If there is any term in our dictionary that would give it peculiar significance I should prefer that. Indeed I should not hesitate, if I could have my way, to place the head of the Department of Education in the Cabinet of the United States. In that we should only follow the practice of one of the civilized Governments of the world. I refer to France, which for years has had one of its responsible members of the cabinet a minister of education. But there is no such proposition now before us. The question is simply on a name; and I hope we shall not take up time with regard to it.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator from Massachusetts, though a more powerful advocate of education, is not a more earnest one than myself.

Mr. SUMNER. Of course not.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not understand the value of the Senator's argument when he says that he is prepared to make this a department, giving the head of it a seat in the Cabinet. If he is disposed so to dignify it and render it important, then he certainly or the friends of this measure have fallen very far short of that object. I do not understand the legitimacy of bringing such an expression to bear in favor of the form the bill now has, when the Senator has failed to give it that importance and dignity in the preparation of the bill. I think that the question of making this complication is one of consequence. I agree to the importance of a bill of this character; but I do not agree with the Senator from Illinois when he claims the degree of merit which he did while he was up for this measure. It will not at once regulate the great subject of education and control it in the States of this Union. I do not see, indeed, by the provisions of the bill that it is in any considerable degree to effect any such purpose; but I do agree that it is an important measure in the initiation of what may become, to some extent, a controlling and useful and necessary power. But if Senators are not prepared to give it the importance and dignity of a department of this Government, then I ask them not to complicate the question by calling it a department with three clerks.

As to the objection to sending the bill back to the House with an amendment, there is no force in that as I think. The Senator from Illinois said that it was important to give the head of this bureau, or so-called department, the appointment of the clerks. I think so, too; but that may be given by an amendment, which I propose to suggest, striking out at the end of the second section all after the words "per annum" and inserting the following:

And the said clerks shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, on the nomination of the commissioner.

It need not be claimed that this is taking away the appointment from a source authorized by law, because the appointment may be made out of a number selected and presented by the commissioner, thus securing persons of educational ability for those offices. I thought when I made the suggestion of amendment that it would at once meet with the approbation of the Senators who promise so much for this bill.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, the struggle to emancipate the nation is just ended. The struggle to enfranchise the nation is almost ended. The struggle to educate the nation is just commencing, and commencing with this bill. I shall not detain the Senate, except so long as to say that viewing it in that light I shall give my vote and my whole heart to this bill. That it is the best bill that could be prepared I shall not affirm, for I do not know. I believe that any effort is better than no effort. I believe that to amend this bill, or to attempt to amend it, tends only to defeat any effort; and therefore I shall oppose any amendment that can be offered, and I shall vote for the bill just as it stands.

Mr. HOWARD. I shall vote for the bill; that is, for the principle of the bill, for it is one which I favor; but I do think there is great weight in what the Senator from California has said with regard to making it a department. I think the word "department" as it is used in this bill, is rather an unconstitutional application of the word. What does the Constitution contemplate as a department of the Government? Its language is quite plain on that subject.

"He [the President] may require the opinion, in writing, of the principal officer in each of the Executive Departments upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices," &c.

Now, sir, it has been the usage of the country, it has been the understanding of the people from the foundation of the Government, that a Department of the Government of the United States is such an institution as has at its head a gentleman who is a member of the Cabinet, who is a Secretary of State, or of the Treasury, or is Attorney General, or Postmaster General. This view seems to me to derive additional strength from the use of the phrase in the succeeding section, "heads of Departments" as connected with the power of appointment to office under the Government of the United States. It seems to me when the Constitution, therefore, speaks of a Department it means such a department whose head has, under the Constitution, a right to appoint, if the law so allows, to offices, as is the case in all the heads of Departments. I do not think that the simple calling of what is in reality a bureau a department, and giving it a head, gives to that head any additional power or authority under the Constitution. In short, sir, I think it is a misapplication of terms to call it a department; and I think we committed an error when we called the Agricultural Bureau a department; and for one I regret that I voted to give it such a designation. I hope, therefore, that the slight amendment of the Senator from California will prevail. It cannot delay the passage of the bill, for I am quite sure the House will at once concur in what is merely a correction of the designation of the officer.

Mr. NORTON. Understanding this bill as I do, that it is merely for the purpose of establishing here at the seat of Government a bureau to disseminate information generally throughout the country in regard to education, I shall vote for it; but if I understood it, as it seems the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Illinois do, and perhaps the Senator from California, that it will lead to the establishment of a bureau or department here which, under the direction of Congress, shall have control of the school systems of the various States and shall regulate those systems, I should certainly oppose it. I believe that the cause of education in the various States is best promoted by being exclusively under the direction of the States, and that each State should have the exclusive management and direction of its school funds and the disposition of all grants made by Congress for the establishment and maintenance and support of schools within its limits. Now, we have in the State of Minnesota adopted a school system; we have adopted a system of disposal of our school lands, deeming it the best that could be devised, and it is one that is satisfactory to the people of the State of Minnesota.

I should be very reluctant, indeed, by any vote I might give here to seem to approve of a proposition that any authority or any power outside of the State should interfere with the disposal of those lands or interfere with the management of the proceeds of the sales of those lands. Believing, however, this bill to be merely the establishment of a bureau here for the purpose or disseminating information in regard to schools and education, informing one State of the progress of education in another, informing one State of the manner of conducting schools and the school systems to be found in another, and believing that to be beneficial and of advantage to the country, I approve of it; but I repeat, if I thought it had the scope that the Senator from Illinois seems to intimate it might have, or that it would lead to legislation which would effect that, I should certainly oppose it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. When this measure was first introduced, I hardly thought that its patrons were serious in urging it. It seems to me to be more of a device to create officers and patronage and to make drafts on the Treasury than anything else. Instead of increasing the bureaus in the Departments, I would be willing to discontinue about half a dozen of them. I think there are a great deal too many already.

Mr. President, I do not believe that Congress is competent to take under its care and management the subject of education, except in this District. In the States I am firmly convinced that that all-important matter can be much more wisely and successfully provided for by the State authorities and the people of the State. In addition to that, I doubt seriously the power and the competence of Congress to pass this measure. This thing of Congress drawing into the vortex of the power of the national Government so many subjects and interests that, according to my judgment, belong peculiarly to the States, and were intended to be left exclusively to State management, and that can be so much more wisely and successfully and beneficially managed by the States than by Congress, is a very mistaken policy. That is my humble opinion. I have merely said what I have said to express my entire dissent from this measure.

Mr. YATES. I wish to say a very few words on this bill, because I desire to identify myself with it. I believe it will pass; I believe it ought to pass. I think it will produce beneficial results to the nation, now and hereafter, through all the future history of the Government.

I did not like the tenor of the argument of the Senator from Minnesota, and also of the Senator from Kentucky, in introducing the question of what belongs to the States and what belongs to the General Government. I think we have had lessons enough in the past to know and understand that for all time to come we are a nation, not States merely, but a nation, with the powers and attributes of sovereignty as a nation. The ultra doctrine, that all power in this Government belongs to the States, has resulted in woes immeasurable to this Government, in the loss of hundreds of thousands of lives and millions of treasure. And now when it is simply proposed that we shall have a national bureau of education, the old Calhoun doctrine of States rights must be held up, and it must be maintained that we are encroaching upon the sovereignty of the States.

Sir, we need a center for our educational system; and I do not know that I should have said one word upon this subject but for the fact that a very distinguished citizen of Great Britain, upon a visit to our State capital at Springfield, Illinois, made the statement to me that he could not ascertain the statistics of education in the United States. He could obtain the reports of the superintendents of schools of the various States, but he could obtain no reliable data or statistics of the educational position of the United States. We want this as a central department to which the reports of the various superintendents of schools of the respective States shall be made, so that we shall have collective information of all the systems of schools in all the States, which we may see at a glance, and which may be distributed and sent back to the States, with the collective wisdom of all these State institutions, for the benefit of the people. I repeat, sir, that I regard this as a great measure, and as calculated to have a beneficial effect upon the country now and hereafter.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to say a word only, as I seem to have been misunderstood by Senators in some remarks that I made as to what this nation had done for the education of the children of the land. They seem to suppose that this is a bill to take that subject entirely out of the control of the States. It is not so by any means. It is merely, as my colleague has remarked, to establish a center for the dissemination of information among the States as to improvements in the way of building school-houses, in methods of imparting education, and giving a history of the disposition of the vast amount of property which the nation has donated for purposes of education. I think it will be very important for the States and Territories to know what disposition has been made of the school lands in Illinois and Alabama, to see which State has managed them most judiciously. Let the other States have the benefit of this knowledge. We learn from history. This is to establish a center from whence may be disseminated information on this most important subject. I do not wish to take time, and as another bill is pressing I trust we may have the question on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, and I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand, then, from the Senator from Illinois that the information he seeks to obtain, if this bill shall pass, will be merely second-hand information that is collected from the superintendents of the common schools of the different States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think there will be a great deal more than that. That is one thing.

Mr. GRIMES. What other information is to be got?

Mr. TRUMBULL. As I said, I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate. I suppose this—

Mr. GRIMES. I make this inquiry in view of the suggestion thrown out by the Senator's colleague, who speaks of it as being the great central depot of information and influence and control for all the common schools throughout the land.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I did not understand my colleague to state that it was to control—

Mr. GRIMES. That was the inference to be drawn from what he said.

Mr. TRUMBULL. He stated that it was to be a center.

Mr. GRIMES. To which a foreigner who sought information at his State capital could come and obtain accurate information in regard to the condition of the public schools in all the States of the Union.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir; I hope it will be.

Mr. GRIMES. What I want to know is whether this bureau or department, or whatever it may be called, if it shall be organized, will have its own agents in the respective States so as to obtain accurate information that can be relied on by these foreigners, or whether that information is to be secured at second-hand through the superintendents' reports issued at the various State capitals.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that all prior orders be postponed to take up the Army appropriation bill. I wish to state to the Senate that it is very necessary that the appropriation bills should be out of our way.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us have a vote on this bill. I think there is no disposition to discuss it further.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This bill is now out of order because the unfinished business of yesterday takes precedence of it, and I want to discuss this matter myself.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope we shall be permitted to go on and finish this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will only say to the Senate that we have now four or five legislative days left. We have got these bills to dispose of. I am just notified by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the other House that the tax bill has passed there and will be here to-day, and the Committee on Finance must be in continual session on that bill for two or three days, I suppose, in order to prepare it for the consideration of the Senate. I desire to report to-day, if possible, the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses, and that will also take time. This Army appropriation bill should be disposed of promptly. The bill for the regulation of the currency is also to be disposed of. There are yet two appropriation bills to come from the other House, the deficiency bill and the naval appropriation bill. I say to the Senate if they expect to pass these bills they must proceed with them. It is impossible for me to attend to all these things; I must have some of them out of the way. When they are disposed of the Senate can go on with these other matters, which certainly can be deferred and are not of pressing necessity. I move that the Senate suspend all prior orders with a view to take up the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the regular order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order of business is the motion made by the Senator from Maine, to postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. The unfinished business of yesterday, as I understand the rules, is now before the Senate. Am I not correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. According to the rules, on the expiration of the morning hour the unfinished business of yesterday is before the Senate; but the motion of the Senator from Maine is to postpone its further consideration.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood that; but the unfinished business of yesterday, the Niagara ship-canal bill, being now before the Senate, I wish to submit some remarks. The Senator from Maine last night not only moved an adjournment but the Committee on Finance carried that adjournment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Maine did not move an adjournment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Well, he voted for it with a perfect knowledge that the Niagara ship-canal bill was to be the order of business this morning. If the Committee on Finance could afford to adjourn last night when we were ready for a vote on the Niagara ship-canal bill, they can afford to wait with their business until we get a vote on that bill to-day; and I intend to antagonize it not only against this appropriation bill, but against any appropriation bill that the Senator from Maine may bring up. It was a member of the Committee on Finance that threatened us with a two hours speech or with reading books for two hours to defeat the Niagara ship-canal bill. Sir, I consider that bill as of more importance to this nation than any bill that is now in the possession of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. President, the fact is that the avenues of communication are totally insufficient for the commerce of this nation. Thirty-three years ago, when I emigrated to Michigan, then a Territory, it contained a population of less than forty thousand inhabitants, and that Territory included the present States of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. At that time we imported from Ohio all the provisions which we ate. Then the great State of New York had dug a ditch; literally it was entitled to no other name. That ditch was a great benefit to commerce. It was perhaps large enough for the commerce that then existed; but in process of time that commerce grew and increased till that ditch was found to be insufficient, and the State of New York dug a canal. But before she had completed her canal, the commerce exceeded the capacity of that canal. Then, sir, line after line of railroad was built, reaching out to the commerce of the Northwest, and all these lines of communication have become literally glutted with that enormous commerce; and the requirements of that commerce now demand that a ship-canal shall be built around the falls of Niagara.

Sir, New York is a great State; but she is not large enough to block up the commerce of the Northwest. That commerce must and will find its proper avenue to the markets of the world. It is a disgrace to this nation that we should depend upon the little Province of Upper Canada for our communication between these great waters. The commerce of the lakes to-day amounts to more than one hundred million dollars. It employs one thousand eight hundred ships and more than twenty thousand sailors in its prosecution. Heretofore we were compelled to use ships of a small size, perhaps of three or four hundred tons; but a few years ago, through the beneficence of Congress, the channel through the St. Clair flats was deepened, and now we are building ships of a thousand tons, ships of the capacity of forty or fifty thousand bushels, and we require a canal large enough to take those ships from Lake Erie into Lake Ontario. Last year we raised in the Northwest seven hundred million bushels of corn, one hundred and seventy-five million bushels of wheat, two million hogs, and other things in proportion. The mind is almost lost in the contemplation of the vastness of this commerce. It was no longer ago than last year that, notwithstanding all of these lines of communication were open, their capacity was so much overtaxed that the railroad companies centering in Buffalo, after filling all the warehouses in the city of Buffalo, were obliged to hire land, and the beef and pork and other articles from the Northwest were piled up by acres. The capacity of the depots there was totally insufficient.

If this canal were built, and large vessels enabled to pass around the falls at Niagara, it would lessen the cost of transportation upon every bushel of our corn and wheat at least five cents. It is well known that small vessels are navigated at a relatively much larger expense than large vessels. A ship of the capacity of forty or fifty thousand bushels costs but about twice as much to run it as a vessel of the capacity of ten thousand bushels.

I hope that the motion of the Senator from Maine will not prevail, but that the Senate will stand by the Niagara ship-canal bill until it is passed; and if the Senator from New York desires to read documents here for two hours let him read them, but let us stand by the bill until it is passed. Then we will agree to take up the appropriation bills, and we will not move to adjourn; we will stay here late in the night, or all night if it is necessary, to pass your appropriation bills; but let this great measure, this measure of vital importance to the commerce of the West, be first passed, and then it will be time enough to take up your appropriation bills. I hope the pending motion will not prevail, but that we shall proceed with the consideration of the Niagara ship-canal bill, and keep it before the Senate till the final vote is taken.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I was aware somewhat from my experience of what we should have to meet during the residue of the session. We probably all know that we must be in session every evening, and that on some of the last nights of this week we may have to stay up pretty much all night. We probably shall have to do so two nights in succession at any rate in order to get through with the business. Last night at eleven o'clock, when I knew perfectly well that the debate upon this Niagara ship-canal bill was going on, and would go on probably for hours, and when the Senate was fast thinning out, I deemed it advisable to vote for an adjournment which was moved, because I thought we could not begin the week in this way and hold out to the end, so as to do the business we have got to do. Now, if Senators agree that this Niagara ship-canal bill is of more importance than any other bill which has been passed or can be passed by this Congress, of course they will take it up and continue its consideration to the exclusion of the ordinary business which must be done if we would carry on the Government at all. I believe the Senator from Michigan told us yesterday that the appropriation in a bill which he had then in charge for the harbor at Lac la Belle was the most important of any appropriation in that bill, and that it should pass. I think the Senate did not come to his conclusion, and I believe he did not even call a division on the question. It went overboard by common consent as a matter grossly improper. I mention that to show that the Senator's opinion is not always infallible; that he may entertain an opinion different from that of the majority of the Senate, and that he may do so in this instance. The majority, however important they may think this bill, may not think it more important than all other business which has come before the Senate at this session or that can come before it. That is a matter of opinion upon which we may differ. At any rate, last night this bill, involving the expenditure of some six million dollars, to be placed in the hands of a private corporation for a great public work, was taken up at ten o'clock at night, when it might, at the will of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce, have been taken up at any time during the day had he seen fit to do so. It was taken up at a time when the Senate was not as full as it usually is; and I did not deem it advisable, when my vote was called for, to stay all night on such a bill and hear two-hour speeches which were threatened when we had so much other business to do; and therefore I voted substantially to have it go over until this morning, giving notice that I should move this morning to take up the Army appropriation bill.

Now, sir, to me personally it is a matter of indifference. I have a certain amount of physical strength which I am willing to expend for the benefit of the country (if it be so regarded) in laboring upon these bills to get them passed. There is a point beyond which I have not power to go. I have not the physical endurance of some men, and everybody knows that during the last week of the session vastly more labor must necessarily come upon me individually, from the position that I happen perhaps unworthily to occupy as chairman of the Committee on Finance, than upon anybody else, for I must see personally to all these bills that are in process of being passed at the close of the session. I repeat, that long as my strength holds out I am willing to devote it to that purpose; but it is beyond my power to go so far perhaps as the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce could do were he in my position. I have not the physical or the mental capacity which would enable me to endure so much as he could endure under like circumstances. Therefore, as I know what I have got to do and what the Committee on Finance have got to do, as I know that to-day or to-morrow morning at the furthest they must take up the tax bill which is coming from the House of Representatives, and devote their time both day and night to that, and then bring it into the Senate and endeavor to pass it, with all the other things that they have to do, I only say that these bills which are now before the Senate, and which we have reported, must be out of the way, for members of the Committee on Finance, while considering the tax bill, cannot come into the Senate to attend to these other measures. I think, then, it is not unreasonable for me to ask the Senate to take up these bills and let us dispose of them, and then, after they are disposed of, if there is time, the Senate can proceed with the other bills gentlemen desire to have considered, which, however important, are not essential to carrying on the Government, as are these to which I have called attention.

Having said thus much, and having last night given notice of the motion which I now make, I submit the matter to the Senate, and they will decide. If they choose not to do what I have asked, the Senate must take up these bills as they see fit, but probably without the aid (if aid I might be able to give) which I could otherwise render.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it is well known that the appropriation bills which are in charge of the Senator from Maine must and will go through. They are always crowded into the last days of the session, but they always pass; they never fail. The Senator says that I may be mistaken. I do not claim to be infallible. I did state yesterday that I considered the Lac la Belle appropriation of vast importance; and I do now; and I believe that when the Senate come to understand it precisely as it is they will think as I do; but the Senate differed from me with regard to Lac la Belle, and I acquiesced in their decision of course as gracefully as I could. But the Niagara ship-canal bill if it gets the go-by now as a matter of course is disposed of for the session. It is a House bill; it simply requires the action of the Senate. The vote could be taken in five minutes if the opponents of the bill would let it be taken. I proposed last night to submit it without discussion. I did not say one word in its favor. I propose to submit it without discussion now. I have no remarks to make upon the bill. All I ask is a vote, and I think I am entitled to that vote. The Senator well knows that all important measures are passed at night sessions. It is true I might have called up this bill yesterday to the exclusion of other business of the Committee on Commerce; but if I had brought it up in the morning the discussion would have lasted all of the day and through the night, and at ten o'clock I should have been no nearer a vote than I was by taking it up at ten o'clock. If the Senator had remained with me, or if he had quietly gone away and taken his rest and recuperated his physical and mental strength, I should not have objected to it; in fact, it would have suited me rather better, for if he stayed I knew he would vote against the bill, and if he was away he could not do any harm.

Of course, sir, if I am voted down now, I shall not try to bring up the Niagara ship-canal bill again this session; the success of this motion is the defeat of the bill. I therefore ask the friends of the bill to stand by it now and let us act upon it at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. CONNESS. It is quite unpleasant to Senators to be called upon to vote as between their associates in this body upon questions involving the precedence of business. Ordinarily the honorable Chairman of the Finance Committee has his own way in this body and is entitled to have it, representing as he does the most important part of our legislation; but it does seem to me that the measure in charge of the Senator from Michigan has been before Congress long enough and has sufficient strength in this body. I do not know that there is a majority of Senators in its favor, but it has a sufficient number of Senators who advocate it to entitle it to a vote. I feel that that is the case, and I shall therefore so act as to procure a vote upon the subject. It is a bill that has stood in no small degree in the way of legislation in this body. It is very much like what the Louisiana bill was for a week—thrown in the face of the Senate against all other business from time to time—a very formidable impediment. I believe that the Senate can vote as intelligently upon this bill to-day as they can at any time, and I trust we can get a vote upon it and dispose of it. If it be voted down, that is the end of it; but if it be voted up, so to speak, then it is the opinion of the Senate, and the Senate have a right to express their opinion in that way.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not think, sir, there is any danger that the appropriation bill to which the honorable Senator from Maine has alluded will fail of being acted upon at this session. There is time enough for the Senate to act upon both of these measures. The Niagara ship-canal bill is one of great importance, as everybody knows. It was fully discussed at the previous session of Congress, and I am not aware that there is any gentleman present who wishes to occupy the time of the Senate greatly in the rediscussion of that subject; and I do think, considering the importance of the measure, the deep interest which every western and northwestern man has in its passage, it is due to us that we take up the bill and endeavor to pass finally upon it. If there be a majority of the Senate in favor of it, let us say so; if there be a majority opposed to it, let us say so; and satisfy the people who are so deeply interested in it that we intended at least to pay them the respect of acting upon it. I do not wish to spend the time of the Senate in discussing it, but I ask the Senate to come to a vote upon it. Then I shall be quite ready to take up any other bill that may be pressing upon our attention; but I think we ought in justice and fairness to pay it the respect of at least voting upon it.

Mr. BROWN. I have not taken any of the time of the Senate in discussing this measure, and do not propose to do so now. I will say, however, that I am one of those who represent a State whose commerce will be largely affected by the passage of this bill, and that while I would be perfectly willing to vote an appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States to construct a canal around the falls of Niagara, and to put it under the charge and the control of the Government of the United States, predicated upon the idea that it was to be free for all commerce, yet I never will, representing the State of Missouri and its commerce, consent to the establishment of a toll-gate in private hands, which shall levy its tribute on all commerce of the whole West for an indefinite time to come. If the gentlemen will so modify their bill as to put it in that shape, that the work shall be under the control of the United States, and take a direct appropriation from the Government, I will join with them heartily; but to put it into the hands of a private corporation, who may hereafter levy their tolls ad libitum, I for one can never consent to it.

Mr. MORRILL. It is perhaps fair to my honorable friend, who is chairman of the Committee on Commerce, that I should say a word on this subject. I have stood by the chairman in his efforts to get this bill before the Senate, and have invariably voted to bring it to the attention of the Senate whenever he has made the motion, and I staid here last night, and was willing to stay till morning if it were necessary; but I feel called upon now to say (in reply to the intimation of my honorable friend that all he asks is a vote, that he does not wish to discuss it) that he cannot have a vote on this subject at the present time, in the present position of the bill, without some discussion. I wish the Senate to understand this, not by way of menace, not by way of influencing the vote of the Senate at all; but that as the bill stands on the motion now pending, to change the character of the bill as it came from the committee, and as alone it had my consent, I cannot yield to its passage, nor can I allow a silent vote to be taken upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does my friend from Maine mean to impute any impropriety in my insisting on a vote on the amendment? I did not agree to the amendment in committee, and I was not aware that I was precluded from insisting on its rejection now.

Mr. MORRILL. Not the slightest in the world. I do not impute anything to anybody. All I mean to say is that the bill as it came from the Senate committee is one thing and the bill as proposed to be amended is another, and so widely different from that which was reported by the committee that it marks the distinctions of the entire history of legislation and the executive policy of this Government for fifty years; and I do not propose to allow the action of the committee to be reversed on a question so important as that without raising my voice against it, without undertaking, at least in the humble way I can, to show to the Senate precisely what I think it means or what will be the tendency and effect of the policy on which it is proposed to enter. Not only as much as that is involved in it, but there is the suggestion which was so pertinently stated by my honorable friend from Missouri, [Mr. BROWN,] whether the Government of this country now are willing to say that great public works of a military character are to be committed to private corporations. But, sir, I forbear any discussion of the merits of the case. I felt called upon from the remark which fell from my honorable friend, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and whose efforts to get this bill before the Senate I have seconded whenever I have been in the Senate, to say to the Senate that if it comes up at the present time it must not be expected that I shall be intruding upon its attention if I feel called upon to discuss the measure. That is all I mean to say.

Mr. MORGAN. When my friend from Michigan has been urging the passage of the Niagara ship-canal bill, I have felt that he was calling upon the Senate to consider a measure the principle of which was at least doubtful and the necessity for which has never been shown, and one which, if passed into a law, would place the United States in direct antagonism to the State of New York. But, sir, I have known how earnest he was, and how ardent and sincere in believing that some measure of this kind was required for the interests of the West; and so far from opposing him, I have to a great extent sympathized with him in his efforts. But when my friend from Vermont declared on the floor of the Senate last night that he was in favor of a charter by Congress to a company to exercise jurisdiction in the State of New York, I felt some surprise; I felt more than surprise: I felt some alarm; and if the views expressed by that Senator, learned in the law as he is, respected as he is for his great talents and learning, were entertained by the body generally, and Congress was now to enter upon the policy of chartering corporations the franchises of which were to be exercised in the States, then, indeed, I felt that we had fallen upon evil times. But, sir, I had not supposed—and I think my friend from Michigan was a little in error in that respect—that I had ever occupied any more than my due proportion of the time of the Senate in making speeches or in reading documents, and I think, therefore, that his criticism in that respect was a little out of place. I did say, however, that if this bill was to be pressed to a vote, I should not be willing to allow it to pass without at least making known to the Senate the views entertained by the State which I have the honor in part to represent here; and if this bill is to be pushed, I shall insist, as it is my right, upon making known at least to the Senate the sentiments entertained upon that subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine, to postpone the present and all prior orders, and proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 25, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Nesmith, Patterson, Riddle, Sherman, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Dixon, Edmunds, Fogg, Howard, Howe, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Yates—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Doolittle, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Saulsbury, and Sprague—9.

So the motion of Mr. FESSENDEN was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not trouble the Senate again with this Niagara ship-canal bill; but I give notice that I shall, at a future day, ask leave to introduce a bill to construct a ship-canal around the falls of Niagara by the Government of the United States, to be forever free to the commerce of the United States.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to say to the Senator from Michigan that when that bill is introduced it shall have my hearty support, as it will the support of several gentlemen who have just voted with me against his other proposition.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 904) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1868, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 912) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868;

A bill (H. R. No. 1051) for the relief of Henry P. Blanchard;

A bill (H. R. No. 1062) relative to the port of Camden, New Jersey; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 213) to extend the provisions of the act in regard to agricultural colleges to the State of Tennessee.

RECESS.

Mr. LANE. Before we proceed any further I desire to submit a motion that at half past four o'clock to-day the Senate take a recess till seven o'clock.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish the Senator from Indiana would modify his motion so as to make the hour for reassembling half past seven o'clock.

Mr. LANE. Very well, I will so modify my motion.

The motion, as modified, was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

COMPENSATION OF CIVIL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With the consent of the Senator from Maine, before the appropriation bill is proceeded with, I desire to take up House joint resolution No. 224, giving additional compensation to certain employés in the civil service of the Government at Washington, with a view of concurring in a few unimportant amendments made by the House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let the appropriation bill be laid aside informally for that purpose. ["Agreed."]

The Secretary read the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) giving additional compensation to certain employés in the civil service of the Government at Washington. The amendments were in line four of the Senate amendment after the word "service" to insert "of the United States;" at the end of line eight of the Senate amendment to insert "in the Executive Mansion and;" and after the word "meters" in line eighteen to insert "and to lamp-lighters under the Commissioner of Public Buildings;" and to strike out lines twenty-two, twenty-three, and twenty-four of the Senate amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to the Senate amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL and others. What changes are made?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The House amendments add to the persons named in the resolution the employés about the Executive Mansion, and also the lamp-lighters under the Commissioner of Public Buildings. Then the last three lines of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] are stricken out, which provided that there should be no future compensation, except as provided in this resolution, to persons unless their salaries are fixed by law, which would cut off any payment to persons whose salaries are not fixed by law. The joint resolution as it now stands, however, repeals the law which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to disburse any fund among the clerks. The effect is substantially to leave the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that the Secretary of the Treasury will have no power under the resolution as it now stands to pay any extra compensation under the former appropriation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No; that part of the Senator's amendment stands.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were concurred in.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1126) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out line sixty-eight to seventy-six of section one, in these words:

For the purchase of the Willard Sears estate, adjoining the Watertown arsenal grounds, $49,700; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to sell at public auction a lot of land belonging to the United States situated in South Boston, if, in his opinion, the same is not needed for the public service, and pay the proceeds thereof into the Treasury.

Mr. SUMNER. I am at a loss to understand why that is to be struck out. I understand that the estimates have been supplied by the War Department after inquiry. It will be observed that the proposition has two branches. First it provides for the purchase of a certain estate adjoining the Watertown arsenal, and for that purpose appropriates $49,700; and the second branch is an authority to the Secretary of War to sell another estate at South Boston, which is some ten miles from the first estate mentioned, if in the opinion of the Secretary the same is not needed for the public service. I understand that this was introduced into the original bill in the other House on the recommendation of the War Department, on estimates furnished by that Department. I have not the papers with me now; but I have been so told by gentlemen of the other House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator is mistaken. I expressly inquired of the member who offered the proposition in the other House whether there was any recommendation of the Department, and he told me none at all; it was moved by himself. He may have obtained a recommendation since; and if so, it can be shown. The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out the clause simply because there was no recommendation from the Department. It does not appear that it is a matter which has been considered by the Department.

Mr. SUMNER. I am taken somewhat by surprise on this point. I have no official information upon it; but I know as a citizen of Massachusetts that the arsenal at Watertown has been very much circumscribed for a long time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My impression is that the member to whom I refer came to me afterward and said he had obtained a recommendation from the War Department. I told him if so it could be shown to the Senate by being put into the hands of either of the Senators from Massachusetts.

Mr. SUMNER. I am sure that something like that has been obtained, though I am not in possession of it. Possibly my colleague is.

Mr. WILSON. The member of Congress from the district in which the arsenal is situated has placed in my hands a map of the grounds proposed to be purchased, and also two letters from Colonel Kingsbury, who is at the head of this arsenal, who recommends the purchase in the strongest possible manner. About forty acres of ground are proposed to be purchased. I will say further that the magazine is so close to the buildings that if an explosion should take place I do not believe any number of persons would escape. I think the magazine is within five or six rods of some of the buildings where many workmen are compelled to work. The grounds there are very small indeed. The additional ground will cost less at this time than at any other, because the locality cannot but grow in value. Colonel Kingsbury, in two letters which I have before me, expresses his opinion in the strongest manner that it will be to the interest of the Government to have these lands, to remove the magazine, and to do other things necessary for the good of the arsenal. I know the grounds there. I know that the Government is limited to a very small amount of land, and the necessity of an extension has been talked of for years. Even if this addition be made the grounds will be small comparatively. I believe it will be to the interest of the Government to purchase the additional land proposed. It will cost $49,000; but then it is proposed to sell a tract now owned by the Government near South Boston, which will perhaps bring from fifteen to twenty-five thousand dollars, leaving the additional expenditure only from twenty-five to thirty thousand dollars. I have before me the two letters of Colonel Kingsbury, and a well-drawn map of the arsenal ground and the ground proposed to be purchased.

Mr. CONNESS. It may be profitable to buy land in Massachusetts; but my experience, and I think that of the Senate, is that when the Government really want and need land very much in Massachusetts they will not sell it. For many years being without a sufficient space to anchor a vessel or bring her up to the wharf at Charlestown, where we have a navy-yard, the public authorities there, represented so well by the Senators from that State, have opposed the sale at any price to the Government of a sufficient extension of the ground of the yard to enable vessels, as I have stated, to be brought up to the end of a wharf. Now, I do not know whether we should buy land in Massachusetts where they want to sell it to us and where it has less value, and where there is less necessity for the Government to possess it. As I understand, they would not part with the land at Charlestown because it limited the amount of taxable property in that city. I do not know whether they are prepared to sell to the Government land at Watertown, or whether if they do it will not limit the amount of taxable property there. This dealing with Massachusetts in connection with land matters is a somewhat strange kind of business. I should not, nevertheless, object to this clause being retained in the bill if a proviso were added to it that the land at Charlestown, needed for the navy-yard, should also be purchased at the amount determined to be its proper price heretofore. If the Senator from Massachusetts will accept a proviso of that kind, perhaps we may agree to buy this land at Watertown.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that I have no earthly desire that the Government shall purchase land it does not need at this arsenal; and if it desires land at Charlestown and can purchase it I am perfectly willing that it shall purchase it. I will say the Government is not dealing with the Commonwealth of Massachusetts or the city of Charlestown or the town of Watertown where this arsenal is, but with private parties; and the Senator from California knows full well how far a Yankee can see a dollar. I suppose he can see it quite as far as a man on the Pacific coast. I have before me the letters to which I have referred, in which the gentleman who is now at the head of this arsenal, Colonel Kingsbury, who is an officer of capacity and character, says this addition to the grounds is necessary for the good of the arsenal; and he further writes that the fire which recently occurred there, owing to the crowded condition of the grounds, was more destructive to the Government property than it would have been had they been in possession of the necessary space. If the Senator has ever been at that arsenal, I am sure he will bear testimony to the fact that the grounds are exceedingly crowded. I care not a farthing about this matter. If it is the interest of the Government to have this land, I want the Government to have it. I care nothing about any parties who want to sell. I am here to take care of the interests of the Government first of all.

Mr. GRIMES. It is true, Mr. President, that the experience of the Government in purchasing land at the Charlestown navy-yard has not been very pleasant, and has not resulted in much advantage to the Government, whatever advantage it may be to the citizens of that place who are adverse to its purchase; but I have not any doubt on one point, and that is that nearly all our arsenals and armories and navy-yards are too small, and that the risk of damage to the public property is greatly enhanced in consequence of their small size, and therefore, upon the recommendation of an intelligent officer as Colonel Kingsbury, I should be prepared to vote for this proposition. If he tells us that we are running a great risk in consequence of fires and from the exposure of the public property, because of its nearness to the depot of powder and niter and other articles that are stored there, I would be willing to accept his recommendation as conclusive upon my mind. It is true we have not got the recommendation of the Secretary of War upon this subject; but the Secretary of War knows no more about it than we do. He acts on the recommendation of the ordnance officer who is in command, and would probably furnish a recommendation, if his attention were called to this letter of Colonel Kingsbury. The Secretary of War was probably never there; he acts upon the recommendation of the officers who have been assigned to these particular stations. I know this officer in charge at Watertown, and I would be prepared to act upon his suggestions as much as upon those of any officer that I know connected with the public service.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The reason why this item was struck out is a reason that applies almost uniformly, except in very special cases, to the action of the Committee on Finance; and that is that if an appropriation is asked for to purchase land, or to do anything else of that sort, it should come through the proper Department that has charge of such matters. This idea of making appropriations on letters written by an officer in command at a particular place has no responsibility about it, is unwise, and may lead to improper appropriations. Consequently we move to strike out such items invariably, and we have acted on that principle in this case. I feel confident, however—and that is the reason why I asked the question—that the member from the district where this arsenal is situated has, since the action of the Committee on Finance, in recommending the striking out of this item, obtained a recommendation from the general in command of the ordnance department, recommending the purchase of this land, and that that is indorsed by the Secretary of War. I am surprised that that paper has not been left with one of the Senators from Massachusetts. I believe it has been sent for, and perhaps if we pass over this amendment, and act on the others, when we come back to it we may find that it is properly vouched. The committee certainly have no objection to this purchase if it is one that ought to be made, and proper evidence is presented on that point. I understand that according to the papers as they now stand it is substantially so; but as it was presented to the committee we did not know the value of it or what ought to be given for the ground, or anything of that description. There ought always in my judgment to be something ascertained in regard to such purchases in the first place, the price demanded, what the land is really worth, and the necessity of the purchase. Perhaps if we pass over this amendment for the present and act on the others we may have some further light on the subject. I do not think it should be adopted till we have the necessary recommendation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The course suggested by the Senator from Maine will be taken. This amendment will be passed over and the next amendment reported by the Committee on Finance will be read.

The next amendment was in line six of section two, to strike out "by" and insert "through;" so as to read:

And all orders and instructions relating to military operations issued by the President or Secretary of War shall be issued through the General of the Army, and, in case of his inability, through the next in rank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "headquarters" in line nine of section two, to insert "except at his own request" so as to read:

The General of the Army shall not be removed, suspended, or relieved from command, or assigned to duty elsewhere than at said headquarters, except at his own request, without the previous approval of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer this amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That section three of the joint resolution relative to the appointments to the Military Academy, approved June 16, 1866, be, and the same is hereby, suspended for one year.

I will simply say that the resolution of last year has not been complied with by the members of Congress generally, and of course it has created confusion. This amendment simply proposes to suspend that provision for one year, in order to see whether hereafter it will have to be repealed or may be allowed to stand. It cannot be executed for the present year owing to the neglect of the members of Congress to comply with it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. I move the following amendment, to come in after line sixty-five of section one:

For the erection of fire-proof buildings at or near Jeffersonville, in the State of Indiana, to be used as storehouses of Government property, $150,000, to be disbursed by the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Indiana whether this amendment comes from a committee.

Mr. LANE. No, sir; it does not come from a committee; but it is recommended by the quartermaster general's department and by the Secretary of War, in the estimate which I have before me. In the annual report of the Secretary of War, after speaking of the erection of fire-proof buildings at Philadelphia, he proceeds to add: "Authority for the purchase of a site and erection of a similar structure at Jeffersonville, Indiana, during the present year is requested;" and I have in my hands an estimate from the quartermaster's department, going into the details as to the number of buildings required, the value of materials, land, &c., making a total of $290,000, which is recommended for the construction of fire-proof storehouses at or near Jeffersonville.

I have another letter from the Quartermaster General, in which he states that there are more than $20,000,000 worth of Government property stored in warehouses and private storehouses and barracks around that place; and it is because of this large amount of property concentrated there that he says a fire-proof building is necessary. If a fire should unfortunately occur there, it would perhaps involve the Government in a loss of $10,000,000. Jeffersonville is now a depot for quartermasters' and commissary and naval stores; and it is precisely the right point where such stores should be accumulated. There are two railroads coming to that place leading North, and the only railroad running South from the Ohio river below Wheeling for a distance of seven hundred miles concentrates there. It is situated in a rich grain-growing country where all the articles required by the commissary and quartermasters' departments are easily obtained and obtained at cheap prices, and from which they may easily be transported to all the West. As I stated, the estimate of the Quartermaster General is $290,000; but my colleague and myself on consultation thought that $150,000 would be all that could be profitably expended at present. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment without any further argument on the subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Has there been any law establishing Jeffersonville as a depot for Army stores?

Mr. LANE. It has been the most important depot, except perhaps St. Louis, during the whole war, for the last six years.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is there a necessity for the continuance of these stores there?

Mr. LANE. I have just undertaken to show the Senate the great necessity for it. There are two railroads there leading North and one South. It is the depot for perhaps the greatest agricultural country in the world, where all these stores are produced in great abundance. The only railroad for a distance of seven hundred miles on the Ohio river leading South is from this point, making it a most desirable place from which the Army can be supplied both by railroad and by river. The Secretary of War, the Quartermaster General, and Commissary General say the Army can be more easily supplied from this point than any other point in the West.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is for the Senate to decide. I know nothing about it except what appears on the statements made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I have had placed in my hands the recommendation of General Dyer, of the ordnance department, approved by the Secretary of War, in regard to the purchase of land at Watertown. General Dyer states that he made a personal examination of the ground when at Watertown arsenal recently, and intended to include in his next report a recommendation for the purchase of this property. He now recommends the appropriation of a sum not exceeding $50,000 for that purpose, and it is approved by the Secretary of War. I desire that the amendment which was passed over may be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the amendment of the Committee on Finance, which was passed over, to strike out the words from line sixty-eight to line seventy-four on page 4.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move to amend that clause by inserting after the word "dollars," in line seventy, the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I offer this amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the officers of the Army and Navy, and of the Freedmen's Bureau, to prohibit and prevent whipping or maiming of the person, as a punishment for any criminal misdemeanor or offense by any pretended civil authority in any State lately in rebellion, until the civil Government of such State shall have been restored and shall have been recognized by the Congress of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be authorized to appoint for each geographical division and department headquarters of the Army one clerk of class one.

I will say that it has been several times recommended that we should have clerks appointed at the department headquarters, and the Committee on Military Affairs at the last session reported a bill for that purpose, which has never been acted upon. The papers in the case have been placed in my hands by the War Department, covering a letter of General Sherman pressing the matter very strongly. The desire is to have two clerks at each of these headquarters; but I think one ought to be sufficient with such help as can be obtained from the soldiers. In some localities it is very difficult to get soldiers to do this class of work in a satisfactory manner. The proposition is to appoint one clerk of class one for each geographical division and department headquarters.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to know whether officers in command of geographical divisions who have large staffs cannot dispose of their papers by the aid of their staffs and such soldiers as they can detail for that purpose. It seems to me unwise to appoint civil officers for that purpose. This proposition is a new thing at any rate, and I should like to have the necessity for it explained. Why is it that these commanders are not able, by the employment of the officers of their staffs and such soldiers as they may detail, to take care of their papers as has hitherto been done? I believe there are no clerks at the headquarters here. Everything is done in this city at the headquarters of the General of the Army by his military suite, and I should think the same might be done at the headquarters of the different geographical divisions. This is an innovation, and I doubt whether it is wise to begin it. We shall have bureaus growing up after awhile I suppose.

Mr. WILSON. I have in my hand a letter from General Townsend, and one from General Sherman, urging this matter, and I present it in accordance with their request. We have had a great number of letters in which this is suggested as a matter of public importance. I have for a long time resisted it on the ground that I thought they might get along without it. I now present it to the Senate, and leave it to them to determine by their votes.

Mr. SHERMAN. These headquarters never have any soldiers about them now. For instance, at St. Louis there are no soldiers to be detailed, and it is difficult to get soldiers competent to act as clerks. So it is with the headquarters at Omaha. The soldiers are not there. The soldiers are off at remote posts. That is one reason which applies now which would not exist for this measure in time of war. Whether it is a sufficient reason, the Senate will judge.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think soldiers can be detailed now just as readily as at other times.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Where are the staff officers?

Mr. SHERMAN. The staff has been very much limited by the law as it stands. I think of the staff officers now one is adjutant general and the other is inspector general.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They all have aid-de-camps.

Mr. SHERMAN. One or two aids; and their duty, I believe, is generally to wait on the table. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESSENDEN. They might give some of their time to taking care of the papers.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I offer this amendment as an additional section; it was presented in a separate bill by the Committee on Military Affairs, but was not acted upon in that shape:

And be it further enacted, That all militia forces now organized or in service in either of the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas, be forthwith disbanded and disbanded, and that the further organization, arming, or calling into service of the said militia forces, or any part thereof, is hereby prohibited under any circumstances whatever until the same shall be authorized by Congress.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear an explanation of that from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. Why should it be put on this bill?

Mr. WILSON. The Committee on Military Affairs a year ago reported this provision in another bill; it has been again reported this year, but has not been acted upon in that shape. The object is to suppress and prevent military organizations in the rebel States. They have been arrested in several instances by officers of the Army without authority of law, on their own responsibility. General Sickles told me the other day that he had prevented the organization of a large number of regiments. In Mississippi and some other places they have been organized, and in some cases have worn the rebel uniform and even have carried the rebel flag. Great abuses have grown out of it, and in that country under present circumstances, our Army being there, and especially after the law we have recently passed, there should be no military organization allowed until matters are settled. Those that have been formed were formed mainly of men who were in the rebel service; officered by rebels, and in some localities they have been used to disarm portions of the people and have led to difficulties. We have had quite a number of letters and reports on the subject from officers of the Army.

Mr. WILLEY. It seems to me that it is a very sweeping provision, and which can only be justified I imagine by some very pressing public urgency or necessity, to deprive these States of the use of their militia for the purpose of maintaining their police regulations in many places. The disability, as I understand the amendment, is total; the whole militia organizations of these States is to be entirely destroyed; the militia of the States are not to bear arms in any event or under any condition. It strikes me that it is assuming to Congress a very extraordinary power, one which none but the most extreme necessity would justify. It may be well imagined that there may be many instances when it would be necessary, for the best of purposes, to keep the peace of the State, to maintain proper police regulations, that the militia should at least carry arms to a limited extent. It strikes me also that there may be some constitutional objection against depriving men of the right to bear arms and the total disarming of men in time of peace. I did not fully hear the Senator when he was making his remarks in explanation of the necessity of any such measure. There may be such necessity. If he have the evidence of it in his possession, of course when the Senate shall hear it it may be proper to reconsider the inclination to which my mind is directed at present; but without some such public necessity for so extraordinary a measure being shown I shall be very unwilling to adopt an amendment of this character.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that according to our theory, according to the ground on which Congress is acting with regard to these States, they have no right to organize any militia there at present. The militia there were disbanded and disorganized, and this organization which I now seek to put a stop to was got up after the war. When the first attempt at military organization there was made, General Slocum, commanding the department of the Mississippi, issued an order forbidding it as dangerous to the country; but that order was afterward arrested by the action of the President. Many of these organizations exist, officered by rebels and wearing the rebel uniform, and they go up and down the country taking arms away from men who own arms, and committing outrages of various kinds; and in one county they have threatened to drive out of that county every emancipated man. Indeed, the Governor of Mississippi has had to use his influence to prevent outrages. In North Carolina and South Carolina and other quarters attempts have been made to organize militia. General Sickles told me the other day that he believed he had prevented the organization of forty or fifty regiments in his department, and in doing as he did he acted without authority of law and without direction of the President; but he regarded it as the most fatal thing that could be done to permit any of these rebel organizations to be formed. This provision will not interfere with the enforcement of proper police regulations, but it prevents armed rebel organizations in any of these States until matters are settled; then these States will be at liberty to organize their militia as the other States do. I am surprised that anybody could be in favor of allowing for one moment an armed organization of militia forces in these States, completely as they are in the hands of rebels. These organizations, I say again, are completely rebel, not only in the men who compose them, but in the spirit which animates them, and I think they should not be permitted. The public safety requires that they should not be at present. When matters are settled and these States are again represented here they can form their militia organizations as the other States do.

Mr. WILLEY. Certainly, Mr. President; I am not the advocate of any armed rebel organizations in these States; nor would I favor any measure that would cherish or encourage any such organizations, nor by any voice of mine obstruct or defeat legislation that might prevent organizations of that character; but I understand the effect of this amendment to go further than that; to prevent all kinds of organizations of the militia. We may very well imagine that the loyal militia of the southern States may be needed under certain contingencies to put down these rebel organizations. It might be an efficient instrumentality, under proper management and jurisdiction, to accomplish that object. As I understand the purport of this amendment, it takes the right to bear arms away from every citizen of the southern States, loyal and disloyal, deprives even the loyal men in the southern States of the aid of loyal militia organizations for the purpose of maintaining the public peace. I should be very willing to favor discriminating legislation that would regulate the use of arms by the militia in the South; but a sweeping enactment of the character that I understand this to be does not meet my approbation as at present advised.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It seems to me this proposition ought not to be moved to an appropriation bill, at a time, too, when the Senate is very thin. I think of scarcely any measure of greater importance than the one now proposed. I did not expect it, and I think a good many other Senators were not expecting any general legislation on this bill. I observe that many seats are empty at this hour. I am not able to see how the proposition can be adopted by the Senate, in view of the second article of the Amendments to the Constitution, which declares, "a well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." If this infringes the right of the people to bear arms we have no authority to adopt it. This provision does not relate to States alone; it relates to people, wherever they may be under the jurisdiction of the United States. Of course in time of war people bearing arms in hostility to the Government would not be protected by this provision of the Constitution; but when there is no war, in a time of peace, certainly the provision of the Constitution applies now, if it ever does. I suggest to the Senator who has offered this section that it ought to be presented as a distinct and separate bill, so that it can receive proper consideration, and it should not be brought in by way of amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. WILSON. It was reported the other day in an Army bill, and the Senator from Indiana had it stricken off, and I had to yield to him because we had not a quorum present and I could not call for a division. I do not propose to yield now; I do not mean that rebels shall be armed; and I intend to adhere to this amendment and submit the question to a vote of the Senate. I have had to yield the principle of the amendment several times before. I am surprised that anybody here should advocate the arming of rebels, for it is nothing more and nothing less. All our military men in that country are opposed to it. There is but one voice from them. General Slocum put his hand on the first attempt that was made; General Sickles has done the same thing; and other generals have done it.

I am willing, however, to modify the amendment by striking out the word "disarmed." Then it will provide simply for disbanding these organizations. The militia organizations organized in these States are not in unison with the country; they are hostile to it; and therefore I propose to disband them until matters are settled.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator did omit from a bill the other evening at my suggestion a proposition something like this; and I believe that the propriety of striking that provision from that bill was appreciated by every Senator in the body. That was a bill to increase the pay of the officers of the Army, and I think the Senator had dragged into that bill every loose piece of legislation that was floating about Congress, certainly everything that struck his own imagination, and this among the rest. He started out with a bill of many sections, an omnibus concern, where one matter would carry another through, and closed with a bill of but few sections. I thought the Senator did very right in striking out this provision from that bill at that time, and I think he would do very right in dropping it from this bill at this time. I think the chairman of the Committee on Finance will agree that it is not a safe system of legislating to incorporate general principles of legislation in appropriation bills. Appropriation bills ought to come in and go out as clean, naked appropriations according to law. But legislating in regard to a policy to be adopted by the Government in an appropriation bill is never, in my judgment, except in very rare cases, advisable. I do not intend to discuss the question further. I think it is unsafe.

Mr. WILLEY. The amendment as modified is very much more acceptable to me than it was originally. The idea, by a sweeping enactment attached to an appropriation bill, of disarming the whole people of the South seemed to me to be so directly in the face of the Constitution itself, as to strike me somewhat strange. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, whether he cannot still further modify his amendment so as not to prevent the loyal portion of the militia of the South being employed when necessary for domestic peace and protection. His amendment, as I understand it, without authority given hereafter by Congress, would prevent the employment of any portion of the militia of the South for any purpose whatever, or at least the arming and employing them as such. It would deprive the United States of the benefit of the loyal militia in the South until further legislation on the part of Congress. It would deprive the officers in command of the forces of the United States in the South of the opportunity of calling to their aid the loyal militia of the South to aid them in executing the laws and maintaining order. It strikes me it ought to be modified so as not to deprive the country of the benefit of the services of men into whose hands it would not be dangerous to place arms.

Mr. WILSON. I do not suppose there is a regiment or company of loyal militia in these States. I think they all ought to be disbanded, and none of them permitted to exist until matters are settled, because they cannot be any support to the country in the present condition of things. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LANE. This measure was well considered and well matured by the Military Committee. They had no doubt whatever as to the propriety and necessity of the proposed legislation. In many of the southern States companies of rebel soldiers have been, and are being armed, and we suppose that they are dangerous to the public peace and to the security of Union citizens in those States. I can see no possible propriety in sending a regular force there to keep the peace and keep these people in subjection, and at the same time arm them and authorize them to organize a local militia in these States until their status and condition is established by Congress, until we have the certainty that they are loyal and will fight for instead of against the Government.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I shall be obliged to vote against this amendment, simply for the reason that I am opposed to general legislation on appropriation bills. As to the provision itself on its merits I am in favor of it, and in the proper place I should vote for it without any hesitation.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 23, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Fogg, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Howe, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ross, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Dixon, Fessenden, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Norton, Patterson, Riddle, Sherman, Van Winkle, and Willey—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Cowan, Cragin, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Howard, Kirkwood, McDougall, Nesmith, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Williams—18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I offer this amendment to come in after line seventy-four of section one:

To enable the Secretary of War to pay the expense of making a complete survey of a national park in Washington, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate passed on the 18th day of July, 1866, $2,500.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is that in pursuance of law? A resolution of the Senate does not authorize such an amendment.

Mr. POLAND. On the 18th of July last a resolution passed the Senate authorizing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds "to employ a practical landscape gardener or topographical engineer to examine the different tracts of land offered to the committee" for the purpose of a park, "who shall report to the committee in December next." The committee applied to the War Department, and a topographical engineer was detailed to make a survey and make the maps. I have a communication from the War Department showing the amount of expense incurred. The bill which has been passed by the Senate at this session was founded upon that survey, and this amendment is to pay the expense of the survey which has already been made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have that communication read.

Mr. POLAND. I have a letter from General Michler, who made the survey, and also from General Humphreys, chief of Engineers. I send them both to the desk to be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

ENGINEER'S OFFICES,
G AND TWENTY-SECOND STREETS,
WASHINGTON, February 4, 1867.

SIR: In reply to my communication of July 31, 1866, informing you that I had been detailed to make the necessary examinations and surveys for the location of a park and site for a Presidential Mansion, and to prepare the necessary maps for the same, and also inquiring whether any appropriation had been made to meet the expenses of employing surveyors, draftsmen, chainmen, and for other necessary purposes, you were pleased to say that "the resolution of the Senate to have the work done, and the instructions of the committee, is ample guarantee that whatever expense is involved will be appropriated for on the meeting of Congress." I accordingly submitted, with your letter, an estimate to the honorable Secretary of War, and requested that the necessary funds be furnished me for conducting the survey. The matter was referred to the President in Cabinet, and the papers were returned with the following indorsement by the Secretary: "referred to the chief of Engineers. By order of the President, the necessary expenditure for the surveys made under the direction of the congressional committee will be paid by the chief of Engineers out of appropriations for that bureau."

A communication from the chief of Engineers, dated October 27, 1866, a copy of which I beg leave to submit for your consideration, was accordingly addressed to me. The amount of my estimate was $2,185 20, and of this amount $2,000 has been furnished upon my requisition from the appropriation for "surveys for military defenses." It will be seen by my instructions that I am directed to refund to that appropriation the amount expended when the congressional committee shall have provided the means of carrying into effect the provisions of the resolution of the Senate. To enable me to do so, and as I still require the balance of my estimate to meet expenses already incurred, and an additional sum of a few hundred dollars to complete the more accurate maps already far advanced in course of preparation, I would respectfully request that an appropriation of $2,500 be asked of Congress to cover the disbursements made under the orders of your honorable committee.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
N. MICHLER,
Major of Engineers, Brevet Brigadier General,
United States Army.
Hon. B. GRATZ BROWN, Chairman Committee of Public Buildings and Grounds, United States Senate.

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, October 27, 1866.

GENERAL: Under the verbal orders of the chief of Engineers, with the consent of the General-in-Chief, approved by the Secretary of War, you were on the 28th of July last (in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the United States of the 18th of the same month) directed to select a tract of land for a park and site for a Presidential Mansion.

The Secretary of War, by order of the President of the United States, under date of October 25, 1866, directs that "the necessary expenditures for the surveys made under the direction of the congressional committee will be paid by the chief of Engineers, out of appropriations for that bureau." Accordingly in the performance of this duty, the hire of the requisite assistants and laborers, as well as the necessary expenditures incident to the surveys are authorized; and funds to the amount of your estimate for the purpose, namely, $2,185 20, accompanying the orders of the Secretary of War, will be remitted to you upon your requisition, as they may be needed from the appropriation for surveys for military defenses," &c.

The amount so expended will be refunded to the above appropriation when the congressional committee shall have provided the means for carrying into effect the provisions of the resolution of the Senate above referred to.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
A. H. HUMPHREYS,
Chief of Engineers, Brigadier and Brevet Major General United States Army.
Brevet Brigadier General N. MICHLER, United States Army, Major of Engineers, Washington, D. C.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does the amendment come from any committee?

Mr. POLAND. Yes, sir. I offer it by direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to offer an amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Paymaster General be authorized to pay under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, in addition to the amount received by them, for the traveling expenses of such California volunteers as were discharged at points distant from the place or places of rendezvous, such proportionate sums according to the distance traveled as have been paid to the troops of other States similarly situated; and such amount as shall be necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

This is intended to reach some cases of peculiar hardship. The California volunteers—

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is the amendment recommended by any committee?

Mr. CONNESS. It is not.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I raise the point of order on it. I am obliged to do so.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator says he is obliged to raise the point of order on this amendment. I do not know that he is. I think if the Senator would listen to the statement I was about to make he would see the propriety of the amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator knows very well that, whatever the statement may be, I have inquired in regard to every amendment offered that made an appropriation of money if it came from a committee, and if not, whether it was recommended by a Department. If that is not the case, I am obliged by my duty as chairman of the Finance Committee to object.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I shall ask that the Senate lay this bill over till to-morrow, and in the mean time I shall submit this proposition to the Committee on Military Affairs, whose indorsement I have no fear of being able to obtain, for it relates to a case of peculiar hardship. I was not going to occupy much of the time of the Senate in stating it. I was going to say that some California volunteers, discharged contrary to their wishes, and some discharged by their assent, in New Mexico, were furnished the sum of eighty dollars in legal-tender notes, to pay their traveling expenses to San Francisco, Sacramento, and other places in California where they were enlisted. I may say that I myself have furnished many of these men with the means of supplying their necessities; I was called upon only this day by one of them. I have a large amount of papers from the War Department here relating to this case. Provision has been made for the payment of Michigan and other volunteers who were discharged in the Territory of Utah distant from the place of their enlistment, giving them reasonable compensation, as much as would pay the expenses of their travel; while our volunteers are unprovided for who to some extent were discharged and had to travel, many of them on foot, unable to provide animals, through the deserts and burning sands of New Mexico and Arizona, and finally, after they succeeded in reaching the populated districts, begging their way to the point where they enlisted.

I do not wish to detain the Senate; I do not wish to paint a case that involves more than the real facts. It is simply asking that these soldiers be paid the same compensation that has been paid to troops of other States, in proportion to the distance they traveled from the point at which they were discharged to the point at which they enlisted. I know if I should ask the Senate to lay this bill over until to-morrow it would be making a serious request; but I shall nevertheless do it, because it did not occur to me that there would be an objection to this proposition. I know the necessity of the rule which the honorable Senator from Maine invokes, which is to keep old claims and cases not well considered off appropriation bills, and of course I approve of the rule; but it appeared to me that this was a case so clearly just that it would commend itself even to the unanimous approbation of the Senate. I hope the Senator will allow it to be tested by the Senate, and not impose upon me the disagreeable duty of asking to lay this bill over until to-morrow. If so, I shall do it, and ask the Committee on Military Affairs to consider the proposition. We are not here to ask for any favors on behalf of California volunteers for any excess of compensation of any kind for them; but I do not believe there is a Senator here who will refuse to give them the fair amount of compensation allowed to troops from other States. These men, every man of them, entered the service with the determination and with the promise that they would be led into the field. They had service of a most onerous character during the entire war, and better troops never stepped than they were. The duties to which they were appointed were always performed without faltering, and they always had the approbation of their immediate commanders as well as that of the War Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The Senator from California moves that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. CONNESS. I first ask the Senate to give the amendment the unanimous consideration to which I feel that it is entitled.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can only raise the point of order, and the Chair must do with it what it sees fit.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Chair will submit the point to the Senate I shall be satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment does not come within the rule, but it is in the power of the Senate to receive it if they shall so determine. The Chair will take the sense of the Senate on that question. Senators who are in favor of receiving this amendment, though not within the rule of the Senate, will indicate it—

Mr. SHERMAN. I beg leave to take a point of order on the Chair. If that practice is once commenced here and followed, it will be the end of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has a right under the rule to submit any point of order to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Chair has already stated that this amendment clearly comes within the exclusion of the rule, and therefore the only question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? On that point there cannot be a particle of doubt?

Mr. CONNESS. I did not understand the Chair to make any decision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair said it was clearly not within the rule of the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. I did not understand the Chair to make any such decision; but I should think the honorable Senator from Ohio would have no objection to submitting this matter to the sense of the Senate, and if it is not the clear sense of the Senate to accept the amendment I shall not press it, but shall ask that the bill be laid over until to-morrow.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suggest to the Senator from California that he do not arrest the progress of the bill at present. There are other amendments in all probability that will be offered.

Mr. CONNESS. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I did not rise to offer this amendment until the Chair was about proceeding to transfer the bill from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate. If there be other amendments to be offered, I have no objection to this being laid over; but I cannot see, as I before stated, why the Senate may not have this question submitted to them. I think they will receive the amendment with unanimity, and thus the matter will be settled.

Mr. HENDERSON. After the bill has been reported to the Senate it will still be subject to amendment, and I suggest to the Senator that after the bill has been further considered and other amendments submitted and disposed of he can then make his motion, and I shall be disposed to vote with him; but I am not disposed to arrest the progress of the bill just at this moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair is called upon to decide under the rule, he, of course, decides that the amendment of the Senator from California is not in order according to the rule.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I will withdraw the amendment at the present time; but when the bill comes into the Senate I shall ask that it be laid over until to-morrow.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have all the other amendments that are to be offered acted upon before a motion of that kind is made.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I offer this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the principal assistant to the Paymaster General United States Army shall receive the same compensation allowed by law to the Assistant Paymasters General United States Army, from the 15th day of May, 1865, at which time he was specially assigned as such principal assistant by the Secretary of War; and a sum sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

This amendment is to conform the pay of the principal assistant in the Paymaster General's department to the other departments.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does it come from a committee?

Mr. SPRAGUE. No, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I must make the point of order on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule of the Senate, an amendment of this kind must either come from a committee or be recommended by the head of a Department.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Is not this amendment in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have the rule read to the Senate.

The Secretary read the 30th Rule, as follows:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a stipulation."

Mr. SPRAGUE. This proposition is recommended by the paymaster's department of the Army, and it also has the sanction of the Secretary of War. It failed in the other House from an informality in the wording of the amendment there. General SCHENCK favors it, and is anxious that it should pass. It is in favor of a very worthy officer, and it is simply to make his position conform to that of officers of corresponding rank in the Army. Similar provisions have been made in other cases, and I trust this proposition will be allowed to go upon this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator's statement does not bring it within the rule.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I modify the amendment by striking out the last clause making an appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It strikes me that it is not exactly in order to be increasing salaries and giving back pay, going back to 1865, on this bill. It is substantially the same thing as it was in the appropriating clause that was stricken out. I ask to have the 30th Rule read again.

The Secretary read the rule.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The amendment does not propose an appropriation, but it leads to an appropriation, and it is a pretty keen sort of dodge. It is not strictly an appropriation, but it necessarily involves an appropriation, and I should like to know the opinion of the Chair upon that point, whether it is or is not admissible under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it increases the compensation of an officer and involves an appropriation; but as it does not make an appropriation it is not strictly within the exclusion of the rule.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I ask whether it is not a private claim? It provides for additional compensation to an individual for services heretofore rendered.

Mr. SPRAGUE. This is a public officer, performing the duties of this position.

Mr. POLAND. I understand that this measure is indorsed by the Paymaster General and the Secretary of War. I should like to have their indorsements of this application read.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Paymaster General is not the head of a department within the rule. I do not hear of any recommendation by the Secretary of War; but if so, I should like to see it.

Mr. POLAND. I understand that this application is indorsed by both the Paymaster General and the Secretary of War.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But I should like to know that fact, and in what way it is indorsed; whether it comes in the shape of a recommendation from the head of a Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If this amendment is to pay for services performed in the past it is in the nature of a private claim, and cannot be received under the rule.

Mr. CONNESS. I am now authorized to offer, with the approbation of the Committee on Military Affairs, the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Paymaster General be authorized to pay, under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, in addition to the amount received by them for the traveling expenses of such California volunteers as were discharged in New Mexico and Utah and at points distant from the place or places of enlistment, such proportionate sums, according to the distance traveled, as have been paid to the troops of other States similarly situated; and such amount as shall be necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand now that that comes from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from California accept an amendment including Nevada? Some volunteers went from that State to Utah and were discharged there under the same circumstances.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will not press that at the present time.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to amend the bill by striking out the second section, and ask that that section be read as it now stands.

The Secretary read the section, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the headquarters of the General of the Army of the United States shall be at the city of Washington, and all orders and instructions relating to military operations issued by the President or Secretary of War shall be issued through the General of the Army, and, in case of his inability, through the next in rank. The General of the Army shall not be removed, suspended, or relieved from command, or assigned to duty elsewhere than at said headquarters, except at his own request, without the previous approval of the Senate; and any orders or instructions relating to military operations issued contrary to the requirements of this section shall be null and void; and any officer who shall issue orders or instructions contrary to the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office; and any officer of the Army who shall transmit, convey, or obey any orders or instructions so issued contrary to the provisions of this section, knowing that such orders were so issued, shall be liable to imprisonment for not less than two nor more than twenty years, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. JOHNSON. At this period of the session, when it is very important that all these bills should pass in some shape, it would be very improper in me to take up the time of the Senate by anything like a discussion. I shall content myself, therefore, with saying that it seems to me perfectly obvious that that section is in direct conflict with the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution, in express terms, not content with placing the entire executive power of the nation in the executive department of the Government and in the President of the United States as the head of that department, provides that he shall be the Commander-in-Chief of the Army. And this section says, although in the absence of such a provision General Grant would be under the control of the President as the constitutional Commander-in-Chief, his station shall be here though that commander may think it should be elsewhere. And it goes on further and says that no orders shall be issued of a military character except in accordance with the provisions of this bill; and proposes to punish any officer of the Government who may dare in the face of Congress to obey a military order coming from the constitutional Commander-in-Chief.

As I said, I rose with no purpose of discussing the propriety of the section, and shall content myself with stating that, in my judgment, it is a clean and palpable infraction of the Constitution of the United States; and upon the vote I shall call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McDUGALL. I desire to say that I altogether agree with the Senator from Maryland, that this provision is in direct violation of the Constitution of the United States, and cannot be made law here. The virtue of the Executive is to be extracted and to be eliminated and to be exproduced, so that he shall have no power at all over the Army of the United States or its General. We have now in command of the armies a General who is subordinate by the Constitution to him, who by the Constitution is denominated Commander-in-Chief of the armies and navies of the United States. This thing of trifling with great constitutional principles may seem well to some; it may be within the range of the capacity of Senators to feel well when they undertake to usurp authority forbidden by the Constitution of the United States; but it is not so with me. I do not care to elaborate an argument on this subject, because every intelligent Senator who has a right to vote upon this floor ought to know that this is a gross attempt at a violation of the Constitution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The propriety of this provision is one thing; no question upon that point has been raised by the Senators who have spoken. They have, however, given very positive opinions, and contented themselves with their expression, that this is an unconstitutional provision, and one of them says it is so palpably so that no Senator of any intelligence can fail to perceive it. Now, sir, I confess myself to be one of those Senators having some small degree of intelligence—I do not claim a great deal—who do not perceive the force of the constitutional objection. I think the provision is clearly constitutional. The mistake that arises in reference to this matter is in not recognizing the fact that in this country the sovereign power is in the hands of the people, and that the people exercise that sovereign power through Congress, the Senators and Representatives. The President is by the Constitution the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy. That is a very distinct position from his position as President of the United States. He is made by the provisions of the Constitution Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy. That is a provision which fixes his rank. If we have an Army, the Constitution says he shall be the Commander-in-Chief of it. If we have a Navy, the Constitution says he shall be its Commander-in-Chief. But while the Constitution fixes the rank of the President of the United States as a military and naval officer, it keeps within the control of the people of the United States, represented in Congress, the power to raise armies and to create a navy and the power to pass rules and regulations for the government of the land and naval forces. That power is reserved in the hands of the people, to be exercised through the Congress of the United States. Now, sir, I hold that, although the President is Commander-in-Chief as a matter of military rank, yet what armies shall be raised, where they shall go, where they shall be disbanded, what they shall do, and what all their officers shall do, are matters to be regulated by the sovereign power; and that sovereign power is to be exercised precisely as sovereign power is exercised in any case. The commander-in-chief of the army of Russia, I take it, would be subject to the power of the Emperor. The Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States is subject to the power of the people, to be exercised by Congress; and I deny that because his military rank is fixed as Commander-in-Chief by the Constitution the people may not through their Congress pass all such rules and regulations with regard to the exercise of military power as they see fit, and devolve that power upon any military officer. They cannot, perhaps, authorize an officer to command the Commander-in-Chief, but they can direct any officer what to do. That I hold very distinctly is the power of the people; and gentlemen mistake when they suppose that because the President as a matter of military rank is head of the Army it is out of the power of Congress to say what that head of the Army shall do, or shall not do.

This provision is founded upon that simple principle, nothing more nor less. It makes a rule with regard to the Army which it has a right to make, that the headquarters of a particular officer shall be at a particular place; that he shall stay in that place, and that he shall not be removed from it. And it has a right, moreover, to say that all orders shall pass through him as General. That is a rule and regulation which the people of the United States have a right to prescribe, and which they here propose to prescribe; and they have a right to say that any person violating that rule shall be subjected to the punishment that they choose to inflict and designate. That is all that is done here.

Therefore, on this plain and simple principle, which I take this opportunity to enunciate as my opinion in opposition to the opinion of the honorable Senator from Maryland, this provision is no violation of the Constitution. It is merely an exercise of the right which the people are at perfect liberty, as the sovereign power of this country, to exercise and declare just as they see fit. Nothing more is done here.

Mr. McDUGALL. There is a slight difference between "rank," as the Senator from Maine chooses to use the term, and "authority." The President of the United States is clothed both with rank and with authority. They are given to him by virtue of the very terms of the Constitution. The question of rank which the Senator raises as adverse to the question of authority is a mere desertion of the logic of the truth. There is the authority conferred upon the President of the United States to command the Army and the Navy. It is not mere rank. He has rank with his authority. The Senator uses the term very ingeniously, well calculated to deceive simple men, not fit language to inform men who have to do with legislation. "Rank." Generally a rank involves authority; and when authority and rank go together who has the right to dispute in the orders of government? I understand this cunning device, and I think it will be well understood by the people of this country. It is but a cunning device.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I stated before, I have no idea of embarking in a discussion on this bill, and I would not have risen again but for the few remarks accompanying the opinion which he so positively expressed, which fell from the honorable member from Maine. I understood the honorable member to place the constitutionality of this measure upon the ground that the people are sovereign—

Mr. FESSENDEN. And they have distinctly retained that sovereignty over the Army.

Mr. JOHNSON. And that the legislative department of the Government is the department in which that absolute sovereignty of the people is placed. In one sense the people are sovereign. They can, in a constitutional mode, change their political institutions from time to time, but in the exercise of their sovereignty it is for them to decide how in any particular constitution that sovereignty shall be exercised, and they have delegated such portion of it as they thought proper to delegate to each of the three departments of the Government; and the question, therefore, to be decided is, what is the construction to be placed upon the departments to which respectively is confided the legislative and executive powers of the Government? I understand the honorable member virtually as saying that it would be in the power of the Congress of the United States to conduct a military campaign in time of war, to provide by legislation where the fleets of the United States are to go, to send commissioners to head the armies, as was done by France during the Revolution, and to control the military officers in command. Our Constitution, in my judgment, takes an entirely different view. It intrusts, and intrusts only, to Congress the particular legislative powers which it confers. It intrusts the whole executive power of the Government to the President of the United States; and not satisfied with that, even consulting the Constitution by itself, and more especially calling to our assistance the deliberations of the Convention by which the Constitution was formed, it provided, for the very purpose of escaping from the interference of Congress in the management of the armies of the United States, as far as the command was concerned, a provision that the President of the United States should be, not with the permission, but against the permission of Congress, the Commander-in-Chief. Now, says the Senator, that is true; you cannot by law say that he may not be the Commander-in-Chief, but you can by law take from him the right to command.

The Constitution says that the President shall be the superior of any military officer appointed under the authority of Congress. The honorable member from Maine maintains that although that is done it is in the power of Congress to say that, notwithstanding by the Constitution he is the Commander-in-Chief, the actual command shall be devolved upon a man of our appointment, and that upon the ground that the people of the United States are sovereign. In my judgment—and I speak it with the very sincere respect in which I hold the opinion of the honorable member from Maine—it is a constitutional heresy, which in the end will not for a moment bear the support of the people. It has it now, if it shall have it at all, only in the relation which unhappily is supposed to exist, and does exist, as between the Commander-in-Chief of the Army under the Constitution and the Congress of the United States. Who for a moment would believe that if the late lamented President had remained at the head of the Government, or if any other man was at the head of the Government having the confidence of the Congress of the United States, a law of this sort would be passed? Such a law has never been suggested in any antecedent part of the history of the Government, and now it is for the first time introduced, as I think, because of the supposed exigencies in which the majority of Congress may think the country is placed owing to their apparent want of confidence in the constitutional Commander-in-Chief.

Suppose the President of the United States should be satisfied that the presence of General Grant was necessary in the case of an invasion or an outbreak again in some other place than Washington, and he should order him there, and he should say "No, I will not go," could not the President go himself? No; because it goes on to say that no military officer of the Government shall at any time obey any order issued by the President of the United States or by any other authority which stands in conflict with the provisions of this bill. The right, therefore, to command the military commander, who stands first in point of rank under him, is denied; and the right practically to take himself the command is denied, because he is unable to get the officers, without whom his right of command is entirely useless and nugatory.

Mr. President, to depart from the Constitution under any circumstances is hazardous. I said during the existence of the rebellion, and I repeat it now, that if I had been the President of the United States I would have often done acts which the Constitution of the United States would not have authorized, if, in my judgment, I believed they were necessary to maintain the integrity of the Government; and one of the reasons by which I was guided in casting a vote which I cast the other day, for which I have been much censured, and which I shall again cast if the subject shall be brought before us, was because I considered the country as now brought into a revolutionary condition, and I will do anything and everything which I believe promises an escape from that condition and a return to the condition in which the Constitution contemplates we should forever remain. But that is not necessary now. General Grant, it is not to be supposed for a moment, would be ordered by the President of the United States to go elsewhere and establish elsewhere his headquarters, unless, in the judgment of the President, it should be absolutely necessary to the interest of the Government; and whether he is here or elsewhere is not a fact in which the safety of the Government can be involved. I have so much confidence in that military officer that I am satisfied he would rather be as he is, under the command of the President, than be placed in a situation in which it would be his privilege to say to him: "I obey no order that you may give me unless I myself approve it."

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Maryland, with all his learning and astuteness, has fallen into a very common error, and that is, to suppose that there is no distinction between the President of the United States as such and the President as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy. They are two very entirely distinct things. They are connected just so far as this: that he who is one must necessarily be the other, by the Constitution; but they are different offices, having different relations to the Government and to the Constitution itself. The President of the United States is the executive officer; that is, he must execute all laws passed by the Congress of the United States. That is true. He has the executive power. That has relation to his civil duties, and not to his military duties any further than those military duties are directed by the laws of the United States. But as General-in-Chief of the Army he is a mere military officer. According to the natural inference from the honorable Senator's remarks, he has absolute power to do as he pleases with our armies because he is Commander-in-Chief; when we have raised an Army and get it into the field, we have no further power over it, cannot direct its operations in any way, cannot direct against whom its operations shall be carried, and cannot make any rules which regulate it in actual service! Why, sir, if that doctrine be true, we are at the pleasure of a military despot at any time who may happen to be Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States.

That is not the theory of the Constitution, let me tell the Senator. The Constitution merely assigns to him his military rank at the head of the Army and at the head of the Navy; and he has all the powers belonging to that rank except so far as they may be limited by the laws passed by the people of the United States through their representatives. We can just as well control the President as Commander-in-Chief as we can control any one of his subordinates. The people of this country did not give themselves into the hands of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army. They said who should be the Commander-in-Chief; but what the Commander-in-Chief should do and what he should not do are totally different questions, and questions over which the people of the United States kept their own control, and I hope to God they always will keep it.

I am not attempting to discuss the merits of this proposition, nor the taste of it. That is a different thing. The House of Representatives passed it, and the Finance Committee have submitted it to the Senate upon questions of its propriety in every sense. But when the Senator gets up here and says so positively that when I, as chairman of the Committee on Finance reported this, I was giving my assent to what no sensible man could consider a constitutional provision, substantially—

Mr. JOHNSON. I said no such thing.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the plain inference—then I feel bound to defend my own position and to say that I do not agree with the honorable Senator that the thing is so palpable as he seems to suppose. Why, sir, suppose we pass—there is no question that we can pass—rules and regulations for the government of the Army. Suppose the President should direct an officer to violate a rule and regulation; could the officer excuse himself on the ground that he was ordered by the Commander-in-Chief to violate it? That may be submitted to in time of war, and it may do in some services in some countries under mere military regulations, but it will not do here, and it ought not to do here.

The people of this country, as I said before, retained this power in their own hands. I hold just precisely as I stated before, that when we raise an army we may disband it at any moment. We have the power to declare war; that is kept in our own hands; and consequently to say when that war shall cease. Suppose that we direct that an army which is operating against an enemy shall be withdrawn at once, and the Commander-in-Chief says, "No, I command this army," pray, who is to be obeyed, the people of the United States through Congress who may make rules and regulations, or the President of the United States simply because he is the Commander-in-Chief in the field? Such doctrines will not do, sir. They lead to nothing but despotism; and it is our duty to defend the first approaches and see that we retain the power which the people intrusted to us.

Mr. SUMNER. I hesitate to add a single word to what has been so clearly and conclusively stated by the Senator from Maine; but the Senator from Maryland I know is not insensible to professional authority, and perhaps I could not mention any name that would receive from him more respect than that of the late Chancellor Kent of New York. He knows well how carefully and studiously he considered all the questions of constitutional law when he was called upon to prepare his Commentaries, originally given, as we know, in lectures to his students. He meets this very question, and in sententious words disposes of it. He did it, too, in the later years of his life, in a note to the very last edition of his Commentaries shortly before his death. I will read his precise words:

"Though the Constitution vests the executive power in the President and declares him Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, these powers must necessarily be subordinate to the legislative power in Congress."

Now, sir, I submit that if this question is to be decided by authority, there can be but one answer.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I understood the argument in favor of the present section to be put upon the ground that the people of the United States are sovereign and can do what they please, and that the Congress of the United States represents them, and that therefore Congress can enact this provision. This is a very compendious, all-absorbing argument; and it will be only necessary to apply it in any case in order to give us full authority and warrant for doing whatsoever our wishes, our interests, or our passions may dictate.

I agree that the people of the United States are sovereign. I agree also that they have committed to the Congress of the United States the exercise of certain sovereign powers specifically enumerated in the instrument which called Congress into being and which continues its existence. But I assert also that the people of the United States conferred upon the executive department of the government the exercise of certain other sovereign powers, and conferred upon the judicial department of the Government the exercise of still other sovereign powers; and that in a debate with reference to a particular power when it is called in question the argument is not upon the origin of the power, is not upon the sovereignty of the people, but is simply and exclusively upon the particular location of the power in the Government, to wit, whether it be located in the executive, in the legislative, or in the judicial branch, it being understood that these three taken together hold all the powers that have been granted to the Government of the United States by the sovereign people.

I do not know, then, why an assertion of the sovereignty of the people of the United States is intruded into this discussion. I do not understand why it is insisted that Congress represents that sovereignty. It leads to nothing. No logical conclusion follows from it. The fact is indisputable, nobody will dispute it when his mind is turned to the subject, that in a case of this kind the question must be simply one with reference to the depositary of the particular power.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is in the law-making power I should have said. Congress may do certain things; but all laws passed by Congress must be approved by the President or else passed over his veto. The law-making power would probably be a more correct expression than the representatives of the people. I do not say that Congress have it separate from the President, because, in order to carry out the powers vested in them, they must act by law, and he must be a party to it; or if not a party to it directly, there must be a sufficient vote in Congress to show that within the Constitution they may act.

Mr. BUCKALEW. That is simply another and a better statement of the same point; and I say the question recurs upon this subject, taking it as it is now stated, whether the legislative power of the Government extends to the doing of this particular thing, and that will be determined by considering whether this legislation involves an invasion of an executive power, one lodged in another department, because if it be lodged there it is sacred from us. We cannot touch it; we cannot molest it. If we do, we transcend the limits of the powers which have been delegated to us.

Now, sir, Congress has authority to make rules and regulations for the government of the land and naval forces. Congress has also power to declare war; and our legislative powers with reference to the particular subject which we are investigating I suppose must arise under one of these heads. I agree that when we make rules and regulations for the government of the land and naval forces the Executive is bound to obey those laws. I agree also that when we declare war the Executive is bound to execute that law which we have enacted. But the precise point of the argument, as stated by the Senator from Maryland, is upon an independent clause of the Constitution, as actual and real one as those which I have mentioned, and that is that clause which confers upon the President of the United States, in general and unlimited language, all the powers appropriate to a Commander-in-Chief of our Army and Navy.

Now, what are those powers? Whatever they are Congress cannot limit them; Congress cannot take them away, cannot circumscribe them, cannot detract from them in any particular whatever. What powers, then, are conferred upon the President of the United States when the Constitution declares that he shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Army and the Navy? Why, sir, there is one power under this head which no man can deny or doubt; and that is the power of giving orders to his inferiors in military rank. The most especial characteristic of a commander-in-chief is that he shall issue his orders to his subordinates and that they shall be bound to obey them. To be sure our President must issue his orders according to law; he cannot command his inferior officers to do acts which are illegal; but so long as he complies with the laws his orders are to be obeyed, being given in his capacity as Commander-in-Chief, charged with the execution of the law. I deny that from this argument any inference arises that the President may order an officer under him to do an illegal act.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Suppose that his command should be plainly in violation of a law of Congress?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am just speaking of that. I say his orders must be in pursuance of law. If he orders an officer to do an illegal act, an act clearly and palpably illegal, that officer is not bound to obey it, and the President himself would be impeachable and responsible to the law for his misconduct; but so long as he complies with the laws which Congress has enacted in pursuance of their powers, so long as in the execution of the existing law he issues his orders, you cannot intervene between him and his subordinate; and why? Because you destroy his authority as Commander-in-Chief; you destroy that power which by an independent and clear provision of the Constitution is vested in him.

Now, sir, what does this bill do? It does the very thing which I have described. And pray what in the world has the sovereignty of the people of the United States to do with the question in this case? Pray what has the question of the legislative powers of Congress to do with the question in debate? The argument is upon the clause which establishes a Commander-in-Chief, and therefore necessarily confers upon him all the powers appropriate to that office, and the most essential one of those powers is the one to issue his orders to his subordinates to cause the law to be executed; I do not mean to violate the law, but to cause the law to be executed. Whenever you attempt to pass a rule for the government of the land and naval forces, or pass any law in relation to war which destroys the Commander-in-Chief, which destroys his authority as Commander-in-Chief, you invade the Constitution; you invade this clause of it. That is the argument.

Mr. President, I do not know exactly where we shall arrive upon the present political drift in Congress. One day we pass a bill to strip the Executive of a power which has been held and exercised by that department from the foundation of the Government, and confer that power upon the Senate, or divide the power rather between the President and the Senate; I mean the power to make removals from office. Now you propose a bill to take from that department the power which belongs to the head of it as Commander-in-Chief, and to deposit this power in some favorite officer. It looks to me as if the attempt were now made to tear to pieces one department of the Government, to absorb the powers which belong to it under the Constitution in other departments of the Government, and where you cannot transfer it to other departments of the Government, to transfer it to particular officials of the Government selected by act of Congress. If it be indeed true that we represent the sovereignty of the people of the United States exclusively, if it be indeed true that other departments of the Government do not represent that sovereignty as well as we, if it be indeed true that the American Congress, like the British Parliament, is an omnipotent body, you can do these things; but, sir, believing that the Congress of the United States is a body charged with specific and particular duties, and that it possesses only specific and particular powers, and that the very power in question asserted by this bill has, by the Constitution, been lodged in another department, of course my argument and my vote must be against the measure, and for maintaining that provision of the Constitution which it assails.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland asks that when this question be taken it be taken by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are three clauses in the Constitution that affect the question now before us. One is that which authorizes Congress to raise and support armies. Another is that which authorizes Congress to declare war. Another is that which authorizes Congress to provide rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces; and this last one is the one most particularly affecting the precise technical question that is raised by my friends from Pennsylvania and from Maryland. The precise language of this clause is:

"The Congress shall have power to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces."

Here is a definite and specific grant of power to Congress to do a particular thing. That thing is to make rules for the government of the land and naval forces. Now, what is "the government of the land and naval forces," I should be happy to have my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania tell me, if it be not to provide the methods and the limitations by which and under which the Army shall be moved and operated and controlled? When the law-writers tell us that governments are established for the benefit of society, and that society is governed or not governed, do they mean anything else than that the operations of society as between itself and other societies are to be regulated and controlled by the government that is set up? Is there any word in the whole vocabulary of the English language which has a more comprehensive meaning than the power to institute governments? That power is expressly given to Congress—the power to provide “government” for the armies and navies of the United States.

Another clause, to be sure, provides that the President of the United States shall be the Commander-in-Chief. Is he to be the Commander-in-Chief against this government which the Constitution declares Congress shall provide, or is he to be the Commander-in-Chief under it and according to its authority and its asserted force and regulation?

Now, what does this bill propose to do? It proposes to declare that the method of operating the Army shall be a particular one; that is, that the orders which the Commander-in-Chief shall give shall be given through a particular channel and shall operate in a particular way. There is no provision that he shall not give an order. It does not undertake to hedge in his authority a particle as to what he shall order, or in what way, other than that when he operates upon the Army and says it shall go here or stay there, he shall operate upon it in the regular method through a particular subordinate. Is not that government? Is not that executing merely a government of the Army? If it is not, then this language which, as I say, is as comprehensive as it is possible for language to be, has no meaning at all. If we are not governing the Army of the United States in providing the method by which it shall be operated and moved, what are we doing? It appears to me, sir, without occupying time, that it is the simplest question possible as to the constitutional right of Congress to make this provision. Whether it is wise or not is a question that has not been broached.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I can answer the Senator in a word. The power to make rules and regulations for the government of the land and naval forces is not questioned. What I do deny is, that Congress can make a rule for the government of the land and naval forces which shall conflict with a distinct and independent power established by the Constitution. You must make your rules and regulations under one clause of the Constitution, so that they will not affect or disturb the lodgment of power provided by another.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any conflict when, he being Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, you by your law provide that he shall give his orders as Commander-in-Chief through the channel prescribed by law?

Mr. BUCKALEW. His subordinate may disregard it. He cannot order his subordinate to execute the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That begs the very question. It does not provide that he cannot order his subordinate to execute the law. It only provides the manner in which he shall reach that officer.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It provides that the subordinate may refuse to obey his order in express language.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not if he gives that order in the method the law provides he shall give it, through the General.

Mr. CONNESS. Upon this subject I have only a fact to state that came to my knowledge, entirely disconnected with this bill, within a few days while in consultation with the General of the Army on other business; and that is, that it has been the practice for orders to go out concerning military affairs without ever passing through him at all, and consequently the public business of that character has been transacted to some extent without the coherence and consistency that it should be transacted with; and for that reason alone there is a necessity for such a provision as this.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Vermont says what is very true, that the Constitution provides that Congress shall have power to make rules and regulations for the government of the Army. That is the language of the Constitution. The Constitution also provides that the President shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. Now, sir, that Senator will not deny that those two sections must be construed together and in consistency with each other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. DIXON. Can a regulation or an order be made which shall deprive the President of his power and position as Commander-in-Chief?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly not.

Mr. DIXON. Can a regulation be made which shall say that he shall not command?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly not.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator says no. What is this regulation? The regulation is that the Commander-in-Chief of the Army shall not assign to duty the General of the Army, his subordinate officer, “without the previous approval of the Senate;” that is to say, instead of being Commander-in-Chief of the Army and authorized to issue a command, he is prohibited from issuing that command without the consent of a body which has no more to do with the Army than anybody in the United States. The rule and regulation now proposed to be made provides that the Commander-in-Chief of the Army shall not issue a certain order without the consent of the Senate. If that is consistent with the idea that the President is Commander-in-Chief of the Army, I do not understand language.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to have my friend from Connecticut read the clause that prohibits the President from assigning a man to command without the consent of the Senate. As I read the bill—I have only read it once—it provides that the Commander-in-Chief shall not remove the General-in-Chief without the approval of the Senate. On looking at the section, it may be that it goes further, and provides that he shall not be assigned to duty elsewhere than the place where the law fixes his station, and that would be equally competent. There is no conflict, as my friend says, between these two clauses; they must be taken together: but the question is whether the power to be Commander-in-Chief is a power to be Commander-in-Chief above the law or under it. Congress has power to declare war. Suppose it declares war against England, if you please. I will name a country that has got the ability to fight us. We declare war against England. The President says, “I do not want to fight England, and I am Commander-in-Chief; I will not order the Army to invade the Canadas; I will not order the Army to defend New York or Connecticut.” Now, then, is he to obey that act of Congress or is he not? If he is the Commander-in-Chief above the law, above the powers which the Constitution gives Congress the authority to put in execution, then by virtue of his supreme function as Commander-in-Chief, he will say, “I will not order the Army to invade this hostile nation, because I do not think war ought to have been declared.” On the contrary, the Supreme Court of the United States, at a time when it was held in high respect by everybody—and I do not say it ought not to be now; it would be if it decided more frequently in accordance with law certainly—the Supreme Court, in the times of the earliest judges, decided on a case made, and appropriately, before them, affecting private interests to be sure, but it involved that question, that when Congress declared war it was the duty of the President, although he was Commander-in-Chief, to make that war, and to make it vigorously; and the ground upon which they decided that was, that, being Commander-in-Chief, he was a part of the Army, the head of it; and he must put that Army in force whenever Congress, the representatives of the people, having raised it, declare that it ought to be put in force by making war.

Then another phrase is, as I have already stated, that we are to provide rules for the government of the Army, and that, it seems to me—and my friend has not met the argument—implies that we shall regulate the methods by which the Army shall be put in operation.

Mr. DIXON. I admit fully that Congress has power to make rules for the government of the Army; but as the Senator has already admitted, those rules must be consistent with the Commander-in-Chiefship of the President of the United States. He has a right to act as commander. The very first necessary incident of that power is to command his subordinates.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Against the rules or in conformity to the rules?

Mr. DIXON. Of course in conformity to the rules; but you deprive him of power entirely here. You say he shall not command that officer without the consent of the Senate. You do not say that he shall command in a particular manner. You say that the Commander-in-Chief shall not order his subordinates except with the consent of the Senate. Is that a rule consistent with the fact that he is Commander-in-Chief? If it is, then I agree the Senator is right.

But the Senator says he is bound to make war when war is declared. Why? Because the Constitution provides that Congress may declare war. It is a constitutional power of Congress. That also must be taken in connection with the other provisions. By the power of Congress war exists; and he is bound, of course, to recognize the law that war exists. When Congress declares war, then by the law of the land we are in a state of war, and the President of the United States is bound to acknowledge and recognize that, and he is also bound to obey all rules and regulations made by Congress which are consistent with his commandship. But suppose the command is taken from him entirely. I do not see, with the argument of the Senator from Maine, to which I listened carefully, and I acknowledge its force and its power, I do not see why it does not go to the entire extent. If you can do what is here claimed, then you may go as many steps further as you please, and you may provide that he shall not command the Army, and that the subordinate officer shall not obey him. What do you do here? We may just as well look at the rule as it is. You provide here that—

The General of the Army shall not be removed, suspended, or relieved from command—

So far possibly the Senator is right in saying it is confined to the question of appointment—or assigned to duty elsewhere than at said headquarters.

That is to say, he cannot be ordered to Baltimore by his superior officer without the consent of the Senate. If that is a rule and regulation which is consistent with the fact that the President is Commander-in-Chief of the Army by the Constitution the force of language is misunderstood.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member from Massachusetts stated what he had a right to state, that I had the highest possible respect for Mr. Chancellor Kent, upon constitutional questions at least, and he read what he told us was a note to be found in the first volume of his Commentaries, and gave us the edition. I had no recollection of the note, and rather supposed that my friend had been mistaken, that he had found it somewhere else, and I sent for the book. I have the edition published in 1861, long after Chancellor Kent was dead, by his son, the late William Kent. The honorable member tells me that he saw what he supposed to be a note such as he has inserted in a speech—he read from an extract in a speech. Of course I do not doubt that. All that I mean to say is that if there is such an edition, I do not believe the note had the sanction of the Chancellor, and that if it even had the sanction of the Chancellor, his son, who was a very able man—and it would be no dishonor to his father to say, as able a man as the father—when he came to edit the book dropped the note; and I do not think he would have dropped the note if it had been inserted by the Chancellor himself, without having heard from that very distinguished man that he had made a mistake in the note. It is certainly not in any edition of the work that I have been able to find; but I repeat, that I have not the slightest doubt that the honorable member's quotation of it was from some book before him which he supposed to be genuine. I will read a sentence or two from the text, about which there can be no dispute, which makes me think the Chancellor never could have intended to say that the authority of the President of the United States over the manner in which the armies of the United States were to be employed was subject to the legislative power of Congress. In the chapter in which he is speaking of the presidential office he says:

"He is Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the service of the Union. The command and application of the public force to execute law, maintain peace, and resist foreign invasion are powers so obviously of an executive nature, and require the exercise of qualities so characteristic of this department, that they have always been exclusively appropriated to it, in every well organized Government upon earth. In no instance, perhaps, did the enlightened understanding of Hume discover less acquaintance with the practical science of government, than when he gave the direction of the army and navy, as well as all other executive powers, to one hundred senators, in his plan of a perfect commonwealth. That of Milton was equally chimerical and absurd, when, in his 'Ready and Easy Way to establish a Free Commonwealth,' he deposited the whole executive, as well as legislative power, in a single and permanent council of senators."

It is obvious, then, that in the opinion of the commentator the application of the force, the command of the force, the distribution of the force carrying on a campaign, where the Army was to go, what they were to do, were all to be vested in the President.

Mr. DIXON. I ask the indulgence of the Senate in calling attention to one other point, which I think has been lost sight of. This rule and regulation which is now proposed to be made is with respect to the very question who shall be Commander-in-Chief. An order is issued to General Grant to move to Baltimore and take command of troops there by the President of the United States. He says, "You are not Commander-in-Chief; you have no right to issue this order, because there is a law which provides that you and the Senate of the United States must act together; you have not power to issue the order; but you must be accompanied in issuing the order by the Senate." Now, sir, I say that that is utterly inconsistent with the idea that the President is Commander-in-Chief, because it makes him Commander-in-Chief with another body, so far forth as that body is concerned.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Before the vote is declared, as it is suggested that we may be able to finish this bill in fifteen minutes, I move that the time for taking a recess be extended for fifteen minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion can be entertained only by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection, and the question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote on the amendment to strike out the second section was then announced—yeas 8, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Dixon, Doolittle, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Norton, and Patterson—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Kirkwood, Morgan, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—28.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Cowan, Davis, Fowler, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Howard, Howe, Lane, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Riddle, and Saulsbury—16.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. With the consent of the Senator from California, and having the consent of a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs, I desire to move a reconsideration of the section proposed by him, so that I may include Nevada with California.

Mr. CONNESS. It can be done by inserting the words "and Nevada" after "California."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let it be done by general consent if there is no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Nevada repeat his motion?

Mr. STEWART. It is to add the words "and Nevada" after "California" in the section offered by the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to adding the words named? No objection being made, it will be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move the following amendment, to come in at the end of the thirty-fourth line on page 2:

For the erection of a bridge at Rock Island, Illinois, as recommended by the chief of Ordnance, $250,000.

I have here communications from the Secretary of War showing the necessity for this appropriation. One of them is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Finance. I will send them up and have them read if it is desired. It is recommended by the chief of Ordnance and by the Secretary of War as a necessary appropriation to be made at this time.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to know whether it involves the removal of the objectionable bridge there?

Mr. TRUMBULL. That bridge is to be removed by the report of the commissioners.

Mr. RAMSEY. Is that part and parcel of this amendment? If it is I have no objection to it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The amendment does not provide that as I have offered it, but the report of the commissioners does.

Mr. RAMSEY. If the public build a bridge at Rock Island we ought at least to get the removal of the other bridge which is so objectionable to the navigation of the river. I am willing to vote for the amendment if that can be done.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will state to the Senator from Minnesota that the second section of the act passed on the 27th of June, 1866, provided—

"That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to grant to the companies and parties in interest such other aid, pecuniary or otherwise, toward effecting the change in the present location of their road and bridge and establishing thereon a wagon-road for the use of the Government of the United States to connect said island with the cities of Davenport and Rock Island, to be so constructed as not materially to interfere with, obstruct, or impair the navigation of the Mississippi river, as may be adjudged to be fair and equitable by the board of commissioners authorized under the act of April 19, 1864, entitled 'An act in addition to an act for the establishment of certain arsenals,' and may be approved by him."

Commissioners were appointed, went to Rock Island, have examined all this property, have been in negotiation with this railroad company, have made their report to the War Department, and that report has been published and laid upon our tables, in which they recommend the removal of this bridge. The letter of the chief of Ordnance, which I have before me, states:

"The whole amount will not be required at once, and after the completion of the bridge the Government will be reimbursed by the railroad company for one half of the superstructure, which will materially lessen the cost of the bridge to the United States; but it is important to the interests of this Department that the bridge shall be built as soon as practicable, and that the work shall be commenced during the present year."

"I have therefore the honor to recommend that an appropriation of $250,000 be requested for this object."

This is signed by A. B. Dyer, brevet major general and chief of Ordnance, and is recommended by the Secretary of War. An arrangement has been entered into under this law for securing the title to the property which was claimed by individuals upon this island, and the whole matter is reported to Congress. If the Senator from Minnesota will look into the report of the commissioners he will see what they have recommended. This appropriation is asked now in accordance with that report, and is indorsed by the Secretary of War, who writes upon the back of the letter which I have read:

"Approved and respectfully referred to Hon. WILLIAM P. FESSENDEN, chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, with the request that he cause an appropriation of $250,000 to be inserted in the proper appropriation bill for the purposes herein mentioned, if approved by that committee."

"EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War."

Mr. RAMSEY. I have no doubt that the War authorities of course approve of this arrangement. They are concerned in regard to their own immediate wants at the island and the works to be erected there for military purposes; but in behalf of the public on the river, we have interests that we ought to care for; and if the public are called upon to contribute so much for the erection of this bridge we ought at least in return to have something for the removal of the other.

Mr. TRUMBULL. A part of the plan is that the other bridge is to be removed. That is recommended. That is to be removed.

Mr. RAMSEY. Then I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois another question. Does his amendment or does the bill in any way provide the kind of a bridge that is to be erected at Rock Island?

Mr. TRUMBULL. The amendment simply appropriates $250,000 for the erection of a bridge as recommended by the Department. The recommendation of the officers will show the character of the bridge that they recommend. They recommended a wagon bridge as well as a railroad bridge.

Mr. RAMSEY. Is it a draw-bridge or a continuous span bridge, or what is it?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is a draw-bridge.

Mr. RAMSEY. With a span as provided for by the legislation of Congress on this subject?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Larger.

Mr. RAMSEY. Then I have nothing further to say about it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I will say that the present railroad track crosses Rock Island considerably north of the southern extremity of that island, and at a point, according to the report of General Rodman, in charge there, that materially interferes with the use of the island by the Government for armory purposes. The plan submitted by the board of engineers removes the track of the railroad company merely from that portion of the island, and puts it at the southern extremity of the island, and just as soon as this bridge can be built the company are compelled to change their track so as to pass over the extreme southern point of the island on this new bridge, removing their bridge and track from above.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repair of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) giving additional compensation to certain employes in the civil service of the Government at Washington;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 271) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the claim of D. Randolph Martin, assignee of the Washington, Alexandria, and Georgetown Railroad Company; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 290) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant the use of guns for the trial of Ridgway's battery.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repair of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 628 relative to courts-martial in the Army. It will not take a moment to pass it; or I am willing to leave it as the unfinished business, if Senators want to take a recess now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We want to take up another bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to take up the compound-interest note bill.

Mr. WILSON. It will not take ten minutes to dispose of this.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me get up the compound-interest note bill, and then I will give way to the Senator.

Mr. WILSON. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1220 to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes, so that it may be the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. EDMUNDS in the Chair.) It will be taken to be the pleasure of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that bill if there be no objection. The bill will be read.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think it is hardly worth while to take up that bill in the five minutes that are left us before the time fixed for the recess.

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply want to leave it as the unfinished business for this evening.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well. I move then that the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-one minutes) took a recess until seven and a half o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half-past seven o'clock p. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of Alanson Eaton, receiver of public money for the land office at Stephens's Point, Wisconsin, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

MONUMENTS TO DECEASED SENATORS.

Mr. POLAND. Several days ago I introduced a resolution directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to have monuments erected in the Congressional Cemetery in memory of the Senators who have died since the 4th of July, 1861. I introduced this resolution at the instance of our Sergeant-at-Arms. Since 1861, some eight or ten Senators have died and no monuments have been erected to their memory, as had been the custom heretofore. The Sergeant-at-Arms is placed in great embarrassment by this; he is constantly called upon by the friends and relatives of those Senators who have died to know the reason why the ordinary mark of respect has not been paid to them by having monuments erected as before. So far as I know it had been the custom for the Sergeant-at-Arms to procure these monuments and put them up without any special direction from the Senate; but there being eight or ten to be provided for, the Sergeant-at-Arms felt a delicacy in undertaking the work without direction from the Senate, and I have introduced this resolution at his request that he may have instruction from the Senate whether to procure the monuments and erect them, or have an answer to make to the relatives and friends of those deceased Senators by saying that the Senate have refused to instruct him to do so. I move that this resolution be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) Another subject having been under consideration at the time of the recess, House bill No. 1220, it requires unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the subject named by the Senator from Vermont, unless the unfinished business be postponed. Is there objection?

Mr. POLAND. I wish merely to take a vote on the resolution.

Mr. LANE. I rise to a point of order. This evening was set apart, by a special resolution passed some days ago, for the consideration of pension bills. There are some forty-two pension bills on the Calendar, and I have left a sick bed to come here to attend to them. No doubt the resolution of the Senator from Vermont is perfectly correct, but I must insist on the regular order of business unless the Chair overrules me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the recess being merely a suspension of the business of the Senate for the time being, on the reassembling of the Senate the business in hand at the time of the recess, being House bill No. 1220, to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes, is entitled to precedence as the subject under consideration until the Senate shall, by a vote, decide to proceed to the consideration of the business named by the Senator from Indiana or the business named by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under the circumstances stated by the Senator from Indiana I cannot resist the appeal made by him. I know that he is rather unwell, and he says he came here for the purpose of discharging his duty to pensioners to-night. Under these circumstances I move to postpone the unfinished business until to-morrow at one o'clock, and that it be made the special order for that hour, so that we shall have no controversy then about the order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Vermont to take up the subject named by him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to that until this business is disposed of.

Mr. POLAND. I do not know that the Senator can object to my making a motion to postpone other business and take up the resolution to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the subject named by him.

Mr. WILSON. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on that proposition.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is to erect monuments to people not buried here.

Mr. POLAND. I have said all that I desire to say in reference to this resolution. All that will be necessary will be for gentlemen to vote upon it if it is taken up. I am not aware that anybody desires to take up any time on it. I certainly do not.

Mr. WILSON. I do.

Mr. POLAND. I shall not withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. WILSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator from Vermont insists upon breaking up the evening session, be it so.

Mr. POLAND. It is perfectly immaterial to me whether the Senate pass the resolution or not. I have introduced the resolution, as I stated, that the Sergeant-at-Arms may be relieved from his embarrassment. I am perfectly willing that the Senate shall vote it down if they choose. I have no care about it. I merely desire to have a vote taken on the resolution.

Mr. WILSON. We cannot get a vote now. We cannot divide.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution which the Senator from Vermont moves to take up will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be instructed to have the ordinary monuments erected in the Congressional Cemetery in memory of Senators who have died since July 4, 1861.

Mr. LANE. Can that resolution be considered to-day without unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is not offered to-day. It was offered on the 15th of February, as the Chair understands. The motion of the Senator from Vermont is therefore in order.

Mr. POLAND. I certainly have no desire to embarrass anybody. That is not a part of my vocation. If there is a general assent that I may have this resolution taken up in the morning and voted upon it will answer my purpose as well. I am merely acting in behalf of the Sergeant-at-Arms in seeking to get an expression of the Senate on the subject. It is quite immaterial to me whether he is directed to put up these monuments or not. If there is a general assent that the resolution may be taken up and a vote had on it in the morning I am willing to withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Vermont to withdraw his motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution indicated by him?

Mr. POLAND. Yes, sir, I withdraw it.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES—AGAIN.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the order of business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The business before the Senate regularly is House bill No. 1220, to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes.

Mr. SHERMAN. As to-night was set apart for pension bills, and the Senator from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, has come here, though unwell, to attend to that duty, I am disposed to yield to him on the question of priority. I move, therefore, that the pending bill be postponed until to-morrow at one o'clock, and be made the special order for that hour.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I desire at this time to submit an amendment to go with the bill which has just been postponed. It is an additional section.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of that section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read for information.

The Secretary read the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. WILSON to the bill (H. R. No. 1220) to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes, as an additional section:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That every national bank shall at all times have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least twenty-five per cent. of the aggregate amount of its notes in circulation and its deposits; and it shall be unlawful for any national bank to pay interest on deposits made in said bank by any other bank.

SUSAN TEN EYCK WILLIAMSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In pursuance of the order of the Senate setting apart this evening for pension bills, those bills will now be taken up.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. On behalf of the Committee on Pensions, I move to take up Senate bill No. 623.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 623) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Ten Eyck Williamson, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Susan Ten Eyck Williamson, widow of Charles L. Williamson, late a captain in the United States Navy, on the pension-roll, at the rate of thirty dollars per month, to continue during her widowhood, to be paid out of the naval pension fund.

Mr. GRIMES. What is the trouble in that case? Why can she not get a pension at the Pension Office without applying to Congress?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Captain Williamson was an officer in the Navy in the war of 1812; and this is a pension for the benefit of his widow. She has been fifteen or twenty years without it. She ought to have had it some time ago.

The bill was referred to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNIE E. DIXON.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (S. No. 630) granting a pension to Annie E. Dixon was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Annie E. Dixon, widow of Henry T. Dixon, late a major and assistant paymaster in the volunteer service of the United States, at twenty-five dollars per month, to continue during her widowhood.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to hear the report in that case.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. There is a report, but I can state the facts in a few moments; I believe most of them are personally known to the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON.] The petitioner in this case is the widow of Major Dixon—and by the by, I will say to the Senator from Michigan that this is not the Mrs. Dixon whose case was up in the House of Representatives a few days ago and rejected, but it is another Mrs. Dixon. She is the widow of a major and paymaster in the volunteer service, who, in consequence of the country being able to dispense with his services, was, with a number of others, mustered out on the 31st of July, 1865. He proceeded immediately to settle up his accounts, which were completed early in August—I think about the 10th of August—and he received a clear acquittance from the Government, the Government paying him $400 of his pay that he had not previously received. Everything was to the satisfaction of the Paymaster General. His intention was then to enter the regular Army; and he called with Judge Underwood, whose letter is in the papers testifying to the facts, first upon the President, to whom he stated the circumstances of his case. He was almost ruined by the destruction of his property in Virginia; his long service of four years in the Army had been meritorious; and these and other facts and circumstances induced the President to indorse his papers over to the Secretary of War, recommending that he have the appointment in the regular Army which he was seeking. They went immediately to the Secretary of War, who having some acquaintance with him already, was pleased to promise that within a few weeks he should have the appointment. Two days after that interview he was assassinated in Alexandria by a rebel surgeon on account of his Unionism, on account of his having been the only man in Fauquier county, Virginia, who voted against secession, and on account of his undeviating devotion to the Union.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is enough.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The bill is to give his widow, who has eleven children several of them of very tender years, a pension. The Senator from Michigan signifies that he is satisfied, and I shall not detain the Senate by any further statement.

Mr. GRIMES. Was this gentleman a paymaster at the time he was assassinated?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. He was not. He was leaving the volunteer service, and about seeking employment in the regular Army, and two days after he was assassinated.

Mr. GRIMES. Two days after what event?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Two days after he had been promised an appointment in the regular Army.

Mr. GRIMES. At what time was he mustered out of service?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. On the 31st of July previous.

Mr. GRIMES. At what time was he assassinated?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. About the 10th of November. It was some time after he was mustered out before he was clear of the service; he had his accounts to settle. They were not settled until some time in August. The committee bring the case before this body without a direct recommendation, simply giving their own opinion that it is a meritorious case, and one deserving the consideration of the Senate. Bills of this kind are bandied about between the committees here. They go to the Military or Naval Committee or to the Committee on Claims, and finally lodge in the Pension Committee; and we have been obliged to report bills in such cases, although they are not strictly cases for pensions. It is but a few weeks since a bill was passed in favor of Mrs. McCook, of Ohio, granting her an annual pension of $250, although she was already receiving a pension of a greater amount. This is a case which we think addresses itself to the patriotic feelings and the generosity, if not the sense of justice of Congress. This man suffered greatly on account of his Unionism. His property destroyed is said to have been worth $15,000. He was persecuted so that he had to become an exile from his home and his family. He went into the service, and remained there four years, and settled his accounts to the satisfaction of the Paymaster General, making a final settlement as soon as it could be done after he was mustered out, and then met his death at the hands of an assassin on account of his Unionism.

The question is before the Senate. If they think it a meritorious case, as the committees do, they will surely grant this little pension to his widow with eleven children, most of them of tender years.

Mr. HOWE. What is the evidence that his Unionism was the cause of his assassination?

Mr. GRIMES. I suggest to the Senator having charge of the bill that as it involves an important principle it had better be laid over until we have a fuller Senate.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Very well. I shall not object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be laid aside if there be no objection.

CHARLES O. ROWOHL.

Mr. LANE. I move to take up House joint resolution No. 280.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) for the relief of the mother of Charles O. Rowohl, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Interior is to pay or cause to be paid to the mother of Charles O. Rowohl, deceased, late of company I, eighth regiment Kansas volunteers, eight dollars per month, from the date of the death of her son to the time when she commenced receiving a pension under the general pension laws.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENTS TO LOYAL PERSONS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the joint resolution of the House (H. R. No. 222) prohibiting payments by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and on motion by Mr. TRUMBULL:

Resolved, That the Senate insists upon its amendments to the said resolution disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. TRUMBULL, Mr. FOGG, and Mr. NESMITH, managers at the same on its part.

MILTON VELZY.

Mr. LANE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1092.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1092) for the relief of Martin Velzy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Milton Velzy, of Machias, Cattaraugus county, New York, late a private in company C, one hundred and fourth regiment New York volunteers, of the sum of $249 80, being at the rate of six dollars per month from the 24th of December, 1862, to the 13th day of June, 1866.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RACHEL M'CLELLAND.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1153.)

The motion was agreed to; and the bill H. R. No. 1153) for the relief of Mrs. Rachel McClelland was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Mrs. Rachel McClelland, widow of private John F. McClelland, deceased, late of company E, sixteenth regiment Ohio volunteers, of a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 19th of September, 1862, to the 6th of November, 1866, at which latter date she was duly placed on the pension-roll by the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. BUCKALEW. As this is a case of back pay not provided for by the general law we ought to have some explanation.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, from which it appeared that shortly after the death of John F. McClelland of company E, sixteenth regiment Ohio volunteers, who lost his life in the service of his country, his widow made application for a pension through a claim agent, which application never reached the Pension Office. A new application was afterward made out on which a pension was granted, commencing only from the date of the new application. The committee believe her entitled to a pension from the death of her husband.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALLY ALLEN.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1189) granting arrears of pension to Sally Allen, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be paid to Sally Allen, widow of Isaac Allen, of Maine, $25 33, being the amount due her husband by special act of April 26, 1864, at the time of his death.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY FITZPATRICK.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1190.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1190) granting a pension to Mary Fitzpatrick, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mary Fitzpatrick, widow of James W. Fitzpatrick, late an acting assistant surgeon United States Army, who died at Harwood hospital on or about May 6, 1864, on the pension-rolls, at the rate of seventeen dollars per month, commencing at the death of her husband, subject to the provisions of the pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISABELLA FOGG.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1191.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1191) increasing the pension of Isabella Fogg, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the increase of the pension of Isabella Fogg, who was granted a pension by an act of Congress approved April 17, 1866, from eight dollars to twenty dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEWIS A. HORTON.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1192) granting arrears of pension to Lewis A. Horton, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to increase the pension of Lewis A. Horton, of Newburyport, Massachusetts, who was wounded on board the gunboat Rhode Island, from eight dollars to twenty-five dollars per month, from the 4th of July, 1864, to the 6th of June, 1866, to be paid out of the naval pension fund.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEVISA DANIEL.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the bill (H. R. No. 1193) for the relief of Levisa Daniel, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Levisa Daniel, widow of Joseph Daniel, late of the first Tennessee volunteers, of a pension, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 9th of May, 1862, to the 11th day of September, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY J. DEXTER.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1194) granting back pension to Mary J. Dexter, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. Under its provisions Mary J. Dexter, widow of David H. Dexter, late a second lieutenant in the thirty-fourth regiment of Wisconsin volunteer infantry, will be placed on the pension-rolls, at fifteen dollars per month, from the 25th of May, 1863, to the 10th of July, 1866.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY B. FOWLER.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1195) for the relief of Mary B. Fowler, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Mary B. Fowler, of Cleveland, Ohio, on the pension-rolls, at the rate of eight dollars per month, subject to the provisions of the law relative to dependent mothers of deceased soldiers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER FISHER.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1196) granting a pension to Peter Fisher, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Peter Fisher, late a member of company G, thirty-seventh regiment Iowa infantry, on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, commencing on the 24th of June, 1864, the date of his discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES VALENCE.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1197) for the relief Charles Val-ence, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Interior is to place the name of Charles Valence, late a private in company E, forty-second regiment of Pennsylvania volunteers, upon the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars a month, from the 8th of September, 1862, the date of his discharge, up to the 27th of January, 1864, the date of the commencement of his pension as allowed by the Pension Office.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

APPENDIX TO DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask permission to make a report at this time. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 182) for printing additional copies of the Appendix to the Diplomatic Correspondence of 1865, have instructed me to report it without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in addition to the number of copies of papers relating to foreign affairs now authorized by law, there shall be printed for distribution by the Department of State, on fine white paper, with wide margin, a sufficient number of the Appendix to the Diplomatic Correspondence of 1865 to supply one copy to each Senator and Representative of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, one to each foreign Government, and one to each corporation, association, or public body whose expressions of condolence or sympathy are published in the volume; one hundred of these copies to be bound in full Turkey morocco, gilt, and the remaining copies to be bound in half Turkey morocco, marble edged.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. HAFFER.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (H. R. No. 1199) for the relief of William H. Hafer, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of William H. Hafer, late of company E, second Pennsylvania cavalry, on the pension-list at fifteen dollars per month; and in the event of his death, leaving a widow or orphan children, the pension is to be paid to the widow or orphan children, under the limitations and restrictions provided by the general pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANN I. DUCHMAN.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (H. R. No. 1200) for the relief of Ann I. Duchman, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior is to place the name of Ann I. Duchman on the pension-list, and to pay her the pension to which she would have been entitled had her late husband, Lieutenant Colonel John N. Duchman, of the seventy-ninth Pennsylvania volunteers, been killed in battle instead of having died from disease contracted while in service; the payment of this pension to be under the restrictions and limitations of the general pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. KNABB.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (H. R. No. 1201) for the relief of George W. Knabb, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to the legally-appointed trustee of Captain George W. Knabb, late of company A, eighty-eighth Pennsylvania volunteers, a pension at the rate of twenty dollars per month from the date of his discharge from the service of the United States to the time when he commenced receiving a pension from the Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN FARIS.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (H. R. No. 1198) for the relief of the orphan children of John Faris, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to the legally-appointed guardian of the orphan children of John Faris, deceased, formerly of Paris, Henry county, Tennessee, until they severally attain the age of sixteen years, of the pension awarded to the orphan children of soldiers killed in the line of duty, the money to be paid under the restrictions and limitations of the general pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS BARRON.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (H. R. No. 1202) for the relief of Francis Barron, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Francis Barron, late of the third Iowa battery, on the pension-list from the date of his discharge, at the rate of pension he would have been allowed had a pension been granted by the Commissioner of Pensions.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUFUS L. HARVEY.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (H. R. No. 1203) for the relief of Rufus L. Harvey, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Rufus L. Harvey, who enlisted in Captain Pitt's company of light artillery, in the war of 1812, on the pension-list, at eight dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN ROGERS.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (H. R. No. 1204) granting a pension to John Rogers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of John Rogers, a soldier of the war of 1812, and a private in Captain James Payne's company of Virginia militia, on the pension-rolls, at the rate of eight dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM GLEASON.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (H. R. No. 1205) granting a pension to William Gleason, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-rolls, at twenty-five dollars per month, the name of William Gleason, who enlisted on the 5th of November, 1860, at Newport barracks, State of Kentucky, and was discharged on the 14th of October, 1862.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH WRENN.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (H. R. No. 1206) granting a pension to Joseph Wrenn, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Joseph Wrenn, late a private in company M, ninth New York cavalry, on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions of the pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES MAUS.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (H. R. No. 1207) granting a pension to Charles Maus was next taken up. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Charles Maus, of the borough of Lewisburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, a soldier of the war of 1812 with Great Britain, on the pension-rolls, at the rate of eight dollars per month.

Mr. LANE. I move that that bill be recommended to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN RUSSELL.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (H. R. No. 1208) increasing the pension of John Russell, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. By the bill the pension of John Russell, who was granted a pension of eight dollars per month, to commence from the 7th of September, 1849, is to be increased from eight dollars to twenty dollars per month.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Do I understand that that increase dates back to 1849? It is a long period of time, and the increase is very large. I hope it will be explained or the report read.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. There is a report among the papers; I do not remember the particular circumstances.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It seems to be seventeen or eighteen years back pay. I ask for the reading of the report.

The Secretary read the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, from which it appears that John Russell, a soldier of the war of 1812, contracted a disease from exposure which has resulted in paralysis, in consequence of which he was granted a pension of eight dollars a month, commencing September 7, 1849. He is totally disabled, and the committee consider him entitled to twenty dollars a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET BOUCHER.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1209) granting back pension to Margaret Boucher, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Margaret Boucher, widow of Michael Boucher, late of the twenty-sixth regiment of the District of Columbia militia, a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the death of her husband to the date of her pension certificate, October 18, 1866.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEVI M. ROBERTS.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1210) increasing the pension of Levi M. Roberts was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Levi M. Roberts, who was granted a pension by a special act of Congress in May, 1830, on the pension-rolls, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, and to pay him at that rate from the 6th of June, 1866, in lieu of any pension to which he may be entitled.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EFFIE J. HARVEY.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1211) granting a pension to Effie J. Harvey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Effie J. Harvey, widow of Clinton D. Harvey, late an acting assistant paymaster in the United States Navy, on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions of the pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANCY HINTON.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1212) for the relief of Nancy Hinton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Nancy Hinton, widow of John Hinton, late a private in Davis's county, Kentucky, Home Guard, on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to continue during her widowhood, and in the event of her marriage or death, the pension is to go to the minor children of John Hinton, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH STALEY.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1213) for the relief of Elizabeth Staley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Elizabeth Staley, of Cincinnati, Ohio, mother, by adoption, of Theodore A. Jones, who died while a private of company C, second regiment Missouri cavalry, in the service of the United States, on the pension-roll, at eight dollars per month, commencing September 17, 1864, and to continue while she remains a widow.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL M'MAHON.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1214) for the relief of Daniel McMahon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Daniel McMahon, late a captain in the twentieth regiment New York State militia, of a pension at the rate of twenty dollars per month, from June 29, 1864, to February 27, 1866.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS GLASGOW.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1215) for the relief of Thomas Glasgow was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Thomas Glasgow, who was in the service of the United States from November, 1814, until June, 1815, on the pension-rolls, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing March 4, 1861, and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY HOSEA.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1216) granting a pension to Mary Hosea was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the rolls of invalid pensioners the name of Mary Hosea, widow of James Hosea, late of Carbondale, Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, at the rate allowed by and subject to the general law applicable to deputy provost marshals, and to continue during widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID B. CHAMPION.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1217) granting a pension to David B. Champion was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of David B. Champion, late of company A, one hundred and eighty-third Pennsylvania volunteers, on the pension-rolls, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES RIDDLE.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1218) for the relief of James Riddle, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of James Riddle, a resident of the city of New York, and late of company G, eighth United States infantry, on the pension-rolls, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from 29th of July, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OBADIAH ADERTON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 293) for the relief of Obadiah Aderton, have instructed me to report it back without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Obadiah Aderton, of the State of Maine, on the list of pensions, at the rate of eight dollars per month.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VIRGINIA S. WILSON.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 165) for the relief of Virginia S. Wilson, widow of the late Captain George W. Wilson, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Virginia S. Wilson, widow of George W. Wilson, deceased, late a captain of company G, second Eastern Shore regiment, Maryland volunteers, the sum of $272, being the amount of the pension accruing to George W. Wilson, between the 3d of January, 1865, the date of his muster-out from the United States service, and the 21st of February, 1866, the date of his original application for a pension, and which he failed to obtain in his lifetime by reason of his application not being filed within one year from the date of his disability.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL COLE.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 295) for the relief of Daniel Cole was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the list of pensions the name of Daniel Cole, at the rate of eight dollars per month.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM WHELAN.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 296) for the relief of the orphan children of William Whelan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to the legally-appointed guardian of the orphan children of William Whelan, late a soldier in company H, one hundred and sixth Pennsylvania volunteers, of the same pension allowed by law to the orphan children of soldiers having died of disease contracted in the line of duty, and under the same limitations imposed by that law; this joint resolution to take effect from the death of William Whelan.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. CROSS.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (H. R. No. 1068) for the relief of Mary A. Cross was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Mary A. Cross, of Fremont, Ohio, widow of Hubbard H. Cross, late private in company F, seventy-second regiment Ohio volunteer infantry, of a pension from the 12th of June, 1862, (the date of the death of her husband,) to the date at which the pension heretofore granted to her commenced, and at the same rate.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES RUMSEY.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill (S. No. 621) for the relief of Charles Rumsey, which has been reported adversely by the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

J. AND O. P. COBB AND COMPANY.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1096.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1096) for the relief of J. & O. P. Cobb & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Treasurer of the United States to pay to J. & O. P. Cobb & Co., of Aurora, Indiana, the sum of $7,892 18 out of any money applicable to the payment of claims against the Quartermaster's Bureau, in full discharge of their claim for hay taken and destroyed by order of General Boyle, on the Ohio river, in July, 1863.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to hear some explanation of that bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I supposed every Senator recollected the facts of this case; it was fully discussed last year. A bill was then reported by Mr. Clark, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on Claims, but besides what this present bill contains, it had an allowance for the barges in which the hay was being transported to Cairo; and because the barges did not come within the contract the Senate feared it would be establishing a precedent to pay for the property destroyed. This is hay that was purchased by the Government and it was being carried under a contract for delivery at Cairo. There never has been any question in regard to the hay.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. HAMLIN.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to take up House joint resolution No. 268.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) to pay Lieutenant John H. Hamlin for military services was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Paymaster General of the United States Army to pay to John H. Hamlin, of Michigan, late a first lieutenant in the seventh regiment of Michigan cavalry, the full pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of cavalry for the time from the 8th of January, 1863, being the date on which he joined his regiment and entered on duty as a second lieutenant, to the 28th of March, 1864, when he was mustered in as a first lieutenant.

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia proposed amendments to the resolution. The first amendment was in lines seven and eight to strike out "8th day of January" and insert "1st day of July."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eight after "1863" to strike out the words "being the date on which he joined his regiment and entered on duty as a second lieutenant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA WELLS.

Mr. WILLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 611.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 611) to extend to and for the benefit of Eliza Wells letters-patent heretofore issued to Henry A. Wells, deceased, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that Henry A. Wells, late of the city of New York, obtained letters-patent of the United States for valuable "improvements in the process of and machinery for making hat-bodies," which letters-patent bore date the 25th of April, 1846, and were granted for the term of fourteen years from that date; that he departed this life on the 27th of March, 1851, leaving Eliza Wells, his widow, to whom letters of administration on his estate were duly granted; that the letters-patent were reissued to Charles St. John, and others, assignees, in two divisions, one bearing date the 30th of September, 1856, and numbered three hundred and ninety-six, and the other bearing date the 7th of October, 1856, and numbered four hundred; that the reissued letters-patent were duly extended by the Commissioner of Patents on the 25th of April, 1860, for the term of seven years from the last mentioned date, for the benefit of Eliza Wells, administratrix; that on the 4th of December, 1860, the reissued and extended letters-patent were surrendered and again reissued to Henry A. Burr, assignee, in two divisions, numbered ten hundred and eighty-six and ten hundred and eighty-seven; that the extended term will expire the 25th day of April, 1867; that it appears that the invention is of great value and importance to the public, and that Henry A. Wells in his lifetime, and Eliza Wells, as administratrix since his decease, failed to receive from the use and sale of the invention a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon it and its introduction into use. The bill, therefore, proposes to extend the reissued letters-patent numbered one thousand and eighty-six and one thousand and eighty-seven, respectively, and bearing date the 4th of December, 1860, to and for the benefit of Eliza Wells, as administratrix of the estate of Henry A. Wells, deceased, for the further term of seven years from and after the 25th of April, 1867.

Mr. WILLEY. I move to amend the bill in lines three and four by striking out the words "one thousand and eighty-six and;" in line four by striking out the word "respectively;" and in line six, after the word "sixty," by inserting "and said reissued letters-patent numbered thirteen hundred and eighteen, and bearing date the 17th day of June, 1862;" so that, if amended, the bill will read:

That the said reissued letters-patent numbered ten thousand and eighty-seven, and bearing date the 4th day of December, 1860, and said reissued letters-patent numbered thirteen hundred and eighteen, and bearing date the 17th day of June, 1862, be, and the same are hereby, extended to and for the benefit of the said Eliza Wells, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY. I now move to amend the preamble in the seventh line, on page 2, by inserting after the words "ten hundred and eighty-seven" these words:

And whereas said reissued letters-patent, numbered ten hundred and eighty-six, were surrendered and again reissued on the 17th day of June, 1862, said reissued letters-patent being numbered thirteen hundred and eighteen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

REAR ADMIRAL HIRAM PAULDING.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill—

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HENDRICKS in the chair.) What is the question of order made by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. DAVIS. It is this: The Senator from Massachusetts was standing on the floor for some minutes before he addressed the Chair. The rule is that a member of the Senate shall rise from his seat and address the Chair; but there were five or six members of the Senate who had been standing for some minutes. We are now engaged in a competing race, and I want it carried on according to the rules. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER. The next time—

Mr. DAVIS. I will waive my question of order for the present.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 457, for the relief of Hiram Paulding, rear admiral United States Navy.

Mr. WILSON. That is a bill that has passed the House of Representatives, and can be taken up here at any time, and besides is a private bill. I am very anxious to get up a very important bill, that has got to go to the House of Representatives, and must be passed before we adjourn; for certain laws have expired in regard to the Army, and great offenses committed in the service cannot be punished. I am very anxious to get that bill up to-night. I called it up this afternoon, but yielded to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

Mr. SUMNER. If this takes any time, then I shall yield. I am in favor of my colleague's bill.

Mr. WILSON. This bill can be taken up at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Massachusetts furthest from the Chair, [Mr. SUMNER.]

Mr. SUMNER. I wish the Senate to understand that here is a bill that has already twice passed the Senate, and owing to its arriving at the House—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the merits of the bill are not before the body.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand that; but the question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill, and I am assigning reasons briefly why it should be proceeded with. It has twice passed the Senate, but owing to the late period of the session when it reached the House it was not acted upon there. It has now at this session been acted upon by the House, and come to the Senate. It has been considered by the committee and is reported, and on your table. I see no reason why a distinction should be made between this and the numerous bills that have been acted upon during this evening.

Mr. WILSON. I can state the distinction. This is a House bill. We can at any moment take it up and dispose of it. It is a private bill. I have charge of forty bills, some of which have passed the House of Representatives, some of them original bills here, that I am very anxious to act upon, many of them of a general and public character. My colleague got up a bill to-day and passed it. I am very anxious and I have been struggling all day to get the floor to call up a bill that comes here with an indorsement from the War Department as a matter of absolute necessity to pass, and I am very anxious to pass it to-night so as to get it to the House of Representatives. Having stated this, I withdraw all opposition to the motion that is made by my colleague.

Mr. SUMNER. The bill would have been disposed of in a shorter time than has been occupied in this debate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 457) for the relief of Hiram Paulding, rear admiral United States Navy. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to audit the accounts of Hiram Paulding while a captain in the United States Navy, covering his expenditures in the entertainment of foreign officers and people who visited the frigate St. Lawrence, under his command, at Southampton, not exceeding the sum of $963 92; and also his expenditures in entertaining the officers of the Governments of Bremerhaven and Stockholm, in the years 1848, 1849, and 1850, not exceeding the sum of $2,690.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WALTER C. WHITAKER.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate take up House joint resolution No. 273, for the relief of Walter C. Whitaker.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which declares that Walter C. Whitaker is entitled to pay and allowances as colonel of the sixth Kentucky volunteer infantry from the 9th of September, 1861, to the 1st of January, 1862, inclusive, and directs the Paymaster General to pay him accordingly.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS-MARTIAL IN THE ARMY.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 628.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 628) relative to courts-martial in the Army was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to invest the military commanders of territorial districts with the same authority to convene general courts-martial, to act upon their sentences, and to pardon or mitigate the punishments adjudged thereby, which is now vested in the commanders of departments and armies, by the 65th and 89th of the Rules and Articles of War, or otherwise.

The second section proposes to amend that portion of the first section of the act approved April 10, 1806, which is known and designated as the 66th of the Rules and Articles of War, so that it shall read, and there shall be substituted therefor, as follows:

ART. 66. Every officer commanding a regiment, battalion, detachment, garrison, fort, arsenal, barracks, post, or other place, or body of troops, who has at least one commissioned officer on duty in his command, may appoint for such command courts-martial, consisting of at least one and not more than three commissioned officers, but of the largest number that can be detailed without prejudice to the service, for the trial and punishment of offenses not capital, and may finally pass upon the sentences of such courts, and execute the same if approved by him. And such commander shall have the same authority to pardon or mitigate any punishment adjudged by a court convened by him in accordance herewith as is vested in a regimental or garrison commander by the 89th of the Rules and Articles of War: Provided, however, That such commander shall in no case detail himself upon a court convened in accordance with this article: And provided further, That the jurisdiction of such court and the punishments inflicted thereby shall be limited as provided in the 67th of the Rules and Articles of War.

The third section provides that the process for compelling the attendance of a witness, authorized by section twenty-five of chapter seventy-nine of the act approved March 8, 1863, to be issued by the judge advocate of a court-martial or court of inquiry, may be directed by the judge advocate to any commissioned officer, naming him, on duty in the military department, State, or Territory in which such court is held, or in which the witness resides or is supposed to be. And it is to be the duty of such officer, upon receiving such process, to proceed forthwith duly to serve and execute it by attaching the body of the witness named therein and to conduct him to the place of trial and there deliver him into the custody of the court to be subject to its order. And it is to be the duty of the commander of the military division, department, or district, in which the witness is, or is to be, attached, to furnish the officer making the attachment with such military force as may be necessary and proper to enable him to execute the process, and to guard the witness and conduct him to the place of trial; and the proper expenses incurred by such officer in the transportation of the witness, as well as of such military force as may accompany him, as also in the transportation which may be required for the service of a summons or subpoena as hereinafter provided, are to be paid to such officer upon his official vouchers as in other cases of an officer traveling on duty. Any commissioned officer who may be required to serve a process of attachment as herein provided may also be required by the judge advocate of a court-martial or court of inquiry to make service of a summons or subpoena for the attendance of a witness before such court.

The fourth section provides that murder, assault and battery with an intent to kill, manslaughter, mayhem, wounding by shooting or stabbing with an intent to commit murder, robbery, arson, burglary, rape, assault and battery with an intent to commit rape, forgery, perjury, false swearing, larceny, and assault and battery, shall be punishable by the sentence of a general court-martial, when committed by persons who are in the military service of the United States, or are subject to the Articles of War; and the punishments for such offenses shall never be less than those inflicted by the laws of the State, Territory, or district in which they may have been committed.

The fifth section provides that the offense of drunkenness on duty, when committed by a non-commissioned officer or soldier, which is now punishable, by the 45th Article of War, by corporal punishment only, shall hereafter be punishable at the discretion of the court-martial by which the offender may be tried and convicted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This seems to be a bill of a great deal of importance. My attention had not been drawn to it until the reading of it. It is almost impossible to understand the full force of the bill on its reading. I wish to inquire of the Senator who has it in charge whether it is confined in its operations to the Army.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir; entirely to the Army. I will say to the Senator that many of the laws for the government of the Army expired with the war, and it is very important that this bill should pass. It is entirely for the government of the Army, and is very necessary, and is indorsed very strongly by the Secretary of War. It is absolutely necessary for the maintenance of good order in the Army. Some very hard cases have happened recently in the Army, and it has been found that there is no law and no power to punish them.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

D. B. ALLEN AND COMPANY.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 618.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 618) to provide for the payment of D. B. Allen & Co. for services in carrying the United States mails was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate the sum of $23,000 for the payment of D. B. Allen & Co. for carrying the United States mails between New York and San Francisco in 1864 and 1865, during the suspension of the overland mail service on the overland route, and this sum is to be in full payment for the service.

Mr. CONNESS. There is a very short report accompanying this bill, which I should like to have the Secretary read, and I will ask the Senate to pay attention to it.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. CONNESS, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, on the 20th instant:

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the memorial of D. B. Allen & Co., representing the Atlantic Steamship and the Pacific Mail Steamship companies, for compensation for carrying the United States mails during the suspension of the overland mail service in 1864 and 1865, beg leave to report:

That the suspension of the overland mail service, by reason of Indian hostilities on the plains, took place in 1864; that the amount paid for said service annually was $340,000, while $160,000 annually was paid to the said steamship companies for carrying printed matter and such letters as might be marked to be specially sent that way.

When the suspension occurred, leaving the entire Pacific slope without mails, the Postmaster General applied to the said steamship companies to carry the entire mails during the interruption of the overland route. The companies cheerfully complied, and for a period of about four months all the mails of the United States for the Pacific were safely and expeditiously transported by them. According to the lowest rates for which the United States mails were ever carried by sea to California, namely, $300,000, and deducting the $160,000 received by them for carrying printed matter, they would be entitled to receive some $46,000 for the extra service thus performed. It has been proposed to pay only the rates of freight charged by the steamship lines for carrying the additional mail matter; but the utter injustice of this rule will be seen when it is remembered that the mails have to receive extra care, and that no steamship can leave without having them on board, often causing serious and expensive delays.

Knowing, however, the difficulties attending claims after they have been allowed to remain unpaid for long periods of time, and the indisposition to pay such, and the companies consenting, the committee recommend the payment of half the sum found to be justly due, $23,000, and report a bill for the payment of the same, the passage of which is recommended.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to inquire whether this sum is deducted from the money due to the Overland Mail Company under their contract.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not know anything about that. That is entirely the business of the Postmaster General. The law authorizes the Postmaster General, upon a failure of the mails by reason of the neglect of a contractor, not only to deduct the compensation, but to impose a fine in addition. But in this case it appears the overland mail route was impeded by Indian hostilities, which it was the business of the Government to prevent, and therefore the failure was not by reason of any neglect or negligence on the part of the Overland Mail Company. But with that these companies have nothing to do. The Postmaster General requested these companies to carry the mail, and they did so promptly, and for a period of over four months, for which they have never received a dollar; and according to the lowest rates that were ever paid for transporting those mails, deducting from that what the steamship companies are allowed for transporting printed matter, they would be found to have earned during that time at the lowest computation $46,000. The committee, the companies consenting, agreed to report in favor of half that sum, which is a very cheap disposition of the case for the Government.

Mr. McDUGALL. I am pleased to be able to concur with the Senator from California. I am well informed upon the same subject, and he is altogether right and not wrong this time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD CHENERY.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 588.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 588) for the relief of Richard Chenery.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The Committee on Indian Affairs report an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the entire bill, and if there be no objection the substitute only will be read. The Chair hears no objection.

The Secretary read the substitute, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to examine the claim of Richard Chenery, of California, for $8,000, alleged to be due him for beef furnished to George P. Armstrong, temporary Indian agent for the tribes of Indians on Russian river and at Clearlake, and for which said Armstrong executed receipts, dated March 23 and May 23, 1852, and if he shall believe, from such examination, that the property was furnished in good faith and that the Government is justly indebted to the claimant, as alleged, he shall cause the amount so found to be due to be paid to the said Chenery or his legal representatives: Provided, That in no event shall any greater sum than $8,000 be paid: And provided further, That the sum paid shall be accepted in full and lasting discharge of this claim.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

WISCONSIN AND LAKE SUPERIOR RAILROAD.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 596.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 596) granting lands to the States of Wisconsin and Michigan to aid in the construction of the Wisconsin and Lake Superior railroad and its branch. For the purpose of aiding the Wisconsin and Lake Superior Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Michigan, to construct and operate a railroad from the mouth of the Menomonee river, thence northerly to the waters of the Kewaunee bay, thence northerly to the mineral range, thence northeasterly on the mineral range and southwesterly to the waters of Lake Superior at Bayfield, with a branch from or near the mouth of the Menomonee river to Hudson, Wisconsin, the bill proposes to grant to the States of Wisconsin and Michigan, for the use and benefit of that railroad company, every alternate section of land designated by even numbers to the extent of five sections per mile on each side of the road and branch.

The Committee on Public Lands reported several amendments to the bill. The first amendment was in section one, line ten, after the word "Bayfield" to strike out the words "with a branch from or near the mouth of the Menomonee river to Hudson, Wisconsin."

Mr. RAMSEY. I move to amend the words proposed to be stricken out by inserting after the word "to," where it last occurs in the eleventh line, the words "Stillwater or;" so as to read "Stillwater or Hudson, Wisconsin." The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on striking out the clause as it has been amended.

Mr. RAMSEY. I do not like to interfere with the Senator's bill, but I hope the Senate will not strike out the words proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. HOWE. It is not a very agreeable thing to object to the Government giving one's own State lands, but I am obliged to say that this is a road that our Legislature has not asked for, has not asked to have endowed, and I do not feel authorized to ask for a grant to be made to it. There is a serious objection to granting lands for projects with which they are not prepared to go on, as I fear they are not prepared to go on with this, inasmuch as it withdraws the lands from market, and I prefer to ask only for lands for routes which the Legislature of the State seem to desire. For that reason I shall vote to agree to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. RAMSEY. I can only say that the proposition of the committee would mutilate the proposed road very seriously. It would strike out really the best portion of it. The branch from Stillwater, in Minnesota, or from Hudson, in Wisconsin, to the mouth of the Menomonee, would really be a valuable road, and accommodate all the northern part of Minnesota, giving it an outlet to the waters of Green bay and thence to Lake Michigan. Without this I really think the bill is almost worthless, and I am surprised that the Senator objects to it. However, as it is entirely within his own State, if he persists in objecting to it, and will mutilate his bill and his road in this way, and take the responsibility, I will not persist in urging the amendment any further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee, striking out the clause as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line fifteen, to strike out the word "even" and to insert the word "odd," so as to grant the odd-numbered sections.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line forty-five, to strike out the word "even" and to insert the word "odd."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, line eighteen, after the word "patents" to strike out the words "for one hundred sections of the land within the limits above named," and to insert "conveying to said company the title of said lands on each side of the road so far as completed, not exceeding one hundred sections."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as additional sections the following:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of aiding the Green Bay and Lake Pepin Railway Company in the construction of a railroad from a point on Fox river, at or near the city of Green Bay, Wisconsin, running in a westerly direction to a point on the Mississippi river, opposite the city of Wabasha, Minnesota, as the directors may determine, there is hereby granted to the State of Wisconsin every alternate section of public lands, designated by odd numbers, for ten sections in width on each side of said road. But in case it shall appear that the United States have, when the line or route of said road is definitely fixed, sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of any sections or parts thereof granted as aforesaid, or that the right of preemption or homestead has attached to the same, then it shall be lawful for any agent or agents to be appointed by said State to select, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, from the lands of the United States nearest to the tier of sections above specified, as much land in alternate sections or parts of sections as shall be equal to such lands as the United States have sold or otherwise appropriated, or to which the right of preemption or homestead has attached as aforesaid, which lands, thus selected in lieu of those sold, and to which the right of preemption or homestead has attached as aforesaid, together with sections and parts of sections designated by odd numbers as aforesaid, may be selected to supply any deficiency should any such deficiency exist.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the sections and parts of sections of lands which shall remain to the United States, within ten miles on each side of said road, shall not be sold for less than double the minimum price of the public lands when sold, nor shall any of the said reserved lands become subject to private entry until the same have been offered at public sale at the increased price.

SEC. 11. *And be it further enacted, That whenever the company for whose benefit the grant is made shall have completed ten consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad, supplied with all necessary drains, culverts, crossings, bridges, turnouts, watering places, depots, equipments, furniture, and all other appurtenances of a first-class railroad, patents shall issue conveying the right and title of said lands to the said company on each side of the road, so far as the same is completed and continuous with said completed section, not exceeding the amount aforesaid, and patents shall in like manner issue as each ten miles of said road is completed: *Provided, however, That no patents shall issue for any of said lands unless there shall be presented to the Secretary of the Interior a statement, verified on oath or affirmation, by the president of said company, and certified by the Governor of the State of Wisconsin, that such ten miles have been completed in the manner required by this act, and setting forth, with certainty, the point where said ten miles begin and where the same end, which oath shall be taken before a judge of a court of record of the United States.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the said lands hereby granted shall, when patented, as provided in section 11 of this act, be subject to the disposal of the Green Bay and Lake Pepin Railway Company, for the purposes aforesaid and no other; and the said railroad shall remain a public highway, for the use of the Government of the United States, free from all toll or other charges for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That if said road mentioned in the first section aforesaid is not completed within ten years from the time of the passage of this act, as provided herein, no further patents shall be issued to said company for said lands, and no further sale shall be made; and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States.

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend the amendment by filling the blank in the third line of the twelfth section with the word "eleven."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made if there be no objection. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HENDRICKS. On looking at this bill I am a little surprised to see it here in its present shape. I recollect the consideration that it received in the Committee on Public Lands. I thought it then a singular bill, but it was referred to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] for examination and report, and I see reported as an amendment the ninth and following sections, which I know nothing about, from the committee. Certainly the bill was vague enough in its original shape, granting lands to the State of Wisconsin for use of a company to build roads with this description: "from the mouth of the Menomonee river, thence northerly to the waters of Kewaunee bay; thence northerly to the mineral range, thence northeasterly on the mineral range, and southwesterly to the waters of Lake Superior, at Bayfield;" and this for the benefit of a particular railroad company. And as if that were not enough, an amendment is proposed "for the purpose of aiding the Green Bay and Lake Pepin Railway Company in the construction of a railroad from a point on Fox river, at or near the city of Green Bay, Wisconsin, running in a westerly direction to a point on the Mississippi river, opposite the city of Wabasha, Minnesota, as the directors may determine."

These are the descriptions of the roads to which the grant is proposed to be made. I had not much expected this bill to be reported, for I know how very particular the Senator from Iowa is in his support of railroad grants of public lands; but as I read the description, is any Senator outside of the State of Wisconsin able to tell where these roads will run, what public interest they will subserve, how much lands they will take, what probability or possibility there is of their construction, whether they are grants of land to a railroad that any body believes will be constructed, or whether they are grants of the public lands to be speculated in as has disgraced this system in some of the States of the Northwest? I do not believe this bill ought to pass. I have made some opposition to these railroad grants and have not been successful in it. I have to some extent withheld my opposition; but I feel it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to what I regard as the wonderful features of this bill. Here is a grant for a railroad starting at the mouth of the Menomonee river, running northerly, then northeasterly, thence northeasterly to the mineral range and on the mineral range and from the mineral range until they get to Bayfield. It is impossible to tell where the road will run. The Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of the General Land Office cannot locate the route. I think it is impracticable to execute such a description, and I would like to know from the Senator from Iowa something about this amendment. It is new to me. It strikes me as the better part of the bill. We have made a grant of lands to connect Green Bay with the mineral region, and I believe now there is a railroad running from Green Bay to Marquette, in part the result of a grant of lands. We have a grant now from Hudson to Lake Superior at two points, Superior and Bayfield. We made a grant a year ago from the central part of the State running northwesterly to Bayfield. The place from which that runs is so obscure that I cannot recollect the starting point. How many roads there have been lands granted for to the State of Wisconsin I cannot now recollect, but very many. How many million acres I cannot say without referring to the report of the Commissioner. I was not expecting the bill to come up, and therefore I am not well prepared. I do not believe the bill ought to pass.

Mr. McDUGALL. Ever since the Senator from Indiana presided over the Land Office he has had a great and extreme degree of carefulness about the lands belonging to this Government, fearful they shall be lost, as if they should not come into the possession of our own people. I think he has had an over-degree of carefulness. He may be called the watch-dog of the lands of the Republic. He must, however, remember, and it must be remembered by other Senators, what was said by Mr. Benton on one of the earliest bills granting lands to promote improvements. I think it was a bill to grant land for the improvement of a river in Alabama, and Mr. Benton said something like this—I do not remember the exact language—grant the lands that they may be distributed and go into the hands of the people; it will give a chance for enterprise in the establishment of population. It was never expected that we should hold the public lands to accumulate from their wealth as a nation. We hold them for use, and whenever they can be used to develop the interests of the country our hands should be freed from them.

The country through which this line runs I am as conversant with and more conversant with than the Senator from Indiana, because Lake Superior is not a strange country to me, nor is Lake Pepin, nor any point on the line. In the development of that region, we as a people are largely interested. The lands are nothing as compared with what may be developed by making this grant to those who may go forward and build up great works that enrich the nation. We as a nation grow rich by promoting great enterprises, and as near as I can understand and comprehend this proposition, it is one of those things that will tend to the development of a vastly rich portion of the Northwest. It is not understood perhaps by the Senator from Indiana, for I am not sure that he ever crossed the Wabash. This line would be one of the best lines for the development of our country that I can now think of as falling within the sphere of legislation; and we have not to incur any indebtedness for it, but only to concede what is property of ours, of no value except for the purpose of development.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The Senator from Indiana has asked some information from me in regard to this bill. If I can have his attention I will give him what information I have, and that upon which I acted in reporting it. The bill as originally presented to the Senate provided for a railroad from the mouth of the Menomonee river to Kewaunee bay, and thence to the mineral region northeasterly and around to Bayfield, with a branch from the mouth of the Menomonee river across the State of Wisconsin to Hudson. In that way the branch was the main stem of the road, if length makes the main stem. Upon examination I found no recommendation from any responsible source in Wisconsin asking for this road from the mouth of the Menomonee river to Hudson; but I did find a memorial from the Legislatures of the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, asking for the road provided for in the sections proposed as an amendment to this bill. For that reason that amendment was made.

Now, as to the road from the mouth of the Menomonee river northwardly, thirty-five or forty miles from that river it strikes the mineral region, rich mines of iron, and follows that class of country, according to the information I have, until it reaches nearly to the bay. Proceeding northeasterly from that point about eight miles you strike the copper region in the peninsula, shown by the map extending out into the Lake Superior copper region of the State of Michigan, all of which is now operated without any advantage of railroads except such as the owners of the mines find for themselves. Following around the shores of the lake then southwesterly to Bayfield, it strikes a few miles from Bayfield another very rich deposit of iron, and the entire object and purpose of this bill, so far as the road from the mouth of the Menomonee river northwardly or northeasterly is concerned, is to develop the mineral region of that State and furnish it a means of reaching a market.

The amount of land, according to the information I have, and I think I am correct, that the company will receive is small. Thirty-five or forty miles north of the mouth of the Menomonee river the road strikes the mineral region, and by the terms of the bill mineral lands are excluded. Lands will only be granted for a distance of thirty-five or forty miles from the mouth of the Menomonee river and ten or twenty miles southward of Bayfield. Beyond that there will be very little land, for of course the rest of the road is all through the mineral region. If it be important to develop the mineral productions of that region of country, it is important to pass this bill; if not, not.

With reference to the road through the State of Wisconsin, as I have stated, the recommendation to insert that is based upon a memorial sent to us by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin and the Legislature of the State of Minnesota. The branch was stricken out, there being no such memorial from either State as to that, as I am advised.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Which road was covered by the memorial?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The one provided for in the amendment contained in the latter sections of the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think that is the better road.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think they will both tend to develop the resources of that country; the one the mineral region of Lake Superior, and the other the agricultural region of Wisconsin. It is not for me to say anything in regard to the policy of making land-grants for railroads. That policy has been adopted and carried out already in the State from which I come, and it does not become me to say a word against it. I am not here to say a word against it. Finding, as I supposed, objects to be accomplished by this bill that would tend to increase the wealth and prosperity of our country, it was submitted by me, according to the instructions I received, to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, and approved by him, and reported by me to the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON. There are not more than ten or twelve Senators here. I am willing to remain as long as any one, but I think it is very wrong to legislate with only that number of Senators present. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOWE. I wish the Senator would withdraw that motion. I think he might allow this bill to pass. There is nothing new about the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no hostility to the bill, and I withdraw the motion in the hope that we can get a vote.

Mr. HOWE. I think the debate is over, and I do not believe any division will be called on the bill. I hope none will be.

Mr. HENDERSON. What quantity of land is granted, permit me to ask?

Mr. HOWE. The usual quantity of land.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the length of the road?

Mr. HOWE. One of these roads lies in the State of Michigan, and I cannot tell you the length of that. The other road is about one hundred and eighty miles in length, running from the mouth of the Fox river due west. It is asked for by the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand about that; but what about the other road?

Mr. HOWE. The other road is in the State of Michigan, for the purpose of developing the mineral region there to bring the mineral from the copper and iron region down to the mouth of the Menomonee river. I am not perfectly familiar with the merits of that case. It is asked for by the State of Michigan. It cannot be so long a road as the other.

Mr. HENDERSON. I supposed it was a much more lengthy road, because as I understood the description as read by the Senator from Indiana it is to run north, then northwest, and then southwest.

Mr. HOWE. It has more courses than the other road, but not more miles.

Mr. HENDERSON. I supposed that by running in such a direction, without any defined object such as towns to go by, it might be carried three or four times around the State.

Mr. HOWE. Oh, no. If the Senator would take a glance at the map he would see at once what it is.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If the Senator will look at the map he will find that on reaching Bayfield, on Lake Superior, there is running northeasterly from there what is called the mineral peninsula, a peninsula running perhaps fifty miles into Lake Superior, in which is contained most of the copper mining region now being worked there. You can run in that direction the length of that peninsula, but you cannot run beyond it, or else you run into Lake Superior. When you run the road in that direction so far as the mineral region, which is the length of the peninsula, you must stop. The coast of Lake Superior there runs northeasterly and southwesterly; and southwesterly of the point where you strike this mineral region running north from Kewaunee bay is the town of Bayfield. So there is no danger of running without end. When you start northeast you run perhaps twenty-five to fifty miles. I cannot be certain of the distance through the peninsula, but when you get to the end of the peninsula you strike Lake Superior, and of course you must stop in that direction. Running in a southwesterly direction Bayfield is the fixed terminus. Then it is not a railroad without any end, as the Senator seems to apprehend. If he will consult the map he will see the absolute certainty of the line of the road.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand now: it is very clear. Lake Superior, as I understand, is in form something like a sack of oats on a horse's back, and the object of this bill is to have a road to run entirely on the outside and the inside of the lake all around.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. No; the Senator is entirely mistaken in that idea. If he had before him a map of Lake Superior he would understand the matter much better than he does at this time, I am satisfied.

Mr. HENDERSON. If we can get a vote I shall not of course insist upon the motion to adjourn; but I cannot remain here much longer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This bill ought not to pass really with so thin a Senate; it is not right. If the Senate of the United States choose to pass this bill with the limited information we have on the subject, of course it is satisfactory to me. I have done my duty in briefly explaining what the thing is; but I do not feel that I am doing my duty in letting so important a grant of the public lands pass when the Senate is so thin, when there is not half a quorum present. The effect of this bill is to withdraw from market a vast region of country, in my judgment, without the least possibility of the construction of the road, and I do not feel that it is right to do it.

Mr. CRESWELL. I understand the Senator from Indiana to be dissatisfied that the Senate shall take action on this bill to-night. Do I understand him to move that it be postponed?

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, sir, I do not; but I propose to take the vote of the Senate upon it.

Mr. CRESWELL. Does the gentleman intend to call for a division?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes.

Mr. CRESWELL. That is equivalent to a motion to postpone, so far as this measure is concerned.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then the bill will stand as the unfinished business for to-morrow.

Mr. HOWE. If the Senator from Indiana really wants a division upon this question I will let the bill go over. I do not want to press it to a vote in a thin Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is the Senator from Wisconsin anxious to pass the bill?

Mr. HOWE. I am anxious to pass one part of the bill, because, as I have already informed the Senate, the Legislatures of two States ask for it. I have no manner of interest in the other branch of the bill.

Mr. CRESWELL. It seems to be a sort of omnibus, and I think it can wait till morning.

SAMUEL M. BEATTY.

Mr. WADE. If this bill is to be laid over I desire to submit for the action of the Senate a little bill about as long as your finger, which I should like to have passed. I have been endeavoring to get the floor all day in order to call it up. It is Senate bill No. 463.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the bill before the Senate be laid aside by common consent, and that Senate bill No. 463 be taken up for consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 463) for the relief of Rev. Samuel M. Beatty, of Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $413 60 for Mr. Beatty's services as chaplain from January 12, to April 25, 1863, at the United States military hospital at Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is that reported from a committee?

Mr. WADE. From the Committee on Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. CRESWELL. There is in my charge a joint resolution reported by the joint Committee on the Library, with reference to the exchange of public documents with foreign countries, that I am anxious to get passed. I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 179) to provide for the exchange of certain documents was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that fifty copies of all documents hereafter printed by order of either House of Congress, and fifty copies additional of all documents printed in excess of the usual number, together with fifty copies of each publication issued by any Department or bureau of the Government, shall be placed at the disposal of the joint Committee on the Library, who shall exchange the same, through the agency of the Smithsonian Institution, for such works published in foreign countries, and especially by foreign Governments, as may be deemed by the committee an equivalent; the works received to be deposited in the library of Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOLDIERS' BOUNTIES.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up House bill No. 1049. It simply provides for an extension of the bounty act to the cases of soldiers who have lost their discharge papers.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1049) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations," &c., approved July 28, 1866, giving additional bounties to discharged soldiers in certain cases, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that claims for the additional bounties provided by the act of July 28, 1866, in cases where the claimant's discharge certificate is alleged to have been accidentally lost or destroyed, may be presented to the Second Auditor of the Treasury for settlement; and upon proper application, accompanied with proofs of such loss, the Auditor shall examine and determine the claim as in other like cases of claims settled by him. The payment of any such claim is to be made by a paymaster on the usual form of Treasury certificate, issued by the Auditor and countersigned by the Comptroller. The nature of the proofs required, and the forms in which they shall be presented, are to be prescribed by the Treasury Department.

The Committee on Military Affairs proposed to amend the resolution by inserting after "destroyed" in line six the words "and where the claimant's application for arrears of pay and bounty prior to the passage of the said act has been already settled by the Second Auditor upon proof of loss of discharge."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the officers, non-commissioned officers, privates, musicians, and other volunteers who were organized in Missouri under General Order, No. 95, issued by the President of the United States on the 7th day of November, 1861, under authority of an act in addition to the act to authorize the employment of volunteers to aid in enforcing the laws and protecting the public property, approved July 22, 1861, and accepted into the service of the United States for "during the war," as provided by the act making an appropriation for completing the defenses of Washington, and for other purposes, approved February 13, 1862, and who performed service according to the terms of their enlistment, shall be, and they are hereby, placed on the same footing in respect to pay, bounty, pension, and all other emoluments and allowances, as that occupied by the volunteer troops organized under said act of July 22, 1861, "to authorize the employment of volunteers to aid in enforcing the laws and protecting public property."

Mr. WILSON. I wish the Senator from Missouri would not seek to put that provision on this bill. This is a little bill which has come from the House of Representatives to allow bounty claims to be settled in cases where the certificates of discharge have been lost, and it has been guarded by the amendment very carefully. There is a bill from the House which I propose to get up to-morrow or at the earliest moment I can, which provides that sailors and marines shall stand on the same footing as soldiers who were permitted last year to receive $100 extra bounty, and on that bill this amendment will be appropriate; but I hope the Senator will not insist upon putting it upon this little bill. It has a very big title I know; but it is really a little bill, and I hope it will be allowed to pass to-night, and I will try in the morning to get up the other bill, to which I have alluded. The proposition of the Senator is just in itself; but the Senate is very thin, and to insist upon it now may create some difficulty.

Mr. HENDERSON. It was unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILSON. I think it is right; but it ought not to go on this little bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not attach this amendment to the bill without discussion. It will require a large appropriation of money, while the bill from the House is merely a bill for the relief of soldiers who have lost their discharge papers. I know personally of several soldiers in the State which I represent who have lost their papers, and by reason of that loss the proper bureau here will not listen to their applications for bounty. This bill is merely to remove that difficulty, to enable the bureau to prescribe what rules it may see fit in order to protect the Government, but not to make the loss of the discharge an insuperable barrier to receiving the bounty, if the party can show that he was honorably and fairly discharged, and that he has lost his discharge papers. It is a measure of relief that I think ought to be passed; and I hope it will not be encumbered with anything that may cause discussion, and certainly requires an appropriation of money. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that when his bill comes up on its own merits I shall probably be disposed to give it very favorable consideration, because I think every man who has done service to his country ought to receive pay.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am told by Senators that I ought not to encumber this bill, which is simply to enable a soldier to draw his bounty where he has lost his certificate of discharge. I concur that such a bill ought to be passed; but I offer this amendment to allow bounty to persons in my State who served faithfully for three years and four months in this war, who fought in every section of the country, but who, on account of the merest of all technicalities, have been denied a single dollar of bounty; while other troops who served for little more than half the time that they did, for two years only, were paid under the act of 1861 $100 bounty, and under the act that we passed at the last session $100 more. This amendment only proposes to pay these troops the $100 allowed under the act of 1861. I do not ask that they be advanced to the footing occupied by the other troops of the United States under the act of the last session. This amendment, as I offer it, has a unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILSON. It is right, no doubt of it.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is an act of justice that it seems to me ought no longer to be denied to these troops. Every time I offer it some objection is made. Two years ago I got it inserted on the miscellaneous appropriation bill, and it was adopted by both Houses; but unfortunately that appropriation bill was then lost, as Senators will remember, on account of the disagreement between the two Houses upon the celebrated amendment of Mr. Davis, of Maryland. In that way I have been compelled again and again to lose this proposition. It seems to me that it is now quite appropriate upon a bill which proposes to do justice to soldiers in regard to their bounty, to enable them to draw bounty where their papers are lost. It seems to me proper on such a bill to insert a provision to give a bounty to troops of my State who served as well as any troops, and longer than many who have already received bounty, who have their papers in their pockets and are ready to produce them at any time. I offer the proposition now in precisely the form in which it was recommended by the Military Committee and reported to this body at the last session, and in the same form in which it was passed by both branches of the last Congress, when, after having been agreed to by both Houses, it failed to become a law in consequence of the loss of the bill upon which it was put.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I have no objection to the amendment in itself, but the Senator is aware of the condition of the Senate; and if he can assure me that it will be adopted and not defeat the bill I am entirely willing that it shall go on it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why should it defeat the bill?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not want to lose the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I have no doubt it is right; but I was afraid there would be objection to it, and that thus it might cause the defeat of the bill. The measure is right in itself, and I shall not object to the amendment if nobody else does.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I now propose to amend the bill further by inserting the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the provisions of sections twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, and sixteen of the act approved July 23, 1866, relating to additional bounties to enlisted soldiers, &c., shall be, and hereby are, made applicable to seamen of the United States Navy and marines enlisted for corresponding periods, the said bounties to be paid in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as provided in those sections so far as the same are applicable, and otherwise in accordance with laws regulating the payment of other bounties to seamen and marines.

I will simply say that this section has passed the House of Representatives as a separate bill; but they have used the word "pensions" by mistake instead of "bounty." Our committee have agreed unanimously to report it; but as this bill has already been amended, it may as well go upon this bill in proper shape.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does it require three years service for marines as well as for those in the military service?

Mr. WILSON. It puts them on the same footing, applying to marines exactly the same provisions which the law now extends to soldiers.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The original proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts was obviously right, and we could understand it very easily; but now that it is to branch off into general legislation I object. There are not enough here to pass on such measures, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at ten o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 27, 1867.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM ADAMS, D. D., of New York.

On motion by Mr. LANE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Commissioner of Agriculture, submitting a memorandum of matter contained in the Agricultural Report of 1866, for the information of the Committee on Printing; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CHANDLER presented a petition of citizens of Michigan, who were soldiers in the late war and lost a leg in the service, praying the passage of an act for the relief of soldiers who, having lost a leg in the service, have obtained an artificial leg at their own expense; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented a memorial addressed to him by Charles H. Bell, praying that a pension may be granted to Caroline Swartwout, sister of the late Commodore Swartwout, United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPRAGUE presented a petition of citizens of Rhode Island, praying for the removal of the five per cent. tax on manufactures; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

LAWS RELATIVE TO THE NAVY.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to postpone all prior orders, and take up Senate bill No. 509.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section declares that so much of the act to establish the grade of vice admiral in the United States Navy, approved December 21, 1864, as provides that the vice admiral shall be the ranking officer in the Navy of the United States, shall be considered as having been repealed by the act approved July 25, 1866, establishing the grade of admiral, who shall be the ranking officer of the Navy; and the sixth section of the act last named is so amended that the secretary of the admiral shall be entitled to the rank, sea pay, and allowances of a lieutenant commander in the Navy, such pay and allowances to date from the acceptance of his appointment, deducting any pay already received by him under that appointment.

Section two proposes to repeal the acts of August 5, 1856, and March 3, 1859, giving the force of law to certain general orders of the Navy Department establishing the relative rank of staff officers, and to provide that hereafter the relative rank of staff officers shall be established by regulations of the Navy Department.

The third section provides that the number of midshipmen authorized by law at the Naval Academy shall be exclusive of those who, on the 5th of March of each year, shall be members of the graduating class of that year; and repeals so much of the act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the education of naval constructors and steam engineers, and for other purposes, approved July 4, 1864, as provides that cadet engineers, when appointed, shall be under eighteen years of age, and shall have been employed at least two years in the actual fabrication of steam machinery.

Section four provides that the officers of the volunteer naval service who are or may be transferred to the regular Navy, shall be credited with the sea service performed by them as volunteer officers, and shall receive all the benefits of such duty, in the same manner as if they had been during such service in the regular Navy.

It is provided by the fifth section that the storekeeper at the Naval Academy shall hereafter be detailed from the paymasters' corps of the Navy, and shall have authority, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, to procure clothing and other necessities for the midshipmen, in the same manner as supplies are now furnished the Navy, to be issued under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Section sixth proposes to amend the fourth section of the act to provide a more efficient discipline for the Navy, approved March 2, 1855, so that the authority therein given to the commander of any vessel in the Navy to convene summary courts-martial, shall require the previous order of the Secretary of the Navy, and may be suspended or withheld by him, or by the commander of the squadron to which the vessel belongs, if without the United States.

Section seven provides that to carry out the provisions of the eleventh section of the act for the better government of the Navy of the United States, approved July 17, 1862, directing the surplus income from the naval pension fund to "be applied to the making of further provision for the comfort of disabled officers, seamen, and marines," there shall be paid out of that fund to every person who, from age or infirmity, is disabled from sea service, but who has served as an enlisted person in the Navy or Marine corps for the period of twenty years, and not been discharged for misconduct, in lieu of being provided with a home in the Naval Asylum, Philadelphia, if he shall so elect, a sum equal to one half the pay of his rating at the time he was discharged, to be paid to him quarterly, under the direction of the Commissioner of Pensions; and applications for such pension are to be made to the Secretary of the Navy, who, upon being satisfied that the applicant comes within the provisions of the act, is to certify the fact to the Commissioner of Pensions, and that certificate is to be his warrant for making the payment. Any disabled person who has served in the Navy or Marine corps as an enlisted man for a period not less than ten years, and not been discharged for misconduct, may apply to the Secretary of the Navy for aid from the surplus income of the naval pension fund; and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to convene a board of not less than three naval officers, one of whom shall be a surgeon, to examine into the condition of the applicant and to recommend a suitable amount for his relief, and for a specified time, and upon the approval of such recommendation by the Secretary of the Navy and certificate thereof to the Commissioner of Pensions, the amount shall be paid in the same manner as is provided in this section for the payment to persons disabled by long service in the Navy; but no allowance so made is to exceed the rate of a pension for full disability corresponding to the grade of the applicant, nor, if in addition to a pension, exceed one fourth the rate of such pension.

Section eight provides that the commandant of the Marine corps shall have the rank and pay of a brigadier general of the Army.

The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was in lines six, seven, eight, and nine of section six, to strike out the words "previous order of the Secretary of the Navy, and may be suspended or withheld by him, or by the commander of the squadron to which the vessel belongs, if without the United States," and in lieu thereof to insert "approval of the proceedings by the Commander-in-Chief, when present in port, and in his absence, that of the senior officer present, in all cases before carrying the sentence into execution; and in all cases where the sentence involves loss of pay, that part of such sentence shall be subject to the approval or disapproval of the Secretary of the Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the number of midshipmen allowed at the Naval Academy shall be one for every member and Delegate of the House of Representatives, one for the District of Columbia, ten at large, and twenty-five to be selected annually from boys enlisted in the Navy, and who have been one year in the service on board a naval vessel, should so many be found qualified: Provided, however, That the reduction in the number of midshipmen herein provided for shall not affect any already appointed: And provided further, That so much of the act of July 14, 1862, and of July 16, 1862, as provides for the number of midshipmen that may be appointed to the Naval Academy, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to amend this amendment by striking out "twenty-five" in line four and inserting "ten."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Are the ten at large appointed annually?

Mr. GRIMES. They are.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. In line thirteen of section one I move to strike out the word "commander;" so as to read: "the secretary of the admiral shall be entitled to the rank, sea pay, and allowances of a lieutenant in the Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. After the word "Navy" in the third line of the fourth section I move to amend by adding "or Marine corps;" and at the end of the section I move to insert the words "or Marine corps."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to add to the fourth section the words "and all marine officers shall be credited with the length of time they may have been employed as officers or enlisted men in the volunteer service of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I move further to amend the bill by striking out the second section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

Mr. HARRIS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 606) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts," approved July 27, 1866, to report it with amendments. As this is a bill that is unanimously agreed upon by the Committee on the Judiciary, consisting, as amended, of a single section of some importance, and, as I think, it can be passed in a few moments, I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act approved July 27, 1866, so as to provide that where a suit is now pending or may hereafter be brought in any court of any State lately in insurrection in which there is controversy between a citizen of such State and a citizen of another State, and the matter in dispute exceeds $500, exclusive of costs, such citizen of another State, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, if he will make and file in such State court an affidavit stating that he has reason to and does believe that, from prejudice or local influence, he will not be able to obtain justice in such State court, may, at any time before the final hearing or trial of the suit, file a petition in such State court for the removal of the suit into the next circuit court of the United States to be held in the district where the suit is pending, and offer good and sufficient surety for his entering in such court, on the first day of its session, copies of all process, pleadings, depositions, testimony, and other proceedings in the suit, and doing such other appropriate acts as, by the act of July 27, 1866, are required to be done upon the removal of a suit into the United States court: and it shall be thereupon the duty of the State court to accept the surety and proceed no further in the suit: and the copies being so entered in such court of the United States, the suit shall there proceed in the same manner as if it had been brought there by original process; and all the provisions of the act to which this act is amendatory respecting any bail, attachment, injunction, or other restraining process, and respecting any bond of indemnity, or other obligation given upon the issuing or granting of any attachment, injunction, or other restraining process, are to apply with like force and effect in all respects to similar matters, process, or things in the suits for the removal of which this act provides.

The second section provides that the pleadings in the suit, or copies thereof when transferred, shall have, in the courts of the United States, for evidence and for all purposes whatever, the same force and effect which the original pleadings would have had in the State court under the laws and practice thereof existing at the time of the commencement of the suit therein: and in all other respects the rules of evidence applicable to the suit, in its progress and on its trial, prevailing in the State court, under the laws and practice of the State and its courts in force at the time of the commencement of the suit therein, shall be applicable to it, and shall govern it in the courts of the United States, any law or practice to the contrary notwithstanding; but no person is to be excluded from testifying, or be deemed incompetent as a witness, on account of his color or race, in any suit or proceeding provided for by this act.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was in section one, line seven, to insert "State" before "court;" after "court" to strike out "of any State lately in insurrection;" and in line nine to strike out "such" and insert "the;" so as to make the clause read:

That where a suit is now pending or may hereafter be brought in any State court in which there is controversy between a citizen of the State and a citizen of another State, and the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of $500, exclusive of costs, such citizen of another State, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the second section of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 562) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts," approved July 27, 1866, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the motion to print two hundred and fifty additional copies of the bill (S. No. 626) to authorize the creation of a Board of Survey of the Navy, reported in favor of printing the same; and the report was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the resolution to print ten thousand additional copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting to the House of Representatives the report of James W. Taylor upon gold and silver mines east of the Rocky mountains, for the use of the Senate, one thousand of the same to be placed at the disposal of the Secretary of the Treasury, reported it without amendment, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 92.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive reports of committees as still in order.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 265) amendatory of the act approved July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims," &c., reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following subjects, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

A petition of citizens of New Hampshire, praying such an amendment of the Constitution of the United States as will prohibit legislation in any State or Territory making a distinction among the citizens thereof on account of race, birth, or color;

A petition of employés of the Executive Departments of the Government, praying that the term of office now held in any of the Departments by honorably discharged soldiers may be fixed to continue during good behavior;

Resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of such an amendment of the Constitution of the United States as will provide for the election of United States Senator by the qualified electors of the State Legislatures; and

A memorial of William Cornell Jewett, praying that Hannibal Hamlin may be declared by Congress constitutional President of the United States of America, under section two, article one, of the Constitution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2) to amend the act declaring the officer who shall act as President of the United States in case of vacancies in the office both of President and Vice President, approved March 1, 1792; and to whom was also referred a resolution of the Senate instructing the committee to inquire what additional legislation is necessary to provide for the succession to the presidential office in case of the death or disability of the person upon whom it may devolve by the Constitution or the laws, report them back with a recommendation that they be indefinitely postponed. There is some difference of opinion in the committee as to the character of the law which ought to be passed, and it is so late in the session that it is thought no bill can be matured at the present session. The convening of the new Congress on the 4th of March it was thought by the committee obviated, perhaps, the necessity of immediate action. With that view this report is made to postpone the matter at the present session.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am very sorry indeed that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary moves the indefinite postponement of this bill. It seems to me one of very great importance.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I stated the reason, that there was some difference of opinion in the committee as to the proper law which should be passed. A bill has come to us from the House on this subject, but it is so late in the session that the committee were of opinion that a proper bill could not be matured and passed during the few remaining days of this session; and as Congress is to convene again on the 4th of March next, it obviated the necessity which was supposed to exist to some extent for legislation at all, as we shall then have an organized Congress; but at any rate the subject could be then considered. The committee are not opposed to some action on the subject; but it was in consequence of the late period at which the House bill came to us that we thought it better not to try to have action at the present session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish the Senator would let it go over.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have no objection. Let it go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be pursued.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 589) to declare valid and conclusive certain proclamations of the President and acts done in pursuance thereof, or of his orders, in the suppression of the late rebellion against the United States, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate to investigate and consider what legislation, if any, is necessary to secure the enforcement of the laws and the protection of citizens of the United States in their civil and political rights in the Territory of Utah, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be postponed indefinitely; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported adversely thereon, and moved their indefinite postponement; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. No. 301) regulating the service of final process in suits at law and of orders and decrees in equity of courts of the United States in places out of their jurisdictional limits;

A bill (S. No. 572) fixing the time for choosing electors of President and Vice President of the United States; and

A bill (S. No. 599) relinquishing the claim of the United States to certain real estate in Washington city of which Caroline Hill died seized.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am also directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire what legislation is necessary for the protection of loyal citizens of the United States whose property has been confiscated by the so-called confederate government, to report it back with a recommendation that it be postponed indefinitely. Several bills upon that subject have already been passed, and it was thought by the committee that all the action had taken place which we could enact at the present session.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 956) to enforce the thirteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, have directed me to report it back and recommend its indefinite postponement. The same subject was before the committee in the form of a resolution, which was reported back with the same recommendation. We think the whole subject is covered by the civil rights bill.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. The joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) instructing the Secretary of the Interior to order a survey of a bridge or bridges across the Potomac river was referred, evidently by mistake, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It should have been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I move that the first-named committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 489.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports from committees are still in order.

Mr. HOWARD. I have a report to make, and it is one in which the Senator from Kansas is somewhat interested. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 267) for the reduction of the military reservation of Fort Riley, and to grant land for bridge purposes to the State of Kansas, have had it under consideration, and directed me to report it back and recommend its passage; and I ask the Senate to take it into present consideration. It will occupy no time I apprehend.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the joint resolution the day it is reported.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senate yesterday had under consideration a bill to establish a department of education. We did not complete it; and I trust we shall be permitted to take it up and finish it this morning; and reluctant as I am to object to considering this report at this time, I feel compelled to do so, and move to proceed to the consideration of the bill which was under consideration at the expiration of the morning hour yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the consideration of this resolution, it lies over under the rule. Reports are still in order.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 274) for the relief of Charles M. Wilder, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) for the relief of James J. Hudnall, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1168) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth P. Chipman, widow of Major Charles Chipman, deceased, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1095) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a certain draft to W. W. Potter, late acting military agent of the State of New York, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the memorial of Charles H. Bell, reported a bill (S. No. 631) granting a pension to Caroline Swartwout; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 825) for the relief of Henry Rudd, of Henry county, Iowa, reported it without amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1182) to establish certain post roads, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, reported it with amendments.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. WILSON. I move that when the Senate take a recess to-day it be until seven o'clock.

Mr. SUMNER. Mention the hour.

Mr. WILSON. I will say half past four or five o'clock.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Half past four if we are to meet at seven.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the recess be from five o'clock to seven. I desire to have a short time this evening for the consideration of some bills reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Several SENATORS. Say from five until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. WILSON. Very well; I will agree to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate take a recess from five o'clock in the afternoon until seven and a half o'clock in the evening, and then consider subjects reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have some little bills from the Indian Committee, and I have in vain attempted to get the floor for the last two weeks, but it is an utter impossibility for me to do so, and I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will accept an amendment to his motion so as to allow bills from the Indian Committee to be considered also.

Mr. WILSON. I will divide the time with you.

Mr. HENDERSON. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope no special order or order of business will be fixed for this evening. There are two bills from the Committee on Finance that must be passed to-day in order to clear the docket for the tax bill. If Senators will not make speeches upon them, but will take the bills as reported, we shall get through with them very easily. One is the bill in regard to the compound-interest notes, and the other is the miscellaneous appropriation bill; the latter especially, being bulky, must be got out of the way in order to be enrolled in time before the adjournment. I therefore shall object to any special order until those bills are first disposed of.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest to the Senator to allow this order to be made, and then, if the bills to which he refers are not disposed of by this evening, I will yield to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. With that understanding I am perfectly willing to agree to the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that at five o'clock to-day the Senate take a recess until seven and a half o'clock, and then proceed to the consideration of bills reported from the Military Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN CLAIMS IN UTAH.

Mr. POMEROY. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 489.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports, the introduction of bills is in order.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I insist on the motion that I made a few moments ago, to proceed to the consideration of the bill that was under consideration during the morning hour yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] had interposed a motion before the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. POMEROY. And I also had interposed a motion before the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HENDERSON. I insist on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Missouri as having made the earliest motion in the recollection of the Chair. It is not, of course, a matter of right for any Senator to insist upon that. Any Senator who gets the floor is entitled of course to have his motion heard; but it has been the practice of the Chair, deeming it fairer to all concerned, to recognize the one who first makes a motion, although other business is interposed afterward. The Chair thinks the Senator from Missouri the first in order of time, and he now moves to proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 92.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain claims out of the balance of an appropriation for the payment of necessary expenditures in the service of the United States for Indian affairs in the Territory of Utah. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Henry Standish, Dimick B. Huntington, Harrison Severe, and Buchanan & Co., the sums which may be found due them on the settlement of their accounts with the United States for Indian affairs in Utah Territory, not to exceed the sums, respectively, of $193 50, $174 75, $1,898 66, and $702, which are to be paid out of any of the unexpended balance of the appropriation made by the act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1860, approved May 24, 1860, for the payment of the late Indian agents in Utah, and an act to authorize a change of appropriations for the payment of necessary expenditures in the service of the United States for Indian affairs, approved February 22, 1862.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to say that there are six or eight or perhaps ten bills pending here reported by the Committee on Claims, a committee which I believe has not occupied the attention of the Senate more than an hour during this session; and I should like to have the Senate give us an hour or two to-morrow evening to dispose of those claims. Perhaps it is not worth while to interpose a motion, but I give notice now in the hope that the Senate will acquiesce in it to-morrow evening.

FORT RILEY MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 489.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to know what has become of my motion. I objected when the Senator from Michigan made a report to the consideration of the measure reported by him, and I objected for the purpose of bringing up the department of education bill. I certainly did not wish to interpose an objection to prevent his bringing up his bill and then have other bills considered. I made the objection to the consideration of the report to-day for the very purpose of bringing up this bill to provide for a department of education, and made a motion to that effect. It places the bill I have in charge and myself rather in an unpleasant situation to object to the consideration of the bill offered by the Senator from Michigan, and then to have others come in.

Mr. POMEROY. I had made a motion to take up Senate bill No. 489 before the Senator from Michigan made his report. I yielded to the Senator from Michigan to make that report. The Senator from Illinois objected to the consideration of that report, and then I renewed the motion which I had previously made to take up this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Illinois as pressing his motion after the objection was made. The Chair then called for reports of committees, the introduction of bills, &c., to which the Chair understood the Senator from Illinois assented. Otherwise, if the Senator had pressed the motion, the Chair certainly would have felt it his duty to put it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I did not design to press the motion to interfere with any incidental matter; but I did design to press it against the consideration of other bills. I certainly would not object to a bill being considered reported by the Senator from Michigan, and then consent to one being considered reported by somebody else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated then that he recognized the Senator from Missouri. He stated the fact that the Senator from Missouri had made the first motion according to the recollection of the Chair; that the Senator from Missouri was first, the Senator from Kansas next, and the Senator from Illinois next, the Chair remarking that this of course gave no real right to the floor.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish to withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill offered by the Senator from Michigan, because it places me in a very awkward position before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks for the present consideration of the joint resolution reported by him from the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there any objection to its present consideration?

Mr. POMEROY. Of course I shall not object to that resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 267) for the reduction of the military reservation of Fort Riley, and to grant land for bridge purposes to the State of Kansas. It declares that the southwestern boundary of the military reservation of Fort Riley, in the State of Kansas, is to be hereafter the channel of the Republican river, from its mouth to the point where the river intersects the present western line of the reservation, and it proposes to grant the land released from the reservation, and lying between the Smoky Hill and Republican rivers, to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of a bridge over the Republican river on the public highway leading through the present reservation; but upon the express condition that this grant is to be accepted by the State of Kansas with a guarantee given by the State, by an act of the Legislature, that the bridge shall be kept up and maintained in good condition, and shall be free to the use of the Government of the United States for all transit purposes forever without tolls or charges, and on such acceptance and guarantee being filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, together with the certificate of the Governor of Kansas that a good and permanent bridge has been constructed over the Republican river, it is to be the duty of the Secretary to issue a patent for the land granted to the State of Kansas, or to such company as may be authorized by act of the Legislature of the State to construct the bridge.

Mr. JOHNSON. How much land is granted?

Mr. POMEROY. About two thousand acres.

Mr. SHERMAN. That land must be of immense value. I will agree to build all the bridges in Kansas for that.

Mr. POMEROY. The Government built a bridge there at great expense, and it remained a year, when a flood took it off. This being a military reservation, the State could not build a bridge there; a corporation could not build it; but the commander of the fort permitted a citizen to build a sort of temporary bridge, which has now also been taken off by a flood. The State proposes, with this assistance from the Government, to build a permanent bridge and keep it forever in repair, and make it free to the Government.

Mr. CONNESS. I think if this grant is made for a bridge it should not only be made free to the Government, but to the people, and I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "Government," in the sixteenth line, the words "and people." To make a grant of land for the construction of a bridge is a new thing; but if it may guarantee and establish a great public highway to the people, then there is perhaps sufficient object in it.

Mr. POMEROY. I should be in favor of that amendment myself if this donation was anything like enough to build the bridge. It will aid in building the bridge. We give donations to railroads; but we never give enough to build the road. If we did, we would make the road free forever; but notwithstanding the aid that the Government gives to our railroads and our bridges the companies still charge for transportation. I suppose, indeed I know, the people of my State would be in favor of having this a free bridge. I have no doubt of it; but to require it to be free upon a donation of this quantity of land is requiring too much, I think. It is to be free to the Government, and all officers of the Government, and all departments of the Government, and all kinds of transportation of the Government. The officers of the Government allowed an individual to put up a bridge at this place, which the flood has taken off, and they were paying about ten thousand dollars a year toll. This relinquishes to the Government all tolls. I think it would embarrass, and perhaps destroy, the building of the bridge to require it to be free to everybody for all time to come. No one would undertake to build the bridge with this amount of land.

Mr. CONNESS. We have no knowledge of how much land is given except as the Senator states, and he only guesses at it.

Mr. POMEROY. There is an exact map in the hands of the Military Committee.

Mr. CONNESS. We have no knowledge of its value. It may be a piece of very valuable land, and I have no doubt that it is from its having been reserved; and it will be remembered that it is not individuals that are to build this bridge, but the great State of Kansas. If the Legislature of Kansas are not sufficiently interested in behalf of the Commonwealth and in behalf of public travel and communication to accept this grant upon this condition, then they can go on and build the bridge without the grant and charge toll for it. It will be in the shape of an alternative proposition, which they may or may not accept. I think it is likely that the people of Kansas will thank the Senator for accepting the amendment. I do not know anything that would be more acceptable to them; and if the State shall be called upon to bear a small burden in behalf of the people it is only performing one of its duties to the people of that State, and also to the people who are traveling there.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, House bill No. 1049, which is now before the Senate.

Mr. HOWE. I was under the impression that the unfinished business was Senate bill No. 596.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The record shows that that bill was laid aside, and that at the time of the adjournment House bill No. 1049 was before the Senate as the unfinished business.

Mr. HOWE. I thought the other bill was laid aside informally. I believe the recollection of the Clerk and the Journal will bear me out.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Treasury note bill was the unfinished business.

Mr. HOWE. I only want to take a vote on the bill to which I have alluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that this is the unfinished business, taken up on motion. The bill to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers was at first laid aside informally and other bills were taken up and passed, and then this bill now named was taken up on motion and was under debate at the time of the adjournment. According to the usage of the Senate, the Chair thinks it is the unfinished business of yesterday and takes precedence of the special order.

Mr. POMEROY. I should like the Senator from California to withdraw the motion to amend and allow the vote to be taken on the passage of this bridge bill. I do not want to send it back to the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. I cannot consent without a vote of the Senate to allow the note bill to be laid aside, because it is important to dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the unfinished business of yesterday, House bill No. 1049, is before the Senate, and the question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts, which will be read.

Mr. POLAND. Last evening I moved to take up the resolution that I offered some days ago, instructing the Sergeant-at-Arms to have monuments erected in the Congressional Cemetery in memory of Senators who have died since July 4, 1861, in order to get a vote upon it, and at the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio I withdrew my motion upon the understanding that I was to call it up this morning and have a vote upon it. I do not desire to have any debate upon it. I merely wish to have the resolution taken up and voted upon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not understand that it was to be taken up after the morning hour. I said to the Senator that I had no doubt he could call it up during the morning hour.

Mr. POLAND. If you will allow me to take it up and have a vote upon it, if any debate arises I will not ask to consume any time with it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is at the pleasure of the Senate. I certainly shall oppose taking up anything now but the bill to which I have referred. I am sorry to be compelled to do so.

Mr. POLAND. I should prefer to hold the Senator from Ohio to the understanding we had.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not so understand it. Does the Senator say that I agreed he should take it up after the morning hour?

Mr. POLAND. There was nothing said, I believe, in relation to the morning hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly did not so understand it, and no one about me so understood it.

Mr. POLAND. I merely ask to have the resolution taken up and have a vote upon it. It will take no time to dispose of it.

Mr. WILSON. I believe the bill which is properly before the Senate is a bill of mine, and that the bill of the Senator from Ohio is not up now. But as the bill on which we adjourned last night is the one in order and is now before us, and as I propose to occupy a portion of the time this evening, and do not wish to crowd upon the Senator from Ohio, who has a large amount of business, I know, from his committee, I am willing that it shall go over until the evening.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought the compound-interest note bill was the bill before the Senate. If not, I move to postpone all prior orders with a view to take up House bill No. 1220. I will state to Senators that I desire to get two public bills out of the way to-day. They are as much interested as I am; it makes no more difference to me than to them. It is important to get the financial bills through as rapidly as possible. This bill relating to the compound-interest notes must be passed in some form, and the miscellaneous appropriation bill should be disposed of to-day. If Senators will remember the amount of time that is sometimes consumed uselessly in debate I have no doubt it will enable them to pass a great many bills; at least these two ought to be passed to-day. I therefore move to postpone all prior orders and take up House bill No. 1220, to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to ask the Senator if he will consent, when his bill is taken up, that my resolution be called up to take a vote upon it? I ask nothing more.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall make no objection if it can be done by unanimous consent. That is all I can say. I have no right to control the business of the Senate, and do not propose to do so; but I certainly shall make no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I hope the Senator will consent now to let his bill lie over for a moment that I may get a vote on this resolution. I stated last night the object of offering the resolution. It was to relieve the Sergeant-at-Arms from embarrassment. He is constantly written to by the friends of the several Senators who died since 1861 to know why monuments have not been provided as has heretofore been the practice, and he desires the instruction of the Senate whether he shall erect the monuments, as has been the practice heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont suggests that the bill now before the Senate be laid aside informally by unanimous consent for the purpose of taking up the resolution indicated by him.

Mr. WILSON. I wish simply to say to the Senator that I feel it my duty to oppose his motion and to object to it. I think if there be anything in this country that is a monument of dishonor and disgrace to the nation it is these monuments to the memory of Congressmen at the Congressional Cemetery. It is creditable to the country that during the last six years we have not erected any of those monstrosities. I hope, therefore, the resolution will not be taken up now, and that the erection of these monuments will be stopped and stopped forever.

Mr. POLAND. Well, vote it down.

Mr. WILSON. I should not like to let it go without some debate. I think it is a matter of that importance that we ought to debate it. I do not think the Senator ought to press it now, and I feel constrained to object to it.

Mr. POLAND. I am not the advocate of having any monuments erected; I have not said a word in favor of the resolution; but I think the Sergeant-at-Arms is entitled to have the direction of the Senate, and not be subjected to the importunities of the friends of those deceased Senators, who are constantly calling upon him to know why these monuments are not erected. He merely desires that the Senate should instruct him whether to erect them or not. He has no choice about it, except to be relieved from his embarrassment.

Mr. SUMNER. I would ask what the expense of each monument is.

Mr. POLAND. I know nothing about it.

Mr. SUMNER. A good many hundred dollars, I suppose?

Mr. POLAND. I have no knowledge with reference to it. The Sergeant-at-Arms merely wishes to be directed by the Senate whether he shall go forward and erect the monuments or whether he shall omit it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to know if this subject has been referred to any committee, and if there has been any report or any estimate as to the amount to be expended, any information submitted to the Senate as to the practice that has heretofore existed. I do not feel quite willing to vote on a subject of this kind without some knowledge in reference to the matter contained in the resolution. To simply authorize the Sergeant-at-Arms to construct monuments without any limitation as to the expense or anything of that kind, to follow the suggestions of the friends of the deceased, would seem to me to be rather loose legislation, and it appears to me that the Sergeant-at-Arms has a sufficient excuse when he answers to the friends of the deceased that he has no authority from the Senate to construct these monuments.

Mr. POLAND. So far as I know the practice has been for the Sergeant-at-Arms to erect these monuments, and they are all of a given fashion, all alike; there is no variety. What the expense of the erection of these monuments is I have no knowledge. As I learn, the uniform practice had been for the Sergeant-at-Arms to erect one of these monuments like those that had been erected before; but for some reason this has been delayed since 1861, and eight or ten members of the Senate have died since that time, and the Sergeant-at-Arms does not now feel at liberty to go on under the former practice without a vote of the Senate; and he merely asks the Senate to instruct him whether to erect them or not.

Mr. WILSON. I feel constrained to object to going on to-day with this matter; and I wish simply to say in regard to it that I hope the subject will be taken up at a time when we have leisure to consider it carefully. I do not think we ought to occupy the time with it now. If we have monuments hereafter, let them be monuments of taste, worthy of the country, and not these things that are dishonorable to the country, and which everybody who looks upon them wishes were out of that; and perhaps we might not only do that, but go back and erect in their places fitting monuments to members of Congress who have died. But I do hope we shall never go any further in this direction now. It is a subject that ought to be considered carefully, and therefore I must object to going on with it now.

Mr. SUMNER. As I understand, originally there was a reason for these monuments. They were placed over the remains of those who died at Washington and were buried here. Afterward, when the habit was established of carrying home the remains of our associates who died here, the monuments were continued. They were, however, simple cenotaphs. They did not cover the remains of the dead. That habit, as I understand, was continued down to 1861, when it ceased. Meantime, a large number of our associates have died; and the question is, whether we shall revive this old habit of placing a cenotaph in an unvisited burial-ground. Now, it does seem to me that the very cessation of the building of these monuments is like a notice or a warning to us that we had better cease any such appropriation. If our associates who have been thus called away and who are not buried in Washington are to be commemorated in any monumental way, by any form of monument, I would suggest a tablet, if you please, in the Capitol, which could be seen by everybody who comes here; but why place an uncouth cenotaph in an unvisited burial-ground, for that is the whole case—I may add at very considerable cost. It seems to me that the time has come when we should in a formal way stop that appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. This debate is out of order. I call for the reading of the bill before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The only question before the Senate is the bill of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. POLAND. There seems to be quite a difference of opinion in reference to this matter. I ask to have this resolution referred to the Committee on the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, if it be in order, for a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the motion by unanimous consent. It is moved that the resolution indicated by the Senator from Vermont be taken up and referred to the Committee on the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. No objection being made, that order will be entered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1226) for the relief of Captain William McKean, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that Mr. MARTIN WELKER, of Ohio, had been appointed one of the managers at the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 234) to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company, in place of Mr. ENON C. INGERSOLL, of Illinois, excused from service at said conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 457) for the relief of Hiram Paulding, rear admiral United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 1068) for the relief of Mary A. Cross;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 294) for the relief of Obadiah Aderton;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 273) for the relief of Walter C. Whitaker; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) for the relief of the mother of Charles O. Rowohl.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1220) to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes; which had been reported by the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out all of the original House bill after the enacting clause, in the following words:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to redeem compound-interest notes with the accrued interest, and to issue therefor United States legal-tender notes without interest, not exceeding in amount $100,000,000.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That for the purpose of redeeming and retiring any compound-interest notes outstanding, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue temporary loan certificates in the manner prescribed by section four of the act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes and for the redemption or funding thereof, and for funding the floating debt of the United States," approved February 25, 1862, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding three per cent. per annum, principal and interest payable in lawful money on demand; and said certificates of temporary loan may constitute and be held by any national bank holding or owning the same as a part of the reserve provided for in sections thirty-one and thirty-two of the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864: Provided, That not less than two fifths of the entire reserve of such bank shall consist of lawful money of the United States: And provided further, That the amount of such temporary certificates at any time outstanding shall not exceed $100,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the proposition of the House of Representatives is a very simple one. It is to increase the volume of legal-tender notes $100,000,000. I did not suppose that two years after the war was over, when we were in a state of profound peace, when our bonds were worth ten per cent. above par, any one would propose to increase the volume of legal-tender notes. It is not necessary for me to discuss the proposition at any length, and I shall not long detain the Senate with the subject. The effect of the passage of the House bill would be to impair the value of all existing property in the United States. It would affect, to a considerable extent, the value of incomes. We have already been driven by the large amount of currency now outstanding to increase the salaries of most public officers on account of the increased price of living. This bill would add still more to the price of provisions and all the necessities of life, and would again diminish the relative value of incomes and salaries. It would so derange the relative value of property that contracts for specific property might ruin the seller without any fault of his. It proposes to pay to the creditor of the Government who now holds the interest-bearing obligations of the United States a note not bearing interest, and compel him to take that note against his will. It thus proposes to confiscate the property of the citizen, and continue the inflation of the currency and the derangement of prices.

During the war I was among the first, perhaps the first, in the Senate to propose a measure of this kind. We were driven to it by the exigencies of the war. We were then struggling to maintain the national Government. We were engaged in what was considered by the world a doubtful conflict; and we resorted to that expedient to which all nations have resorted in times of war; that is, as gold was banished from circulation in the community, as the notes of the State banks were not considered sufficiently guarded to be a national currency, we resorted to the credit of the United States and coined it into money. We continued to use it as our distresses increased until we reached the amount of $400,000,000. That was said to be the highest amount that could possibly be borne. This money, in the course of the war, went down to less than forty per cent. of gold, and if increased to a considerable amount more would have probably disappeared as a measure of value. By the close of the war and its glorious success, by the prosperity of the country and our increased credit, the value of this money is now increased to about seventy-two cents on the dollar. It is now proposed to issue more of the same kind of money, which is still worth twenty-eight cents less than gold, and with this kind of money to pay off the small amount of our national debt maturing this year.

If this proposition can be justified by any principle, we might for the same reason pay off the seven-thirties with an increased amount of legal-tender notes. The compound-interest notes stand exactly upon the same footing as all the other obligations of the Government. If we can pay them off by issuing our legal-tender promises to pay, we can pay off the seven-thirties and five-twenties in the same way, and thus strike out of existence our whole national debt. No proposition could be made that would so seriously impair the public credit, that would so seriously derange the value of property, that would strike so much at all the business interests of the people of the United States, as this proposition to increase the legal tenders. At the last session, after full consideration, we entered into a policy, which we supposed to be final, that the amount of legal tenders should be decreased until they were equal to the par value of gold. That was understood on all hands.

But, sir, there is one still more conclusive argument against this bill than those which I have mentioned, although they are weighty enough; and that is, that in the very law under which these compound-interest notes were issued, in the very section which provided for them, we expressly stipulated and guaranteed that the amount of legal tenders should never exceed $400,000,000. That law, which would seem to have been overlooked by the House of Representatives, and which was just as much a part of the contract under which these notes were issued as the rate of interest, I will now read to the Senate. It is commonly called the loan act, approved June 30, 1864, under which the compound-interest notes were issued, and under which a portion of the five-twenties were issued. The second section of that act author-

"Provided, That the total amount of bonds and Treasury notes authorized by the first and second sections of this act shall not exceed $400,000,000, in addition to the amounts heretofore issued; nor shall the total amount of United States notes, issued or to be issued, ever exceed $400,000,000, and such additional sum, not exceeding $50,000,000, as may be temporarily required for the redemption of temporary loan; nor shall any Treasury note bearing interest, issued under this act, be a legal tender in payment or redemption of any notes issued by any bank, banking association, or banker, calculated or intended to circulate as money."

One of the stipulations we made when we issued the compound-interest notes was that we would not issue more than $400,000,000. The amount of $400,000,000 was then and is still outstanding. Without this proviso, I venture to say we could not have sold $100,000,000 of bonds of the United States in the year 1864. The great apprehension of those who had money to loan to us then was that we would proceed to inflate the currency to such an extent as to destroy the value of all securities, and therefore we entered into a stipulation, and made it a part of the contract upon which we obtained money, that the amount of legal-tender notes never should exceed $400,000,000. Upon the faith of this stipulation we issued the compound-interest notes and we received money for them. They were paid for supplies and to the Army. First, they entered into the circulation of the country, but as the interest accumulated upon them they were gradually retired and held by banks, bankers, and other persons who chose to hold them as an investment. Now, it is proposed by the House of Representatives, when we come to pay off these identical notes, to violate the terms of the contract, to increase the amount of the legal tenders, to pay off this interest-bearing obligation with a non-interest bearing obligation, and compel the holders to take it because it is made a legal tender, and thus violate the very terms of the contract under which these compound-interest notes were issued.

Such a proposition as this, it seems to me, ought never to have received the sanction of any portion of the law-making power of the United States. If we can violate this clause of the contract we may violate any other. To pass this bill in the face of the plain provisions of this law is repudiation in the most glaring and offensive form, not only a repudiation which destroys the obligation of the compound-interest notes, but will tend to derange the value of all property and undermine the public credit. I need not say, therefore, under these circumstances, that the Committee on Finance were unanimously of opinion that this proposition to increase the amount of legal-tender notes should not be passed; that its passage would be a public misfortune, a violation of the public credit, and that no facts exist which could justify such a measure as this, especially when our credit is now so good that we may borrow all the money that we desire at five per cent. interest in any market of the world. This disposes of the House proposition.

The proposition reported by our Committee on Finance involves a question of more difficulty; and that is, how best can we pay the compound-interest notes? I stated here in the few remarks that I made the other day, and exhibited an official table prepared at the Treasury Department, that the amount of the principal and interest of the compound-interest notes maturing during the present year was about $119,000,000; that probably $20,000,000 of this might be met by money on hand and by current receipts, leaving a necessity to provide for $100,000,000. Now, sir, we can provide for them under existing law. I say to the Senate that there is no absolute necessity for the passage of any law on this subject, because under the existing law the Treasury may issue its five-twenty bonds, may sell them at the current rate in the market, and retire the compound-interest notes. The only objection to that is, that it would increase the volume of the funded debt when we supposed we had reached its maximum. Still, as it is only the conversion of one form of indebtedness to another, it had better be resorted to rather than issue legal-tender notes.

But it was found upon examination that the Government of the United States might make a good bargain by placing as a loan to the national banks $100,000,000 at the extraordinarily low rate of three per cent. interest. It was found that on account of the retirement of the compound-interest notes, and the provision of law which enabled the national banks to keep a portion of their reserve in compound-interest notes, that the banks would be willing—

Mr. COWAN. I should like to hear the law on that point. What is the provision which enables them to keep these notes as a portion of their reserve?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will come to that in a moment. I have the law here and will refer to it. I was about to state that we could provide for the compound-interest notes without issuing these three per cent. certificates; but we found that on account of the existing state of affairs we could make a good bargain with the banks; that we could furnish them a security which would answer all the purposes of their reserve, and by paying a small rate of interest secure the temporary use of $100,000,000. We did not propose to form a permanent debt, but a debt which might at any time be withdrawn by the national Government, either by the gradual absorption of it as a sinking fund, or by its payment from time to time, according to the condition of the public Treasury. These $100,000,000, we therefore provide, shall be a temporary loan, payable on demand, to be held by the banks or by anybody that chooses to hold them.

The objection seemed to occur in the House—and that leads me to answer the question of the Senator from Pennsylvania—why pay any interest at all? Why not issue legal-tender notes? If we can save half, why not save all the interest? I have already sufficiently answered that question. We ought not to compel any one to take even a three per cent. certificate. We ought not to compel the banks to take it; but we may make a bargain with them, or make it their interest to take it. It was found on examination that we could make an arrangement with the national banks for a temporary loan of $100,000,000, provided, in addition to paying them three per cent. interest, we would authorize them to hold a portion of their bank reserve in these loan certificates; and the question came up whether we should thus authorize them? If the Senator will look to the general laws of the United States passed in 1864 he will find the national banking law on page 114. I read from the thirty-first section. It provides—

"That every association in the cities hereinafter named"—

Certain large cities of the United States—
"shall at all times have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least twenty-five per cent. of the aggregate amount of its notes in circulation and its deposits; and every other association shall at all times have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least fifteen per cent. of the aggregate amount of its notes in circulation and of its deposits."

And whenever the lawful money of any such association shall be reduced below that, provision is made that the bank itself may be closed; and then it provides—

"That three fifths of said fifteen per cent. may consist of balances due to an association, available for redemption of its circulating notes from associations approved by the Comptroller of the Currency, organized under this act, in the cities of St. Louis, Louisville, Chicago, Detroit, Milwaukee, New Orleans, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston, New York, Albany, Leavenworth, San Francisco, and Washington city: Provided, also, That clearing-house certificates, representing specie or lawful money specially deposited for the purpose of any clearing-house association, shall be deemed to be lawful money in the possession of any association belonging to such clearing-house holding and owning such certificate." &c.

The next section—section thirty-two—provides that all the organizations or banks in any of the cities named in section thirty-one may deposit their surplus in the banks at New York. So the Senate will see that under the existing law a bank is required to keep twenty-five per cent. in some cases, in some cases fifteen, of the amount of its total deposits and circulation on hand, but is allowed to deposit three fifths of this with other banks. The country banks may deposit in the banks in the cities named three fifths of their reserves, while in the leading cities they must deposit it in the city of New York. That reserve is always kept to redeem their circulation.

Mr. COWAN. There is another question I should like to ask right there. Was not that to be a part of the consideration why they were paid interest on the bonds, that they were obliged to keep twenty-five per cent. of our United States notes on hand which did not bear any interest, and which was a gratuitous loan to us?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have shown that the banks were not required to keep all their reserves in legal tenders, but might deposit three fifths of it with other banks and thus draw interest on it.

Now, the only effect of this measure reported by the Finance Committee is to authorize this three fifths to be deposited with the national Government in the form of a loan. The banks themselves prefer it. If the money is deposited with the national Government upon loan certificates, payable on demand, it will always be available to meet their pressing necessities when called for. If they do not loan it to the Government they loan it to their fellow banks, and in either event they get interest; so that the result is that this simply provides for a transfer of the deposit from a legally organized association to the national Treasury. It amounts to a loan to the national Government at three per cent. interest on call. After a careful examination of this subject, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Committee on Finance, and the Committee of Ways and Means thought this was a wise arrangement for the Government. Under it the Government reduces its interest from six to three per cent. on $100,000,000. It puts it in the form of a loan which it may at any time pay off or convert, which is at any time within its power. If this expedient is not adopted the Secretary of the Treasury will be compelled to issue six per cent. bonds, the interest of which is payable in gold; or, if the House measure is adopted, he will issue promises to pay without any interest whatever. As we thought that proposition was entirely inadvisable for the reasons I have stated, he must pay off these compound-interest notes by the sale of five-twenty bonds. The measure proposed by the Committee on Finance and pressed by the Secretary of the Treasury, if adopted, will enable him to make a temporary loan of $100,000,000 at three per cent. This is all there is in the bill. The Committee of Ways and Means in the House proposed to raise the interest from three to three and sixty-five hundredths per cent., in order to make it convenient to compute the interest, and to follow the example of the old law of 1862. The Committee on Finance, however, thought it was unnecessary to go beyond the three per cent.

Now, sir, if there is anything else about this bill that is a mystery to any Senator I shall be very glad to explain it. A great many collateral subjects are introduced into a debate of this kind which have no reference to its merits, and I shall not allude to them unless other Senators bring them in. Upon the main question, that this Government ought not, under any circumstances whatever, in violation of the express stipulations of the law I have read, to issue any more legal-tender notes, I think we can all stand. We have expressly stipulated and agreed by law that this amount shall not be exceeded. It should be remembered, also, that this stipulation was made in the darkest period of the war, in 1864, before any of the great victories of that year were achieved; it was made under circumstances when it was difficult to get money; and now, if we violate it in a time of peace, when our Treasury is in a measure overflowing, when we are reducing the national debt, when our credit is restored, it would be an act of perfidy and bad faith, without example I think in the history of any nation.

Mr. COWAN. I only rise, sir, rather that we may understand exactly the nature of this proposition than to combat it. It is very well known that I have been from the first opposed to the creation of national banks, simply because I believed they were not necessary at the time they were created. If the currency of the country was not in excess, if it required to be filled up with more, I thought the proper way to do it was to issue an additional batch of United States notes, which, being payable on demand, were really a loan from the people to the Government without interest. If, on the other hand, the channels of circulation were full, I conceived it a disastrous stroke of policy to create $300,000,000 more of it and throw it in upon ways that were already surcharged.

But there was another feature that I never could understand. I never knew why it was that when banks deposited their bonds or our bonds to them, and had them registered here as security for their issues, and when we furnished the issues to the amount of ninety per cent., and when we guaranteed the issues to the same extent, that we were obliged to pay them interest on the bonds. We had borrowed their money, and we had agreed to pay them interest on it. That was all right. But when we agreed to accept that as our security and to indorse over to them our notes, because national bank notes are really our notes—they stand upon the basis of our credit, and they can never rise any higher, because they are redeemable in it—I say when we gave ninety per cent. of our notes indorsed by us, and for which we are responsible, then the interest on ninety per cent. of their bonds should have ceased. Why should we continue to pay interest on the bonds? In the first place, we borrowed their money, say one hundred thousand dollars, and we pay them six per cent. interest on it. Then we hand over to them ninety thousand of our dollars, indorsed by us, which pass among the people on the strength of our credit and not theirs, which they circulate and loan to our people, the people being the same as we are, the people and the Government being identical, and they are to get six, ten, or twelve per cent. for that too. Why, Mr. President, the finances of any country in the world must come to ruin under such a system as this. It is utterly impossible that any people could stand it. It is not in the nature of things.

What were we to get in lieu of all that? We were told, "You have the right to tax these banks." Tax what? Tax their circulation one per cent.; that is, we pay them six per cent. on $100,000, and get back one per cent. on $90,000. But they said, "There is another thing: do you not observe that we are bound under the bill to keep in our possession on hand for the purpose of redeeming our notes twenty-five per cent., not only of our circulation, but of our deposits, in your legal-tender money, your lawful money"—and at that time there was no other money lawful money of the United States except these demand notes, these United States notes—"we are bound to keep on hand twenty-five per cent. of your lawful money, demand money, which is not bearing interest, and which will compensate you for the interest you pay us on the bonds." I ask the honorable Senator from Ohio whether that is not a fair statement? When we objected and said, "What, are we to pay interest on your bonds and give you the money to circulate with the people and indorse it?" was not the answer, "That is true; but you have the right to tax us?" Well, how much? One per cent. What more? One per cent. is not a consideration for six per cent. One per cent., especially on ninety per cent., is not a consideration for six per cent. on a hundred. But they said, "There is more: we will be obliged to keep as many of your demand notes on hand to redeem our circulation and our deposits as will make up for the bonds for which you pay us interest; in the first place, we must have twenty-five per cent. of our circulation"—and if it is a bank with $100,000 capital, that is twenty-five per cent. of $90,000; "then, as the deposits in the bank are five times the circulation, as a general rule, we will have to keep more of your notes on hand that are not bearing interest than we have of bonds registered in your Treasury."

But what, then, Mr. President? Did they do that? Did they do that in good faith? Did they keep on hand this money in what was at the time the bill was passed lawful money of the United States, or did they take advantage of our necessities in another way? The bank bill was passed on the 3d of June, 1864. On the 30th of June, 1864, we were compelled by the necessities of the situation to issue what are called the compound-interest-bearing notes, which were made lawful money at their face value. If the banks could keep them, then this part of our consideration failed, and failed most sadly, because instead of bearing six per cent., it was then six per cent. compounded. But the banks immediately, all over the country it seems, instead of keeping our notes on hand which did not bear interest, bought up or kept the compound-interest notes, which did bear interest, and which bore an enormous interest. Was that good faith? I ask whether it was good faith in view of this legislation, because there was legislation to prevent that very result? In that same law by which we issued the compound-interest notes it was provided in the second section:

"Nor shall any Treasury notes bearing interest, issued under this act, be a legal-tender in payment or redemption of any notes issued by any bank, banking association, or banker, calculated or intended to circulate as money."

Now, what I wish to say is, in all deference to the opinions of my friend from Ohio—and I have great faith in his opinions upon subjects of this kind—I am not so very certain that it would be bad faith to compel the national banks, who have violated their faith to our detriment, to give up these securities for their face and the interest.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to prolong this argument. The Senator says that the national banks have violated their faith. I have nothing to say about the national banking system now. It is not drawn in here. There is nothing in the bill about national banks.

Mr. COWAN. But I understand the Senator to say that if we do not pay these people interest on the money they now have on hand to retire their issues it would be an act of bad faith on the part of the Government. I think not.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I did not say that at all. Under the present law they have the right either to leave their reserve in compound-interest notes or they have the right to deposit it with other banks where they draw interest.

Mr. COWAN. But as I understand the law it is the very reverse. They had no right to reserve compound-interest notes to pay their own notes.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator relies on the last clause that I read. This being the last date, I think it changes the provisions of the law which authorized them to use compound-interest notes or to use notes of a certain character, or legal-tender notes as their reserve; but the difficulty is this: a compound-interest note was a legal tender for its face, made so by the terms of the bill, and they can hold any legal-tender money as a parts of their reserve, except with the limitation of this clause.

Mr. COWAN. Except that they be not compound-interest notes issued under that act.

Mr. SHERMAN. They cannot, under a decision of the Comptroller of the Currency, hold compound-interest notes as a part of their legal reserve to pay their own notes.

Mr. COWAN. Or their deposits.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; that is the extent of it, and it is perfectly clear. The law provides:

Nor shall any Treasury note, bearing interest, issued under this act, be a legal tender in payment or redemption of any notes issued by any bank, banking association, or banker, calculated or intended to circulate as money.

But the general law authorizes them to hold all legal-tender money as part of their reserve for the payment of their depositors and for the payment of their notes also, except that they cannot hold those compound-interest notes as a part of their reserve to pay their notes, but they may for deposits. That is the construction put upon it by the Attorney General and the Secretary, and I think it perfectly clear that it is so.

Mr. COWAN. I think it is a construction that only covers part of the law and leaves the spirit of it out entirely.

Mr. SHERMAN. At any rate that is the construction put upon it.

Mr. COWAN. I have no doubt that it is an improper construction. What was the reason that we required them to keep the United States notes on hand? It is obvious to everybody. We wanted to keep these notes on hand there in order that we might avoid paying interest on the amount so held. They were demand notes; no interest was due upon them; and if we could compel the banks to hold them, to meet their issues and to pay for their deposits, of course it was so much clear gain to the nation. Now, how the Treasury Department could decide that it was only to pay their issues and not their deposits is what I cannot see, because the reason of the law applied to both, as well to the one as the other; and the reason of the law is the life of it, and that which ought always to guide in making these decisions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the Senator that at the last session of Congress I introduced a bill which contains the very provision to which he refers. I have always been opposed to the banks holding these compound-interest notes as a part of their reserve. There is a bill now pending in the House which ought to have been acted on covering this very point. We have never, however, been able to secure action on either subject. The bills passed the Senate, went over to the House, and there they lie.

Mr. COWAN. I have no idea that this is going to be a remedy for the present state of our finances by any means. It is a mere shift to tide over for the time. The real difficulty is that we have no fixed standard of value in the country. When you make your paper money a legal-tender you make it the measure of value. Having no value in itself and depending for its value upon the credit of the country, which goes up and down with the fortunes of the country, your measure becomes a fluctuating standard, and that fluctuation pervading all the various channels of trade and arteries of commerce everywhere, all the various dealing transactions between man and man, such a mischief as it is is almost incalculable.

Therefore, I think the first thing to be done now, and I do not see any difficulty in the world in the way of it, and I throw it out by way of suggestion, is to declare that our United States notes, or legal-tender notes if you please, shall not be any longer receivable at their face in payment of debts contracted before the passage of the law. Why should you continue on the system of paying the dowers of widows in depreciated currency? Why should you continue on a system of taking out of the pocket of the widow and putting into the pocket of the payer the depreciation of our currency when the contract was for the payment of money at the gold standard? Why should you continue to do this to the orphans, to the old men who have retired from business and live on fixed incomes, to the holders of ground rents, to the holders of mortgages, to all this various class of creditors? The war is over; the country is in a condition of quasi peace at least. Is there any necessity why you should debase the coin—not debase the coin exactly, but debase your money by continuing to use paper and making it a legal tender as to these parties? Why not come back to the gold standard as to contracts made before the passage of this legal-tender bill? Is there any reason why you should continue on in this way? Why, sir, there is every reason in the world why you should not. There is not a political economist on the earth who has not said that such a course as we have been pursuing would be a disgrace to the civilization of the century.

Mr. WILSON. Why not resume specie payments?

Mr. COWAN. Because specie payments are a very different thing. You need not tear down the fixed standard of money because you cannot have specie payments. I have been asked that question so often that I am tempted almost to write a little book to show the difference between the two. I do not say you should not have made your money a legal tender; but what I do say is that your money shall not be made a legal tender for a lie. When you contract to pay me a dollar in gold, and you come to me with a paper dollar, I will take it as a legal tender, but I will not take it for one hundred cents; I will take it for seventy cents, what it is, and let the party who tenders it run the risk of tendering enough. I do not ask that you should repeal the law with regard to contracts made under the law, because that was a folly in which we all participated, and in the consequences of which we ought all to share; but I do say that as to all contracts made after the 1st of April, if you ever expect the currency of this country to come back to a wholesome condition you will enact that the gold standard shall be again the legal one. Let your paper money be a legal tender if you please, but a legal tender for what it is worth. Do not go around the country trying to make a yard-stick of India-rubber, that is twenty inches to-day, twenty-four inches to-morrow, and thirty inches some other day, or a pound weight which varies with the temperature. Nobody can deal in that way, and you have no conception how much you have paid because of that disturbance in the standard. I have said before that the effect of it was to multiply the antagonisms in the country to such an extent that I tell you your vendors during the war gloried in your defeats; they wept over your victories. Why? Because by this system of yours you made our defeats the means of raising their commodities and putting money in their pockets, and you made our victories the means of depreciating the prices of their commodities and ruining them. You have people coming here to-day who do not want the currency contracted, who do not want the American credit to rise, who prefer it as it is. Every man who has money to pay, and you make the money and furnish it, of course desires to get it as cheaply as possible, and the cheaper you make your money the more readily he will pay his debts. You have set one half of the community upon you in this way.

Then, I say, let your money, if you please, be a legal tender; but let it be a legal tender for what it is worth, for contracts made after the 1st of April next, and as to contracts made before the law itself was passed. Then you can get back to something like common sense and common reason.

Then there is another thing you had better do: square your accounts with your national banks. Why should you pay to the banks of the country fifteen, twenty, or thirty millions of a bonus to do your banking for you? In the first place, I hold you have no right to charter any such institutions through the States, particularly as long as you keep the sub-Treasury on foot, because then there is not only no necessity for these banks, but there is no convenience in them. But I ask again, why should you pay as a bonus to the national banks of the country fifteen, twenty, or thirty million dollars to do this business for you when it could be just as well done without paying them that? First, it was urged that the banks would not be profitable. Why, sir, there is not a national bank in the country that is not overflowing with its success, and it will and must overflow as long as you put your money within its control. Banks ought to be obliged to redeem their money in gold dollars. If you had a bank with $500,000 in circulation, and you could get some means devised by which instead of redeeming it with gold dollars you could do it with eighty-cent paper dollars, I should like to know what you would make by the operation? One hundred thousand dollars clear. Of course all these people are interested to preserve this condition of things. They have all the advantages and none of the disadvantages. They never can have any of the disadvantages until your money comes up to the gold standard. When you bring them there then they meet you where a man ought to meet his fellow man, on the footing of a fair contract.

Then, I say, the accounts ought to be settled with these national banks, and settled at once. Now, are you going to go on and pay them interest on their bonds? Are you going to furnish them a circulation to loan to the people, your people, the same as the Government precisely, at enormous rates? Then are you going to allow them to hold as reserves your notes which bear interest and pay them interest upon them, too? If you intend the whole currency of this country to go into this maelstrom and to be swallowed up in this vortex, that is a good way to go on, and one which will enable you to strike bottom, I should think, almost as soon as any other.

Mr. President, it might be well to observe some caution for the future in dealing with these national banks. Here it was perfectly clear they had no right to take these compound-interest notes and make reserves of them, no matter what the Treasury decided. The reason of the thing was against it. The interest of the thing, it is true, was on the side of the banks; but there was nothing in the spirit of the law, nothing in its interest and meaning, which would have authorized them to make reserves of them. But if it has been done, and if the proper Department has decided it, I do not know of any remedy that you have except to pay; but if you pay at this time, I would advise that any further engagements of this kind be more carefully scanned when they are entered into.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I suppose the measure before us does not at all involve the national banking system. It is a simple proposition whether we shall meet a responsibility which we have already incurred. We have issued these compound-interest notes, and they are now, about one half of them, in the possession of the banks, and the other half are in the possession of other parties. About one hundred millions, or upward of one hundred millions, of those notes mature within the current year, and the United States will be under an obligation to pay, if the creditor demands payment; but as they bear an interest of six per cent. or more, the creditor will not demand payment, and the United States will be in no situation to pay except in one of three modes: either by using the money which they may have on hand over and above the necessities which the Government may be under in other respects, or by issuing additional legal tenders, or by some such measure as is proposed by the committee, that being to issue certificates bearing an interest of three per cent.

The objection to the first is simply that it is not in the power of the Government. The objection to the second is, I think, very clear from an inspection of the act referred to by the honorable member from Ohio, that it would be in violation of the contract which the Government has entered into with the holders of the legal-tender notes. There can be no doubt that the express limitation in that act, that the legal-tender notes should never exceed the sum of $400,000,000, added to the value of that currency in the estimation of the public; and that to issue now a greater amount than the $400,000,000 would be by the public estimate, and in my judgment would in fact be, a clear violation of our agreement. A violation of a national agreement under any circumstances is full of peril; and it is especially mischievous when that violation relates to some financial operation of the Government.

Then the only mode, if it is advisable to take up these compound-interest notes as they fall due, is by the measure proposed by the committee or by some analogous measure. Now, what is the measure proposed by the committee? To issue certificates of indebtedness bearing an interest of three per cent.; and the honorable gentleman who represents the committee on this occasion, speaking, as I understand, from actual knowledge, tells us that at least that portion of the public who hold these notes would be willing to lend to the Government upon those certificates of indebtedness at a rate of three per cent., and enable the Government to take up the compound-interest notes. The effect of such an arrangement is to save the Government the amount of the difference between six per cent. and three per cent. It is therefore a clear gain, and being a temporary loan the Government in all probability will at some short period be able to meet the engagement consequent upon the issue of these certificates of indebtedness.

I agree that, as an original question, the issuing of the legal-tender notes was open to very great objection; but in the condition in which the country is placed, and looking to the necessities which compelled the Government to issue those legal-tender notes, we cannot now get rid of them at once; and although the honorable member from Pennsylvania, in reference to the obligation of the Government not to meet these compound-interest notes, placed it upon the ground that the banks who were in the possession of these notes had violated some engagement on their part, that would not rid us from the obligation to meet the compound-interest notes hereafter; for the banks can now dispose of all those notes that they have in their possession to other citizens of the United States or other parties. Portions of them may be held in Europe. Parties are in the possession of those notes without having violated any engagement, and they have a right, therefore, to insist that they shall be paid the amount of the face of the notes, with all the accruing interest, at any time. The whole effect of the operation, therefore, is to save us so much by way of interest; while if we resort to the expedient proposed by the House the currency will be so expanded as will materially affect, perhaps, the interest of everybody in the United States, and at the same time, what is still worse, effect a repudiation on the part of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HENDRICKS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance as a substitute for the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That every national bank shall at all times have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least twenty-five per cent. of the aggregate amount of its notes in circulation and its deposits, and it shall be unlawful for any national bank to pay interest on deposits made in said bank by any other bank.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Finance considered that amendment. It contains two distinct propositions, and they ought not to go together. The first is but a repetition of the present law as to the great body of the banks in the United States. The law requires them to keep a reserve of twenty-five per cent. on hand, except certain country banks, who are far removed and generally do not need so large a reserve, and are only required to keep fifteen per cent. The great body of the banks of the United States are required to keep twenty-five per cent., and the actual reserve is fully up to that. That part of the amendment does not amount to so much.

The second clause is a very difficult question. To prohibit the national banks from either receiving or paying interest, in a broad sense, would be injurious. The Committee on Finance, however, are willing that the reserve shall not be on interest. The subject was hastily brought before us, and the Committee on Finance agreed to a proposition this morning which I think will cover all that we ought to cover. I submit it to the Senate; there is some little difference as to the date. It is to strike out all after the word "that" in the amendment, and to insert:

No national bank shall either pay or receive interest on any portion of its reserve when deposited in any other national bank, and the compound-interest notes shall not be held as a part of their reserve after the 1st day of July next.

Mr. WILSON. I am very glad that the Committee on Finance have agreed to go thus far, and perhaps it is as far as we can go at the present time. I believe that one of the greatest evils connected with the currency has been the fact that the banks have been paying interest on deposits made by other banks. The tendency is to carry money into New York city or into the large points, to fill the banks up with immense deposits which must be loaned out; and that money is loaned out generally on call to brokers and speculators. It is stated by gentlemen who have means of knowing, who thoroughly understand the business, that one great source of the gold speculations in the country, which have been so injurious to the country, has been the fact that the banks in the large cities paid interest on deposits made by other banks. I have no doubt that the system tends to derange the currency, that it tends to expansion. The moment the banks are called upon legitimately, then they must call in those loans made when they had these immense deposits on hand. They must be called in often suddenly, and it affects the whole money market. I have never seen a merchant or a thorough business man who does not look upon that system as injurious in itself, and there ought to be an end put to it.

There is another thing which I think the Committee on Finance ought to put an end to, and that is these Government depositories in places where we have sub-Treasuries. I believe that we ought not to have the old pet bank system. We must use the national banks to some extent where we have not sub-Treasuries; but why we need banks as public depositories in New York, Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, or any of our large cities, I do not understand. The effect of the whole system has been to increase the volume of currency and increase credits when we ought to bring the banking system down and make it as solid as possible, and prepare ourselves for the resumption of specie payments at the earliest day it can possibly be done with safety to the business interests of the country. I am very glad that this amendment is offered. I prefer the amendment that I have proposed; but as the Committee on Finance have agreed to this amendment, I shall be very glad to go thus far.

Mr. SHERMAN. So far as the amendments proposed to the banking act to which the Senator has referred are concerned, I am probably in favor of most of them; but it is utterly impossible at this stage of the session to consider anything that affects the national banks. There ought to be some limitations and restrictions undoubtedly passed; but the chairman of the Committee on Banking in the House, the Senator's own colleague, has had a bill which he has not been able to get considered. It is perfectly impossible for us to consider that subject now. The question of the payment of interest on deposits has been for a long time under consideration. I have always myself believed that the practice of a bank paying interest on deposits was injurious and ought not to be allowed. The best banks in New York never pay interest on deposits. I believe that is the case with the Bank of Commerce and with the Metropolitan Bank. Perhaps after a while it may be well enough to prohibit all banks from paying interest on deposits, but at present it would be very injurious to them; it would only drive the business of the national banks into the hands of brokers and bankers who do pay interest on deposits, and whom you do not reach by this legislation. But the amendment, so far as we do go, provides that the reserve denominated as security for depositors and note-holders shall be kept without interest and always on demand.

Another reason why I offer the amendment is because it will induce the banks to take these three per cent. certificates. Some Senators seem to think this is a measure in favor of the banks. That is certainly not so. The measure as it now stands will compel the banks to keep a large portion of their reserve in three per cent. certificates on which they will draw interest; but if this bill does not pass, the result will be that the country national banks will deposit in the cities and they will draw four per cent. interest from their associate banks. That is the present arrangement of this reserve fund under existing law, because many of the national banks pay interest to all depositors and pay interest to each other on current accounts. The only effect, therefore, of this bill is to transfer these deposits from the banks in New York to the national Government.

I do not know that it is necessary to prolong the discussion. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. It is but justice to say that the only point of difficulty we had in the Committee on Finance was as to the day when this last clause should take effect. Perhaps my friend from Maine, if he were here, would think the day named was too soon. I think the 1st of July is remote enough. That is the only point of disagreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio if there is not some danger to be apprehended in restricting the national banks from paying or receiving interest on deposits when State banks are allowed to do the same thing?

Mr. SHERMAN. We only confine it to their reserve. They may pay interest on all deposits except their reserve, which is deposited as security for their circulation and deposits.

Mr. HOWE. Is that the effect of the amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; that is what it says in so many words. It does not go to the extent the Senator supposes.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I have looked at this bill for the first time this morning, and I cannot help thinking—I suppose the Senator from Ohio can convince me to the contrary very readily—that the very objection which he has urged so forcibly and so conclusively against the bill sent to us from the House of Representatives may be urged with equal force against the proposition reported by the Committee on Finance, that it does not keep faith with the holders of the notes which this bill proposes to redeem and satisfy. Those notes purport to be an obligation on the part of the Government to pay them, the face and the interest at their maturity. Instead of paying them in anything that was ever regarded as money, or anything that your law pronounces to be money, you propose to exchange for them another security drawing a different rate of interest.

Mr. SHERMAN. The difference is, they need not take these loan certificates. It is simply at their option. They are not bound to take them at all.

Mr. HOWE. Upon the face of the bill it does not appear so.

Mr. SHERMAN. It simply authorizes the Secretary to exchange with them if he can make the arrangement; and as an inducement for them to take them we allow them to hold them as a part of the reserve.

Mr. HOWE. Suppose they decline to take them?

Mr. SHERMAN. Then we pay them in money.

Mr. COWAN. In greenbacks?

Mr. SHERMAN. In greenbacks. As a matter of course it is not compulsory. The loan certificates are a mere form of indebtedness which he is authorized to issue if he can make a bargain.

Mr. HOWE. If the certificates were made a legal tender then there would not be a breach of faith; nor would there be in paying them in anything else that was a legal tender; but the law does not make these certificates a legal tender, and I supposed it was intended to be compulsory on the holders of the notes.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is discretionary. They need not take them unless they choose.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, on the 25th instant, the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. No. 283) for the relief of Edward St. Clair Clarke;

A bill (S. No. 467) to amend an act entitled "An act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes," approved July 25, 1866;

A bill (S. No. 513) granting a pension to Patrick Meehan;

A bill (S. No. 602) granting a pension to Ezra B. Gordon; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) to provide for the ascertainment and apportionment of the proper quota of the direct tax of 1861 to the State of West Virginia, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1226) for the relief of Captain William McKean was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 19th of December, information in relation to goods purchased in open market for the Indian Bureau since the 1st of January, 1866; which was ordered to lie on the table.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1866.

Mr. TRUMBULL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five thousand additional copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1866 be printed, two thousand for the use of the Institution, and three thousand for the use of the Senate, and that said report be stereotyped.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1173, the miscellaneous appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with various amendments.

The first amendment was on page 3, line fifty-three, to strike out the words "and so forth."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) That is a mere verbal correction, and will be made if there be no objection.

The next amendment was on page 4, line sixty-five, to strike out the words "and so forth."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

The next amendment was on page 8, line one hundred and seventy-four, to strike out the word "Fundy" and to insert "Thunder;" so that the clause will read:

For rebuilding the keeper's dwelling at Thunder Bay island light-station, Lake Huron, $3,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That verbal alteration will be made if there be no objection.

The next amendment was on page 9, line one hundred and eighty-four, to strike out the word "one" and to insert "two;" so that the clause will read:

To enable the Light-House Board to reestablish lights and other aids to navigation on the southern coast, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 9, after line two hundred and two, to strike out the following clause:

For a light-house to mark Combahee Bank, Georgia, in place of Combahee light-vessel, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 10, lines two hundred and ten and two hundred and eleven, after the word "thousand" to strike out "$281 73," and to insert the word "dollars;" so that the clause will read:

For rebuilding light-house on Deep Water Shoals, in James river, Virginia, $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 10, after line two hundred and thirteen, to strike out the following clause:

For rebuilding Wolf Island beacon-lights and buildings connected therewith, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 10, to strike out lines two hundred and sixteen and two hundred and seventeen, in the following words:

For rebuilding Sapelo light-house and beacons, Georgia, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 10, to strike out lines two hundred and eighteen and two hundred and nineteen, in the following words:

For building three light-houses and buoy steam-tenders, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 10, after line two hundred and nineteen, to insert:

For a reappropriation of the amount heretofore appropriated for an iron light-house at Southwest Pass, but which has been carried to the surplus fund, $108,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 10, to insert as lines two hundred and twenty-four and two hundred and twenty-five the following:

For a new light-house at Punta Arenas, California, $65,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have some explanation from the Committee on Finance for these items in these appropriation bills which provide for new light-houses, when the appropriate committee on these subjects have not had them under consideration at all. The Committee on Commerce considered the light-house bill proper—I do not mean appropriations, but authorizing the rebuilding and new building of light-houses—a bill from the House, reported it with sundry amendments that appeared snitable to them, and the bill has been passed with those amendments. The most of the items for light-houses in this bill of appropriations now before us relate to structures already provided for by law, and particularly to those which have been reported. The bill I have just mentioned did not contain any provision for the building of a light-house in California at this point; but it did for building one at Santa Cruz—I think was the name of the place—for which an appropriation is now made. I should be glad to have the Finance Committee explain whether they have investigated the propriety of the original erection or not. If they have, certainly as one member of the Committee on Commerce I have no disposition to quarrel with their conclusions, although it more appropriately belongs to that committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. These appropriations were not inserted without an examination and without, as we supposed, good reason. We found in the regular estimates of appropriation that these three light-houses were called for by the Light-House Board; one at Punta Arenas, California; one at Cape Blanco, Oregon, and one at the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi river. We had also other information showing their necessity. General Poe, who is in charge of this work, came to the committee personally and represented to the committee strongly the necessity of these three light-houses; and we acted upon that information. It is contained in the regular annual estimates, pages 114 and 115. We also acted upon the statements of General Poe, that these three new light-houses were necessary. The one at the Southwest Pass was appropriated for just before the war, but was not built on account of the war, and is needed for the commerce of the Mississippi.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That one explains itself.

Mr. SHERMAN. As for the one in Oregon the Senator from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMS] who is not now in his seat, but is elsewhere engaged, vouched himself for the necessity of it; and General Poe recommended strongly that these two light-houses on the Pacific coast be built. We thought the information was sufficient. But if the Senator has examined the subject more carefully, I have no objection in striking out any item that he says is wrong.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not examined it at all. I am not opposed to it. I merely wished to call the attention of the Senate to the confusion which must necessarily arise in the business being so conducted as to have committees working at cross purposes. Now, for all new erections, that is, for giving authority for their establishment, either one committee or the other ought to have charge of them so that they will act consistently and harmoniously. It is exceedingly confusing, if not something worse, to the transaction of business to send over from the House one bill which provides for several light-houses, not appropriating money, but giving authority for their construction at a certain limit, which goes to one committee, and then sending over another bill, which appropriately goes to another committee, appropriating money for those objects, with provisions in it which go beyond that, and enter into the same inquiries again. I have no fault to find with the action of the Committee on Finance, because I dare say it is according to the practice. But I do wish to mention, for one, that it would be much more satisfactory to me as a member of the Senate that either one committee or the other, when these subjects come here, should have the whole charge of them so far as the authority for building light-houses is concerned, so that they might have the whole subject before them. There is no sense in sending one half of this inquiry to one committee and the other half to another. I do not make any objection, after these explanations, to these particular items, because I have no reason to doubt, as they were sent to us, that they are perfectly correct. It only would be much more convenient that the Committee on Finance should have received all these subjects for consideration than that the thing should have been split up in this way.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state that perhaps we are a great deal more strict than the rest of the Senate are about these matters. The Committee on Finance never act upon any appropriation until it is recommended from the proper Department, and usually never act upon it unless it is contained in the official estimates referred to us by the Senate at the commencement of the session. That is the case with all these appropriations. I confess that all new works and all new improvements ought to go to other committees; and I think we rarely, if ever, act upon them unless they come to us in the ordinary course of reference. So far as the light-houses are concerned it has been different. They are always estimated for by the engineer department and sent with the annual estimates to the Committee on Finance. We take them up and examine them, and allow such as we think the facts justify. As a matter of course we are compelled by the reference to consider them. In regard to all new buildings they are always referred to the appropriate committee, and never reported by the Committee on Finance unless they are put on by a vote of the Senate, and by a report of a committee of the Senate other than the Committee on Finance. That is the general rule on which we act, and I think we are about as particular and as strict as any other committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not doubt that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 10, to insert after line two hundred and twenty-two:

For a new light-house at Cape Blanco, Oregon, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 11, line two hundred and forty-nine, to strike out the word "twenty" and to insert "seventy;" so that the clause will read:

For continuing the work on the north portico of the Patent Office building, $75,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. If any Senator desires an explanation of that amendment, I will give it; but if it is not asked, I will not delay the Senate on a matter that they seem to take as a matter of course.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 12, to strike out lines two hundred and sixty and two hundred and sixty-one in the words:

For a custom-house in Newport, Vermont, $10,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If every part of the country is to have a little benefit out of the Treasury I do not see why Vermont should not have. I presume there is some good reason for this amendment; I should like to hear an explanation of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can state to the Senator that on examining the bill we found no estimate, no recommendation, and had no information on the subject. There was nothing in the official reports showing that a custom-house was needed at this place, no estimate of its cost, and I presume this was put in by way of a rider in the House. We could not find out anything about it. If the Senator has any official information, or any information on which we can act, I have no objection to leaving it in; but there was nothing before us or in any official report showing the necessity of a custom-house at Newport, what it would cost, where it ought to be built, whether grounds have been purchased, or anything about it. That is the explanation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If these appropriation bills are to contain authority of law for building a structure in one section of the country, then they may as well do so in another. My friend from Ohio stated to me just now, in answer to my inquiry about new light-houses on the western coast, that one branch of his information was from the Senator from Oregon, whose personal knowledge was that the light-house was required there.

Mr. SHERMAN. But also supported by the official documents and statements of the proper engineer department, containing estimates of its cost.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no special knowledge of any estimates about this matter. I only go upon the presumption that the House of Representatives had something fit and proper to act upon; and I dare say an inquiry of the House committee would have satisfied my friend of the propriety of this measure. All I can state is, that it is within my personal knowledge that the state of business at Newport or at Island Pond, which is close by there, at either of those two places, particularly at Newport, where there is a lake, as my friend may know, which is partly in Canada and partly in Vermont, which is the medium of communication, that there is a very large amount of business done there, and that it requires something besides paying high rents to accommodate the public business; but I do not pretend to know in detail how much it would cost, because I have not been furnished with any of the facts, going upon the presumption that the House committee would furnish the committee of the Senate with whatever information was desirable. I cannot, therefore, say whether this sum is enough, or whether it is too much. I cannot say whether ground has been purchased. I presume it has not been, because there was no authority of law, except such as this bill provides, for the purchase of ground or the making of the structure; but I do say that if appropriations of this kind for light-houses and one thing and another are to be put in, as they have been put into bills, upon the personal statement of Senators from the localities that they were required, then I feel safe in saying upon my personal responsibility that a modest sum like this could be well expended for the public service there. I admit that this is a very unsafe ground to act upon; but if we go upon it in any instance we can in this.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator certainly does not want to misrepresent my position.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not stated that in any case we put an appropriation in this bill on the representation of any Senator; I have never done it upon my own or any one's representation. We must have the official recommendation of the proper executive office in writing. We do not take a verbal statement of even the President or the head of a Department. We have always exacted an official recommendation containing an estimate and satisfactory statement. Now, in regard to the light-houses mentioned by the Senator: we have, in the regular annual estimates furnished to us, given the details, the necessity for them; and then we took the pains in that case to examine the engineer in charge of the works as to the necessity for them; and that was corroborated by the personal knowledge of the Senator from Oregon, who is a member of the committee. But here we have no information. If the Senator himself can furnish us any evidence, or if he states himself, upon his own knowledge, that a custom-house is necessary there, the Senate will probably act upon that information; but the Committee on Finance would not, because they have always required official information in order to have an executive authority for the necessity of an appropriation. We can find nothing, and there is nothing, in the ordinary estimates about this custom-house in Vermont.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire of the Senator from Vermont how far this town of Newport is from Island Pond?

Mr. EDMUNDS. About twenty-five miles, I should say.

Mr. GRIMES. According to my recollection, at the last session of Congress there was an appropriation made for a custom-house at Island Pond.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I dare say there was; but Island Pond is an entry station on the Grand Trunk railroad, or whatever it is called—the great Canadian railway from Montreal to Portland. Newport is now at the terminus of another railway from Boston to Montreal, at this lake further west than Island Pond, which now receives a very large amount of commerce, and large amounts of duties are collected there. I will not state, because I do not believe in this notion of Senators overstating things for their own localities, upon my own personal knowledge that I know a custom-house is required there at this expense. I will only state that I believe it is. That is all I can say.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 12, line two hundred and seventy-five, to insert the word "post" before the word "office."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 13, after line two hundred and eighty-nine, to insert the following:

For repairs and alterations in the New York custom-house, $30,000.

For furniture and repairs of the same, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 13, after line two hundred and ninety-three, to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase thirty copies of the first nine volumes of the United States Statutes-at-Large, $945.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 13, after line two hundred and ninety-six, to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to adjust and settle the accounts of James Tufts for enumerating the inhabitants of the Territory of Montana, under the direction of the Governor of said Territory, as authorized by the act of May 26, 1864, entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Montana," the sum of $6,996, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 13, after line three hundred and five, to insert the following:

For heating with steam the Supreme Court room, Law Library, and the passages and stairways adjacent the court-room, and for other improvements and repairs of said court-room, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 14, after line three hundred and nine, to insert the following:

For the compensation of eight extra clerks of class two in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $11,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to offer the following amendment, to come in after the amendment just adopted:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Lewis Heyl, for compiling statutes prescribing the rates of duties on imports and making index to the tariff bill now pending, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out lines three hundred and ninety and three hundred and ninety-one, on page 17, in these words:

For compensation of laborer to take care of the heating apparatus of the Library of Congress, $800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines three hundred and ninety-two and three hundred and ninety-three, on page 17, as follows:

For compensation to three watchmen on the dome of the Capitol, $2,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines four hundred and two and four hundred and three, on page 17, in these words:

For erecting a new draw in the navy-yard bridge, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines four hundred and forty-one, four hundred and forty-two, four hundred and forty-three, and four hundred and forty-four, on page 19, as follows:

To enable the joint Committee on the Library of Congress to purchase the bust of Palaski, now in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, executed by the late Henry D. Saunders, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines four hundred and fifty, four hundred and fifty-one, four hundred and fifty-two, four hundred and fifty-three, four hundred and fifty-four, four hundred and fifty-five, and four hundred and fifty-six, on pages 19 and 20, in these words:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Senate of the United States shall elect a Superintendent of Public Buildings, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor is elected, and shall perform all the duties now required to be performed by the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby abolished.

Mr. WADE. I hope the section will not be stricken out. I think the Senate ought to have the control of that business. There is a separate bill pending for the same purpose, but I presume at this stage of the session there will not be time to pass it. I hope this section will not be stricken out.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is manifest that it will have to be stricken out here at any rate. It is stuck into the body of the first section and cuts off all the other appropriations in the bill. If the section remains where it is, the appropriations which follow it will have to be put into a separate section. This provision is certainly put in a very improper place, and if Senators are in favor of the object of the section they will have to put it in another part of the bill. A mere transposition, however, will correct that. Aside from that there is this difficulty about it: the Commissioner of Public Buildings has charge not only of the Capitol, but the President's House and grounds; he has free access to them; he appoints the subordinates there, the messengers, and the employes about the President's House and grounds; by the custom of society here he is the gentleman who presents visitors to the ladies of the household. He is the man of all others whom the President ought to have the power to appoint, because he is there brought in daily contact with him. The same reason for which my colleague thinks the Senate ought to have the control of the person in charge of the public buildings would require that the appointment should be in the hands of the President. To take from the President the power to appoint the person who has charge of his house, to appoint his subordinates to attend to it, it seems to me is not exactly right, and if it is to be done I hope it will not be done in a general appropriation bill. The Committee on Finance thought it was a very improper place to put it. Not only that, but the committee thought such an officer ought to be appointed by the President of the United States.

I know that the present Commissioner of Public Buildings is obnoxious to the Senate, and my own impression is—though I dislike to say it in regard to any officer—that he is not the kind of a man who has energy sufficient to manage the expenditure of very large sums, such as we appropriate and place under his charge, and that he sometimes does not do his work with sufficient care and economy. That is my opinion; and I think the President could find a better man. At the same time I would not take away from the President of the United States the power to appoint this particular officer, and I do not think it ought to be done. He is one of those officers that the President ought to have control of. Senators must reflect in what a position we shall place ourselves if we say that the man who has charge of the President's House and grounds shall not be appointed by the President.

Mr. HOWARD. Let me inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether the present Commissioner of Public Buildings is not the officer who has the expenditure of the appropriations of money on the streets of this city and for lighting the streets?

Mr. SHERMAN. He is.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator will see, if he looks in the report of that officer during the last fiscal year, that he expended about thirty-three thousand dollars by way of improving the streets of the city of Washington, and I should like to inquire of the Senator whether he has observed any very striking evidences of the improvement of the streets of this city, such at least as would be likely to absorb anything like that sum of money? I have seen no evidence of it, I must confess.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not here to praise the gentleman who has charge of this duty. He disburses several times $30,000.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know what is the effect of the amendment which is now pending before the Senate; but I wish to know whether the effect of it is to repeal out of office the present Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. SHERMAN. That would be the effect of the section.

Mr. HOWARD. I shall vote for it then most distinctly and cheerfully.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Finance are certainly opposed to its being inserted here. It must be transposed, as every Senator will see, and not put into the body of the general appropriations in the first section. It will have to be transposed any how. But I appeal to the Senate, not merely in order to strike at an obnoxious man, to attempt to exercise in an appropriation bill a doubtful legislative power, to legislate one man out of office and somebody else in. What right has the Senate of the United States to appoint officers? Where is the constitutional power? It no doubt has the right to appoint an officer of the Senate or perhaps officers of Congress. The two Houses perhaps may authorize the Senate to appoint an officer of Congress. But this man not only has charge of our Capitol, but of all the public buildings in this city, the Executive Departments and the President's House, and he is obliged, in the ordinary discharge of his duties, to be in daily relations with the President. I would not deprive the President, whoever he may be, of the power of appointing such an officer.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let me ask the Senator from Ohio a question. I should like to inquire of him—for I really have not looked into this subject—whether he has any doubt of the authority of Congress to appoint an officer, if you call him an officer, to take charge of this Capitol?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, but I think it would be a violation of the spirit of the Constitution—

Mr. TRUMBULL. To do that?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, not to do that; but after you have clothed an officer with that power which you have a right to do, then under color of that to throw upon him other duties which connect him directly with the executive department of the Government and make him a public officer, that would be a violation of the Constitution. He has to give bonds for the disbursement of money. You may appoint your messengers and employes and persons to take charge of the Capitol; you may appoint persons to take charge of the Senate Chamber; you may say that the Commissioner of Public Buildings shall have nothing to do with the Capitol, and you may appoint some one else to take care of this building and the grounds about it; but it seems to me you cannot under color of that power give a person so appointed by you the right to control the President's house and the Executive Departments. He then becomes an officer of the United States, and not merely an officer of Congress or of the Senate.

Mr. WADE. I do not know exactly the extent of the powers of this officer; but I do know that he has the control of this building, and I believe he has the appointment of the police force that are the guardians of this building and of the Senate and the House of Representatives. If it should ever happen hereafter that there should be any disagreement between the President and the Congress of the United States I think there would be quite as much propriety in our holding this power in our own hands as there would be in giving to any other authority that might be hostile and possibly become dangerous to us.

I think we should not, under present circumstances, or indeed under any circumstances, entirely surrender the control of this building and all that pertains to it to any other department of the Government. There seems to me to be a special propriety in our retaining control over the building and over the force that is to be the guardian of the building and all that concerns it. If there is a necessity for making choice between conferring such power on the President and retaining it in our own hands, I am inclined to apply the rule of Lord Coke; I think we had better enlarge our own jurisdiction rather than diminish it by conferring it upon somebody else. I think the control of this building has been in the hands of the Commissioner of Public Buildings long enough. He is far removed from us; his doings are removed from us. I think the person in charge of this building should be under our control. Perhaps it may be necessary hereafter to have a separate person in charge of this building, but in the mean time I hope Congress will keep in its own hands the power over the subject, and that this section will not be stricken out of the bill. If it is misplaced it can be readily put in some other part of the bill. I have no objection to that being done; but I hope the substance of the provision will be retained, and that we shall have an officer of our own selection to preside over our own concerns.

Mr. SUMNER. It is immaterial to me where in the bill this section appears, whether in the beginning, middle, or end; but I hope that the Senate will not strike it out. The House of Representatives have put it there, and I believe for good reason. If I understood the Senator from Ohio over the way, [Mr. SHERMAN,] he argued that we should not appoint a man to go into the President's house; and yet if I understood the Senator, he was willing that the President should appoint a man to come into our house. What is the difference? If we cannot appoint a man to go into the President's house, pray why should he appoint a man to come into ours?

Mr. SHERMAN. With the consent of my friend from Massachusetts, I will answer his question now. Ordinarily the same officer might take charge of both Houses; but if the President and Congress get so much incensed at each other that Congress thinks the officer who has charge of the public buildings generally must be appointed by Congress, I think it is time for us to separate the duties and make two offices out of the one. If we cannot allow a man appointed by the President to come here and discharge the ordinary functions of our waiter, we had better elect one to take care of this building and give the President another to take care of his.

Mr. SUMNER. I think there is something much better than that, and if my friend thinks about it a second time I believe he will see that there is something better than that; and it is for Congress to take the whole power. Congress represents the people of the United States. Let us take the power, then, since circumstances have shown the necessity for it, of taking care of our own building; and since this building here is the most important in the national capital, let the care of it carry with it the care of the other public buildings. The house of the President is a very small house. What is that beside this great house of the people, which is one of the great structures of the world? Surely we ought to determine who should look after it; and whoever looks after this house ought to look after the President's house. The President's house is but the incident to the Capitol. If we were in other times, if days were tranquil, and if there was an occupant in the President's house in whom we could have any confidence, this question would not be raised. But we have to meet it precisely because there is a President now in whom we can have no confidence. We can place no trust in him, and we must not allow him to appoint our officers. We already at every corner find the disadvantage of it. I am for taking the first opportunity to take that power to ourselves.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not understand that this is a question which involves the merits or demerits of the present Commissioner of Public Buildings, because, assuming that he is an unfit man for the place, the question, it seems to me, is whether or not Congress has the power to provide by law that the Commissioner of Public Buildings or the Superintendent of Public Buildings shall be elected by the Senate. The Constitution provides that all officers of the United States shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, except such inferior officers as Congress may by law vest the appointment of in the President alone, in the heads of Departments, or in the courts of law. Now, is the Commissioner of Public Buildings, or, to employ the language used in this section, the Superintendent of Public Buildings, an officer of the United States? True, he has charge of the Capitol; that is one of the public buildings; and a part of his business relates to this building; but he is also Superintendent of other public buildings; he has charge of the expenditure of a large amount of public money, and performs other duties, general duties, which do not relate exclusively to the transaction of business by Congress. I have no doubt that Congress has the power by law to provide for the appointment of any one of its officers, persons who are under its own control and who discharge any of the duties that relate to the business of Congress; but in this case Congress proposes to provide by law, not for the appointment of this man—it is not a law of Congress by which this man is to be designated—but he is to be elected by the Senate. It appears to me that in that respect this provision is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States; because if we proceed in this way, if simply, because an officer may by his conduct become obnoxious to members of Congress, we can legislate him out of office and vest the appointment in the Senate, then we may proceed in this course to any extent; because there are few officers in the United States who are not in some way related to Congress, or who do not discharge duties that are devolved upon them by the laws of Congress.

The only argument that can be offered for vesting this power of appointment in the Senate, so far as the Commissioner of Public Buildings is concerned—that does not apply to other officers—is that he has, in connection with his other duties, charge of this particular building in which Congress assembles; but he has also charge of the President's house and grounds. He is Commissioner of Public Buildings. He is designated in the law as such, not as an officer of Congress. The other day we provided for the election of a Congressional Printer, and designated him in the law as an officer of Congress; but this section does not propose even to declare that this man is an officer of Congress, but he is to be the Superintendent of the Public Buildings of the United States located at Washington, if you please.

It may be said, but it looks to me a little like evasion, that because among the other duties which this officer has to perform he has charge of the Capitol, he thereby becomes, not an officer of the United States, as he always has been regarded, but an officer of Congress. I have no doubt that the Commissioner of Public Buildings of the United States has always been regarded as much an officer of the United States as any other man in office in the city of Washington. To say that because he has to perform some duties about the Capitol at Washington he is therefore not an officer of the United States, looks to me a little like an evasion of the Constitution. It was on that ground that I concurred in this report, not that I have anything to say in favor of the present incumbent, not that I propose to decide this question at all with reference to his qualifications or claims to the office, but it is on the ground I have stated. It seems to me that we are going in a direction that may lead eventually, by one excuse and another, to a palpable violation of the Constitution. Unless it can be made to appear that this Superintendent of Public Buildings is not an officer of the United States, it cannot be made to appear that Congress has the power to authorize the Senate to appoint him; because if Congress can authorize the Senate to appoint an officer of the United States in one case, it can in all; and it may thus take away from the President all power of appointment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I doubt extremely the authority of Congress to elect a Superintendent of Public Buildings under the Constitution, because the public buildings are not the buildings of Congress as a body, as this particular building is, which we might undoubtedly provide for; but it is the whole public property of the Government in this District, lands and all. At the same time I am satisfied, as the Senate seem to be, entirely, that it is desirable that there should be a change in the office. I move, therefore, to amend the clause proposed to be stricken out by substituting in the place of it these words:

That the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby abolished, and until otherwise provided by law the duties heretofore performed by that officer shall be performed by the Quartermaster General of the Army.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that, by unanimous consent, the whole matter be transposed to page 25 of the bill. It is now right in the midst of section one, which is very improper. I propose that it be transferred to page 25, after line five hundred and eighty-seven.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The transposition will be ordered, no objection being made. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As I have said, I do not believe myself—because that is purely an intellectual question, and our wishes have nothing to do with it—that we have the constitutional power to do the thing which this section that is proposed to be stricken out provides for. I believe it to be equally our constitutional duty to provide for it in some other way in which, in my judgment, we can lawfully provide for it. I think there can be no constitutional objection, I presume none will be suggested, to the amendment which I offer. The question is whether it will not harmonize the views of the Senate, so that we can unite in providing for what we all desire to provide for, and in a proper way. We all know who the Quartermaster General of the Army is; that he is a gentleman of high integrity, of character, of capacity, the line of whose duties hitherto and now would make it perfectly proper for him to superintend and have charge of these public buildings and grounds, and to know how the money that we appropriate so liberally for the adornment and improvement of them, and the lighting of the streets and all that sort of thing, is expended. It appears to me that he is eminently fit and suitable, both as regards position and residence here, and his official means of superintending such affairs for the United States. These are my reasons for offering the substitute.

Mr. WADE. As to the constitutional argument against this section I do not yield to it; I do not think there is anything in it. Congress has the right of legislation over all subjects whatever within this District, and perhaps the question here raised does not arise so particularly in regard to matters in this District as it would in the States. Certainly the Constitution has given us the right of legislation upon all questions affecting this District in the largest manner that it could be given. But even if that were not so, I should have very great doubt whether the strait and almost literal construction that gentlemen seek here to enforce applies in this case. It seems to me you might as well say we could not elect our Sergeant-at-Arms or our Doorkeeper or any other officer, but must go to the President for him, or vest the power of appointing him in some court or in the head of some Department. The principal business of this officer in my judgment, his principal duty is to superintend this building, and then we have attached to that duty certain others, such as superintending some of the concerns of the President's house; but I do not think there is any constitutional difficulty in the way of our appointing an officer to have charge of this building.

I have to say again that I think there is great propriety in our taking this matter in our own hands. I do not want to allude to what has been said, but we cannot overlook the fact that we have been threatened by the friends of the President here with violence from time to time, and the President, so far as I know, has never done or said anything to mitigate or negative those threats, but his own organs have continually threatened us that if we did so and so we should stand in danger of being driven out. It is true, I have not believed a word of all this; but still when I see such things I do not want the man from whom or whose friends these threats come to appoint guardians over us. I think we had better keep the power in our own hands, and appoint our own police and our own officer to superintend the building. It seems to me to be much better, much more appropriate, and much more in accordance with the dignity of the position we hold. I should have no objection to the President superintending his own household if it is thought proper to give him that right; but I do not like to be under his control or under the control of officers appointed by him. I would rather be under officers of our own choice and selection. In regard to this matter, whoever the President may be, I think it is more consonant with the dignity of this great body and of Congress to appoint their own agents and officers for their own safety and convenience than it is to vest that power in anybody else. I wish to retain in the bill this section in some shape. If it is out of place where it is, I have no objection to its being put somewhere else in the bill.

Mr. DIXON. A remark which fell from the Senator from Ohio leads me to say a single word on this subject. He said there had been threats of violence toward Congress, that they were to be driven out of this building. Now, sir, I must say that that was news to me. I never have heard such threats; I have never seen any authentic statements of any such threats. I think the honorable Senator is mistaken. I very much doubt whether anybody has ever threatened any violence; certainly the President of the United States never has threatened any violence, nor any friend of his. I regret that the Senator from Ohio made such a statement. I presume he had some authority for the statement; but I must say for myself that I never heard such threats, and I doubt very much whether they have been made.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know that it is in my power to throw any light upon this subject that would be likely to satisfy the Senator from Connecticut. I presume the avenues of information have been equally open to him as to the rest of mankind, and I venture to say that the rest of mankind have generally understood from the tone of the newspapers printed and published in the interest of the President of the United States, both at the South and at the North, that it was their wish that he should interfere with Congress with violence and turn them out of their seats as an unconstitutional body, such as he repeatedly denominated them in his public speeches while swinging so elegantly and joyously "around the circle." Surely the Senator from Connecticut is not ignorant of all this. Has he ever read a copperhead rebel newspaper printed south of Mason and Dixon's line? If he has, I am quite confident that he has made himself acquainted with this state of feeling on the part of the journals in the country who are in the interest of the President of the United States, and who are his friends. Has he ever read several New York journals, equally in the interest of the President, and is he ignorant of the fact that they have repeatedly, continuously, and almost habitually given this same treasonable and guilty instruction to their chief and master?

Is he entirely ignorant of the tone of the National Intelligencer, published in this city, whose columns have been loaded week after week and month after month with similar advice, published under the nose of the President, and understood to be under his patronage and under his control? Surely the Senator is not ignorant of all these menaces which have almost daily issued from the Johnson-rebel newspapers of the country. And it is perfectly natural that they should give him this advice. Why? Because he himself on repeated occasions, the most solemn occasions, in his addresses to the people when he has been journeying about the country, has denounced Congress as an unconstitutional body claiming to be a Legislature hanging upon the verge of the Government, and of course not constituting in his opinion any part of the legitimate Government of the United States.

Can a President of the United States, who is so legally and constitutionally, quietly sit down and tolerate the presence of a body of men acting as usurpers and claiming to be the Legislature of the country? Would it not be his duty, if such were the real fact, if such were the real truth in fact and in law, to take immediate steps to disperse them, or to arrest them, and to cast them into prison? And still this is the man who signed more than two hundred bills of this present Congress during the last session, approving of them as the legitimate acts of the legitimate Congress of the United States. He really did cut a fine figure, and presented to the world a magnificent spectacle of statesmanship and patriotism, in going about the country setting up his offices for sale to the highest bidder, and at the same time denouncing as unconstitutional that same Congress who created many of these offices, who passed the two hundred and odd bills which he himself had signed as President of the United States! Sir, I hardly know what to make of the temper of such a man. Does he believe this to be a legitimate Congress, whose legislation is binding upon the people? If he does it is most marvelous that he should take such liberties with them; that he should turn presidential calumniator against the very Congress whose bills he had signed.

Sir, there is no telling what the rashness and madness of a certain class of men may lead them to do, and for one I deem it the part of common prudence, now that we have it in our power, to take some security against contingencies such as I have pointed out. If he is for war, if he intends to carry out the purposes which he has announced in terms too distinct to be misunderstood, it is our bounden duty to protect ourselves by all the means which the Constitution, the laws of the land, and the will of the people have placed in our hands, and we shall be derelict, in my judgment, if we fail to do so.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the Senator proceeds I beg leave to modify the amendment which I have proposed, and to put it in a shape which, on consultation with Senators, I think more likely to meet their approval. I wish to modify it so that it shall read in this wise:

That the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby abolished; and it shall be the duty of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a competent civil engineer, whose duty it shall be to perform all the duties now by law required of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and who shall also be the engineer of the aqueduct.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that the duties be given to the chief Engineer of the Army.

Mr. DIXON. As a reason for the adoption of the section contained in the bill which proposes virtually to remove the Commissioner of Public Buildings, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] said that threats had been made of violence toward Congress, that Congress was to be driven from this building. I of course understood that Senator to mean that threats had been made, I will not say authorized, but made by some person who had in some way the sanction of the President, indirectly at least—

Mr. WADE. The Senator will permit me to interrupt him. He does not seem to understand what I said. I said such threats had been made by papers that appeared to be the President's organs, papers friendly to him, and with no rebuke on his part that I knew of. Nobody can have failed to see them in the National Intelligencer and in the Constitutional Union published here, and in almost all the papers published south of us.

Mr. DIXON. I did not mean, of course, to reflect upon the Senator for what he had said; but he made the statement that such threats had been made. I denied it. I did not mean to say that there was no maniac, no lunatic, no infatuated person in the United States—no, I may say fool of an editor, for there are fools among editors as well as among other men—that there was not some man in the United States who had uttered such a threat. I do not know of any extent of folly or of madness which some human being has not reached; but I do undertake to say that there has never been a threat of violence toward Congress which the President of the United States has ever indulged in or sanctioned.

Mr. SUMNER. Allow me to ask my friend whether the President of the United States himself has not used language tending directly to personal violence?

Mr. DIXON. I think not.

Mr. SUMNER. I allude to his unhappy speech of the 22d of February, 1866.

Mr. DIXON. I think he has not.

Mr. JOHNSON. I rise for the purpose of inquiring what the question before the Senate is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) The question is the amendment moved by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Vermont proposes in lieu of the second section to insert:

That the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby abolished, and it shall be the duty of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a competent civil engineer—

Mr. JOHNSON. That will do. I do not exactly see how that amendment presents in any way the conduct or action which may possibly be anticipated of the President or his organs; and as we are very much pushed for time, I suggest to my friend from Connecticut that perhaps it would be as well to let that part of the debate stop where it now is.

Mr. DIXON. I barely wished to say that I had never heard of any such threats. The President has recommended to Congress, in repeated messages, the propriety of admitting loyal members from the States lately in rebellion; and this is the extent to which he has gone. He has acknowledged the right of each House to judge of the qualifications of its members, but has urged the importance of not excluding all because some may be disqualified; and he has held that it was the part of wisdom and the dictate of sound policy for each House to admit loyal members from the southern States. I understand that to be the substance of what he has said, and the explanation of his course.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As there is executive business which requires attention, I wish to move an executive session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have this question disposed of if possible. I trust we can take the vote on this amendment without further debate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, when a thing is to be done, I think the right way is to give the real reason for it. Now, if Senators want to get Mr. French out of office so as to put a partisan of their own in, the right way is to say so. You have got the power to do it. That is, you mean to say that one man shall receive a salary of $3,000 a year instead of another because of his political views. That is the square statement of this business, and I do not see any occasion to wander away from that particular point to an abuse of the President of the United States. Whatever language the President may have used in regard to Congress every Senator knows very well that it meant just this, that the President thought Congress was not constituted and organized now as it ought to be; that twenty Senators, representing ten States, are excluded from participation in the deliberations of this body, and a corresponding number of Representatives excluded in the other House; and that the President believes that is not right under the Constitution. We all, without distinction of party, know that that is what the President meant in the language he used. When he referred to Congress being on the verge of the Government, or anything of that sort, it simply meant what he had repeated so often, that Congress ought to be full: representation here ought to be from all the States. He had expressed his views so fully and so often upon that question that a misunderstanding of it is not possible. The President never spoke of making an attack upon Congress, making war upon Congress in the sense referred to by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.] And does the Senator from Ohio expect the country to think that the real reason of this legislation is that Congress wants somebody to protect it? Does the Senator expect the common-sense people to believe for one minute that we want a Commissioner of Public Buildings to stand guard over us, and to save Congress from a personal attack or from a military attack on the part of the President?

Mr. HOWARD. I beg pardon for interrupting the Senator from Indiana; but if what he alleges was all the President intended by what he said, and said so often, why did the President use the terms "unconstitutional body" in reference to the Congress of the United States? I take it a body that is unconstitutional has no power to enact laws for the people of the United States. If that was all Mr. Johnson meant, how does he explain that meaning in reference to the very terms which he used?

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Michigan knows very well what it all means just as well as I do.

Mr. HOWARD. I think I do.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The President has over and over again said that under the Constitution of the United States he believes that all the States are entitled to representation, inasmuch as the language of the Constitution upon that subject is very plain. When the President of the United States spoke of an unconstitutional Congress, the Senator must take that in connection with all else that he said on the subject, especially that which he has officially communicated to Congress; and it is to this point and this point alone that the Constitution requires that there shall be a representation from all the States, and that is denied to a part of the States, and therefore the President thinks the Constitution is violated.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well; if for that reason the Congress of which he so spoke was an unconstitutional body, and therefore unauthorized to enact laws for the people of the United States, was there any obligation on the President of the United States to carry those laws into execution? Does it not follow clearly from the language employed that he entertained in his own mind the idea that he was not bound by his oath of office to see that the laws passed by that Congress should be executed?

Mr. HENDRICKS. The President of the United States has never said that Congress was an unconstitutional body in that sense; that it could not enact laws. On the contrary, by every act of his in connection with Congress he has recognized the body as valid and competent to enact laws.

Mr. HOWARD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. And the Senator knows just as well as I do that the President has never questioned the constitutional power of Congress to enact laws; for he has recognized that when he has delivered messages to us in writing; he has recognized that when he has signed bills which Congress has passed; he recognizes that when he executes the laws which have been passed by Congress, as he does.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well; then what did the President mean in his speech at St. Louis, in which he uttered the gentle threat that he would veto the acts of this Congress whenever they were presented to him?

Mr. HENDRICKS. What language did the President use?

Mr. HOWARD. I believe that was the exact language.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think the President used the language just as the Senator has stated it. I do not undertake to recollect those kind of speeches.

Mr. HOWARD. I will send for and get a copy of the speech itself.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The President has indulged a little in that, and since this Congress met he has vetoed a couple of bills; and I think there is some prospect that he may veto some more. I think it is his duty to veto some more, and I hope he will do it; but when he vetoed a bill the Senator knows that by the veto he recognizes the constitutional power of Congress to enact a law. So with what logic or legal force the Senator's proposition can be maintained I am at a loss to understand.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President—

Mr. FESSENDEN. My friend will allow me to appeal to him. We have an immense deal of business to do; and I really do not see what the discussion of those old speeches has to do with the question before the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I agree with the Senator from Maine; and if he had only stopped his friends about half an hour ago, when they were giving a reason for a very small kind of legislation that did not govern them, I should have been better pleased. If any Senator will get up here and say that he wants the protection of the Commissioner of Public Buildings to him or the Senate, and that that is the motive which governs him in voting for this proposition, I shall then understand it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Oh, do let us vote.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There is no Senator, I think, who will disrobe himself of his own manhood enough to say that. Who is afraid of the President? What Senator? Who wants Mr. French or anybody else to stand guard over us? Is that the reason that is to be given for this legislation? But, sir, if the President used unbecoming language at St. Louis, what do Senators think of the language used here against him? Is Congress excused in recriminating in such terms as are used here from day to day?

But, Mr. President, the Senator from Maine is right about this, and I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate. He has appealed to me to discontinue this discussion, so that we may go on with legislation. If his friend from Ohio and the Senator from Michigan will take the same suggestion, I will abide by it. If they will subside, I will subside. [Laughter.] That is a fair and square proposition. I say this legislation is simply to put one man into office instead of another.

Mr. WADE. I have no fears of the President or any of his agents, and never have had, but I do not like to have him pretend to appoint a guardian over us when we do not ask it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Who is our guardian?

Mr. WADE. The police of this Capitol are here for some purpose.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Are they our guardians?

Mr. FESSENDEN. (to Mr. WADE.) They are all our friends.

Mr. WADE. I do not know whether they are our friends or not, and I do not care. Gentlemen may be as calm as lambs now; but it was not so toward the end of the last session of Congress. Some of them boasted that they were going to the people, and that they would come back in such strength that, combined with what they had in the rebel States, they would form a majority, and the President would recognize his friends, North and South, as the Congress, thus making a party and Congress of his own, and that we should have to step aside. This was echoed all over the country, through his organs everywhere; and yet gentlemen now come here and tell us that they meant nothing by it. Sir, they did mean it, and if they had the strength and power to carry it out and the courage to back them I doubt not whether it would not have been so. Certainly such things were dreamed of. It was treason to think of them; it was high treason to speak it here; and when reported by the agents of the President, and alluded to in such terms by himself, it was what we might very well take measures to guard against if we thought fit. I know very well that if we had not been successful with the people, if they had not backed us up, we should have been in peril, or there is no truth in the Democracy. [Laughter.] I do not think there is enough to cause a man much peril or much fear; but when gentlemen get up now and tell us that they meant nothing by this, that we know they did not mean anything, I beg leave to say that I think they did mean something. I think that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth spoke. I think it did not speak much wisdom; nor do I think that if they had been successful there would have been the courage to back their threats. But that they made them, and that they intended something by them, I have no more doubt than that I am here. They told us what they would do in case they were successful, having no doubt that they would be successful. I never feared that the people would back them in such an enterprise as that, and consequently never apprehended anything; but, as I said before, when you put a guard over this Capitol in times like these, I think our dignity requires that we should be the authors of our own protection, and should select the superintendent who has charge of the Capitol in which we do our business. There is no necessity of trusting it to anybody else.

I have said nothing about the Commissioner of Public Buildings. The Senator from Indiana says that we do this to get rid of an officer whom we do not like. I have not mentioned his name or alluded to him. I thought there was a peculiar fitness in our retaining this power in our own hands, as we retain the power to appoint all the officers that belong to the Senate and to the House of Representatives. This officer has almost as much to do with us and for our convenience in the arrangement of this building and other matters pertaining to our business here as the Sergeant-at-Arms or the Door-keeper; and in my judgment we ought to have the same power over him. That is all there is in the question. I have stated my opinion. If the Senate judge otherwise I shall be content.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened at five o'clock, and the Senate took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

TULLER AND FISHER.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to take up for consideration House joint resolution No. 175. The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 175) to audit and pay the claim of Tuller & Fisher, of Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The horses, coaches, stage property, and means of transportation of Messrs. Owen Tuller and Ulysses E. Fisher, mail contractors on mail route No. 10648, between Springfield and Rolla, in the State of Missouri, having been impressed in the military service and taken possession of and used by competent military authority, by reason of which a large amount of the property was captured by the enemy and lost to the contractors, the resolution proposes to require the Secretary of the Treasury to have the claim of said Tuller and Fisher audited, and to pay to them the amount that shall be found due them for such losses, not exceeding $12,500.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. G. SLOO.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move to take up the Senate joint resolution No. 165, reported some days since from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 165) to refer the claim of the trustees of A. G. Sloo to the Court of Claims, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. Doubts being entertained whether the claim of the trustees of Albert G. Sloo upon the Government of the United States for compensation for extra services in carrying the United States mails from 1851 to 1859, inclusive, is embraced by existing laws giving jurisdiction to the Court of Claims, it is proposed, in order to remove all doubts on that subject, to refer by this resolution this claim of the trustees of Albert G. Sloo to the Court of Claims for adjudication thereof on the petition of the trustees presented to the court, pursuant to authority conferred on the court by any existing law to examine and decide claims referred to it by Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EQUESTRIAN STATUE OF SCOTT.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) for the erection of an equestrian statue to the memory of Brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott. It proposes to direct and authorize the Secretary of War to contract with Henry K. Brown, Esq., of Newburgh, New York, at a price not exceeding $20,000, for an equestrian statue, in bronze, of Brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott, to be made of the guns captured in Mexico, and to be placed upon his grave at West Point.

The Committee on Military Affairs proposed to amend the resolution by striking out the words "with Henry K. Brown, Esq., of Newburgh, New York."

Mr. WILSON. When the committee reported the amendment, we were apprehensive that this was a job got up for the benefit of this person; but it turns out on investigation that Mr. Brown knew nothing of the fact that this resolution was offered, and he is recommended by the artists of the country as the fittest man for the task, as preëminently qualified. I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be sustained.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to strike out the words "upon his grave at West Point," and to insert "in Franklin square, in the city of Washington."

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to know where Franklin square is.

Mr. GRIMES. Franklin square is one of the public squares of the city, and the Senator himself lives very near it.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not know it by its name at any rate.

Mr. GRIMES. I apprehend that there is hardly any other gentleman here who does not know it. It is a beautiful square, and it seems to me that this capital is the place where this monument, if it is to be an equestrian statue, should be erected, and not in a grave-yard a mile or a mile and a half from the public buildings and Military Academy at West Point, where no one will see it, and where it is not appropriate.

Mr. SUMNER. I doubt whether that is really the best place for it. I do not wish to take up time about it.

Mr. GRIMES. I think it is the best place. It is an unoccupied square, and we have made appropriations for decorating it. I am willing, however, to modify the amendment so as to provide for its location in some of the public squares of the city of Washington.

Mr. SUMNER. I should rather say that than point out a particular square.

Mr. LANE. I hope the Senator from Iowa will add to his amendment, as modified, the words "to be designated by the Secretary of War."

Mr. GRIMES. I so modify the amendment.

Mr. NESMITH. I trust the amendment will not be adopted. General Scott's remains are interred at West Point, and I think it most appropriate that a monument of this kind should be over his remains. West Point is visited by many of the people of the United States who travel, and I think it is proper that this monument should be erected at the great military school of the nation.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Oregon may know a place where an equestrian statue has been erected in a grave-yard over the remains of some deceased warrior or statesman, but I never heard of such a thing. These statues are not erected as monuments over the tombs of persons anywhere in the world so far as I know, but are always erected in a public square or some prominent place, to commemorate the character of the man, rather than as a memorial of his decease.

Mr. NESMITH. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that if a case of that kind has never occurred, it is time that it did occur, and I trust this monument in memory of General Scott will be erected at West Point.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I desire to say, before the resolution is passed, that I am very glad the name of Mr. Brown is inserted. I believe he is the only person at this moment on the American continent with regard to whom we have any evidence that he is capable of making an equestrian statue. The two equestrian statues, so-called, now in this city, I presume any person of taste will call abominations, which ought to be removed. Mr. Brown has shown by his statue of Washington, in New York, that he is essentially a sculptor and an honor to our country and this age. I am very glad that we are now about to give him this authority.

Mr. GRIMES. I merely wish to correct a clerical mistake which has been made in transposing the words in the first line, so that it shall read "authorized and directed" instead of "directed and authorized."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think it is right to allow the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts to go without some reply. I think his is not the judgment of the country in regard to the two statues executed by Mills, to which he has referred. I do not make any professions myself to judgment upon questions of that sort; but I have heard the opinion of very cultivated gentlemen upon the question, and they place these two statues in a very high rank among the specimens of art in the world. I do not see that it was necessary to go out of the way to traduce an American artist, a man who made himself all he is, without any early opportunities, a poor boy, starting in life without any advantages, never having seen works of art at all, as I understand, never having the opportunity because of his poverty to travel in foreign countries and cultivate his taste. He has executed what I think is an honor to the country. I regret that in the Senate of the United States there should be done toward that distinguished citizen what I regard as injustice.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to embarrass this resolution or delay it; but my impression is that the amendment first proposed by the Senator from Iowa would be a better amendment than that leaving the designation of the square to the Secretary of War. Franklin square, in my judgment, is the best place for it. It is a public square in a conspicuous part of the city. It is true I live on it, and the Secretary of War lives on it, and it might embarrass him to name that place. I have no doubt the Secretary would select Franklin square unless he felt embarrassed by the fact that he lives on it. I think there is no doubt about its being the best place. It is at the corner of Fourteenth and K streets, near the public grounds, and I would rather see the name of Franklin square inserted so as to relieve the Secretary of War from all embarrassment.

Mr. SUMNER. There is another place I would mention now. Suppose it were placed at the head of Pennsylvania avenue, looking down the avenue, just in front of the Treasury; a much better place and more conspicuous.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it would be a proper place to put a statue of the head of the Army, in the Treasury grounds.

Mr. SUMNER. In front of the Treasury building. That comes to my mind just at this moment, and therefore I mention it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Secretary of War would not want to designate any place which was not eminently proper, and he might feel embarrassed in selecting Franklin square, which is evidently the proper place, because he lives on it. I move, therefore, to amend the amendment which was adopted in Committee of the Whole on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, so as to make it read "on Franklin square, unless the Secretary of War shall deem proper to designate another place." That will leave it open to the Secretary to select a place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the permission of the Senate, the Chair will first take the question on concurring in the other amendment which is not named by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on concurring in the amendment referred to by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend that amendment, so as to make it read "on Franklin square or such other place in the city of Washington as the Secretary of War may designate."

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator has given us notice that he lives on Franklin square, and he naturally is prejudiced in favor of it. Now, there are half a dozen places that occur to me right off that to my mind would be preferable for it. I would take any one of the little openings on Pennsylvania avenue and prefer it ten times over to Franklin square. There are two or three of these little triangular spaces between here and the Treasury. Put it in any one of those, and it is ten times better than in Franklin square. And why it is ten times better? Because if a statue has any value it ought to be where it can be seen, where it can tell its story, and where, if it is a work of art, as I think if this is done by Mr. Brown it will be, it can be admired. Put it in Franklin square, and the Senator would see it every day, and that of course would be a great pleasure to him; and I should be very glad that he should be pleased; but I think you had better leave the matter entirely open without giving any preference to any particular square.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There is an embarrassment in leaving it to the present Secretary of War because his residence is in Franklin square. Perhaps some other officer had better be designated to locate it who does not reside in the city of Washington, say the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know the delicacy of the Secretary of War in matters of this kind. I believe he would feel embarrassed. It might be said that he was influenced by his own personal gratification.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the amendment will not be made. I hope it will be allowed to stand without any designation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in; there being on a division—ayes 23, noes 5.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the chairman of this committee inform us what evidence he has that the special artist named in this resolution is entitled to this honor, and what experience this artist has had already.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that the committee at the last session left out the name with the view of allowing the Government to select a proper person; but since then there has come from the artists of the country a very general expression of the strongest character in favor of Mr. Brown as preëminently fit above all other men in the country for this work, and I have not the shadow of a doubt about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all very good; but my question was, what work of art he had executed?

Mr. LANE. The statue of Washington, in the city of New York, the finest work of art upon the American continent, is by this artist.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is one statue. I do not agree with the Senator that that is the finest work of art on the American continent by any means.

Mr. SUMNER. The finest equestrian statue.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not believe in this method of undertaking to designate in advance, if you are going to have a work of art, what particular artist shall do it, because it is perfectly impossible once in a thousand times for a general body to ascertain what particular person is the best. It ought to be left to the Government, in the judgment and discretion of whose officers we ought to have confidence enough to believe that they will select the right artist. It looks so much, as it generally is, like a job—I do not mean that it is in this instance; I do not know anything about it, as to what are the inducements, and I do not impute it in this case; but in general we know that these things are got up in favor of special and particular persons. I believe the only right way is to leave it to the officers of the Government to choose, upon their responsibility to us as the representatives of the Treasury and of the people, the proper persons to perform these works that we think to be necessary.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

Mr. SUMNER. As the resolution is on its passage I desire now, that it may go for what it is worth, to enter my protest in advance against this statue being placed in Franklin square. In placing it there you will depart from all precedents of art. I cannot at this moment recall a single equestrian statue anywhere which is placed as the Senator from Ohio now proposes to place this.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Jackson statue in this city.

Mr. SUMNER. An abomination, properly placed where it cannot be seen. An equestrian statue, to be enjoyed, should be placed where it can be seen. It must be placed on the highway, or close to the highway, where you are not obliged to travel far in order to enjoy it. For instance, the work of this same artist in Union square, in New York, is where every passer-by can see it and enjoy its ability. And if one goes to Europe in imagination there is not a single considerable equestrian statue anywhere worthy of note that is placed where the Senator from Ohio proposes to hide this.

I make these remarks now, in advance, and by way of protest and notice. The place that is proposed is inconsiderable. It ought not to be there. If we are to appropriate this money, I wish the statue to be where the people can really enjoy it and profit by it, not place it in a recess or in a hiding-place where it can only be enjoyed by the Secretary of War and the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cattell, Creawell, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Foster, Fowler, Grimes, Hendricks, Howe, Lane, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wilson—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Cragin, Edmunds, Fogg, Harris, Pomeroy, and Wade—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Patterson, Poland, Riddle, Saulsbury, Williams, and Yates—20.

So the joint resolution was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House has passed the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. No. 182) for printing additional copies of the Appendix to the Diplomatic Correspondence of 1865.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1867.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 878, to quiet the title to land in the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives has passed the bill of the Senate (S. No. 592) to provide for a temporary increase of the pay of officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced the passage by the House of a bill (H. R. No. 1222) for the relief of Samuel Silver, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, to report it with amendments. I hope it will be printed by to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I send to the Chair an amendment, which I intend to propose to the internal revenue bill, which I ask to have printed with the other amendments.

The proposed amendment was ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1868, and for other purposes, reported that having met, after full and free conference the committee were unable to agree.

On motion by Mr. FESSENDEN,

Resolved, That the Senate further insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and disagreed to the amendment of the House to the forty-sixth amendment of the Senate thereto, and ask a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. POLAND, and Mr. BUCKALEW.

SANTA CLARA LAND TITLES.

Mr. CONNESS, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 878) to quiet the title to land in the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill of the House No. 878, to quiet title to land in the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California, after full and free conference, do agree to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from so much of their amendment as inserts in the bill, and also in the title, the word "Placerville," and that the Senate agree to the said amendment as modified;

And also that the House recede from their disagreement to the other amendments of the Senate to the said bill, and agree to the same.

JOHN CONNESS,

HENRY WILSON,

JOSEPH S. FOWLER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

D. C. McRUER,

S. T. HOLMES,

A. J. GLOSSENER,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. EDMUNDS to the clause abolishing the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings, which the Committee on Finance proposed to strike out.

Mr. MORRILL. Is it in order to amend the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. It is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I ask the attention of my friend from Vermont to the proposition which I will read, and I ask him to accept it as a modification of his amendment, in order to make it a little more complete. It is to add to his amendment:

Said engineer shall have the superintendence of the Washington aqueduct and all public works and improvements of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, unless otherwise provided by law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I accept the modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont, as modified by him, will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

That the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby abolished; and it shall be the duty of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a competent civil engineer who shall perform all the duties now required by law of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and who shall also have the superintendence of the Washington aqueduct and all the public works and improvements of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, unless otherwise provided by law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to suggest a further modification of the amendment by adding to it:

And the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall hereafter appoint the members of the Capitol police.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to that, and I accept it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make this motion at the suggestion of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, Mr. French himself, who says that practically that has been done in times past, and that it would be a relief to any officer charged with this business to have that duty invested upon the Presiding Officers of the Senate and House of Representatives, who really have legal custody of this building, and therefore it is proper that they should have the power to designate the police.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the clause as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on striking out the section as amended.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Have we taken a vote on striking out the section as originally reported from the House of Representatives?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section as it came from the House has been amended by the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, on the principle that the section may be perfected before the question is taken on striking it out.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. This section as it came from the House has been stricken out already, then?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It has been altered by the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I should have said nothing on this section but for a remark that fell from the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.] Speaking of those who sustained the President's policy, he said, "You had threatened by force to drive out the present Congress and to recognize and establish another Congress." I undertake to say that the Senator from Ohio has, in my opinion, heard no such language from any gentleman in this body, with the exception it may be that language once used by a Senator from Kentucky was susceptible of such a construction. When that language was used by him the Senator from Ohio must remember that gentlemen who sustained the Administration at once took issue with him and declared that such a doctrine was not to be tolerated and was revolutionary in its character.

Mr. DAVIS. I presume that the allusion in the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin is to myself. I never uttered such a sentiment as he says was attributed to me. I never spoke in favor of any man or any power driving any Senator from this body. I spoke of the right of the Senators from the southern States to be admitted as Senators upon this floor, and I am of that opinion still. I said this: that the President had the unquestionable power under the Constitution, if there were two bodies of men collected together, each claiming to be the Senate of the United States, to recognize which one of the bodies he pleased as the Senate; and in that position I am sustained by the decisions of the Supreme Court. Instead of that principle being revolutionary, it is in the strictest conformity to the Constitution, and has been sustained by the Supreme Court in repeated decisions, as I am ready at any time to prove.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think a further amendment is needed to make the section perfect. The salary of this officer ought to be fixed by law. I move, therefore, to amend the amendment by inserting at the proper place "whose annual compensation shall be $8,000 per annum."

Mr. TRUMBULL. It ought to be more. Certainly if you get a competent man for this place he ought to have more than that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He has to be superintendent of the aqueduct also.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think we pay an engineer for the aqueduct alone $2,500 or $3,000 now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say $4,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think $4,000 is certainly small enough.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suppose the amendment is not amendable, as it is an amendment to an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is an amendment to an amendment, and is therefore not amendable.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not see why we should have a civil engineer to take charge of the public buildings. Why not an architect? I think these should be separate offices. I do not think one man can attend to all that is here proposed. What we want for our buildings here is a business man, not an architect, not an engineer, but a man of energy and business capacity. If the Senate would leave out the provision relative to the aqueduct and strike out the words "civil engineer" and insert "a suitable person" it would improve the amendment very much.

Mr. MORRILL. I think it is important that this amendment should provide for a professional engineer. Many of the improvements which Congress from time to time is called upon to perform here really involve the skill of an engineer. We are paying now, and have been for many years, some $3,000 for the services of a civil engineer to superintend the Washington aqueduct alone.

Mr. WILSON. Is he not an Army officer?

Mr. MORRILL. No. He is simply employed by the Secretary of the Interior. There is no reason in the world why all this duty should not be performed by one man. Then, if we have a competent person who is skilled as a civil engineer—and I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that he ought to be a man of business as well as a civil engineer—we should have under one head, combined in one management, the entire improvements in the public works of this District; and until they are reduced to one general head it will be a patch-work in the future, as it has been in the past. I attach, therefore, the utmost importance to the amendment of the honorable Senator from Vermont. We ought to have a man of first-rate talent, first-rate ability, and he ought to be a professional engineer, in my judgment. I agree of course with the honorable Senator from Rhode Island that he ought to be a business man. I agree with the honorable Senator from Illinois that $4,000 a year for such services is not too much. I should hope that the Senator from Ohio would accept that as an amendment to his proposition.

Mr. HOWE. I am profoundly indifferent whether the section as it stands is stricken out or not. The idea of abolishing one office to make another in the way proposed here does not seem to me much of a speculation. I have no special reason for being dissatisfied with the services of the present Commissioner of Public Buildings. I have one reason for desiring to continue his services. We have done but very little since the advent of this Administration to promote and foster literature, and we have now an opportunity for doing something in that way. I am rather inclined to avail myself of the opportunity. We have done a great deal for the profession of civil engineers; nothing for the poets. So, if the issue is between a poet and an engineer, I am decidedly for the poet. But I should have preferred the section as it came from the House of Representatives. I do not know how we are ever going to get back to that. It has been so thoroughly and completely buried up by amendments that I do not know but that we can ever dig it out again. I do not know but that when the bill is reported to the Senate and the question is upon the adoption of these amendments, that section may be reached again. I should like to inquire, for information, if that question will then come before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will come up again when the bill is reported to the Senate. The question then will be on concurring in the Senate with the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOWE. If, then, this section is now stricken out by the Senate in committee, the only question put to the Senate will be upon concurring in the amendment striking out the section; but if the section be retained then the question will be put in the Senate upon concurring in the amendments to the section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the effect, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. HOWE. Then before I vote in earnest on this question I think I shall wait till the bill comes into the Senate. I should be very glad to see the section retained as it came from the House of Representatives. Of our authority to choose a man to take charge of the public buildings that we make and provide every dollar that is expended upon I have no manner of doubt. I certainly think there is no more doubt of our authority to elect a man to take charge of them than there was, as suggested by the Senator from Vermont, to charge that duty upon a particular individual. I cannot conceive that there is any doubt of our constitutional authority over that question, and if I can get at that question when the bill comes into the Senate I will vote upon it. As the question now stands, I believe I shall be obliged to vote to retain this section and vote against striking it out, in order to get at that question in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Chair understand the Senator from Vermont as agreeing to the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, to add a provision for $4,000 salary as a part of the amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out the second section as amended.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in line four hundred and eighty-one on page 21, to strike out "$20,000" and insert "and for continuing the construction of the distributing reservoir to its contemplated bottom, and protecting its banks with slope-wall laid in hydraulic cement, $150,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Washington aqueduct:

For the payment of the employés in the management, engineering, and repairs of the Washington aqueduct, and for continuing the construction of the distributing reservoir to its contemplated bottom, and protecting its banks with slope-wall laid in hydraulic cement, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from line four hundred and ninety-seven to five hundred and two the following proviso to the appropriations for the Columbian Institution for the Deaf and Dumb:

Provided, That deaf mutes residing in the several States and Territories of the United States, applying for admission to the collegiate department of the institution, shall be received on the same terms and conditions as those prescribed by law for residents of the District of Columbia, at the discretion of the president of the institution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section five, lines two and three, to strike out "the same as that of the appraiser general of Boston" and insert "$3,000;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the salary of the general appraiser in the city of New York shall be $3,000. And the salaries of the assistant appraisers at Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Portland, and San Francisco shall be $2,500 per annum.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to know the present salaries.

Mr. SHERMAN. The general appraiser in New York now gets $2,500; the general appraiser in Boston, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section seven, to strike out "hereafter" before "paid," in line twenty-eight, and to insert "hereafter" after "advertisements," in line twenty-nine. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is one provision in the seventh section which escaped the attention of the committee. It provides that the Clerk of the House shall select in the States named, for the publication of the laws, "one or more newspapers not exceeding in number the number of Representatives to which they would severally have been entitled by the apportionment based upon the census of 1860." My impression is that the law as it now stands confines the publication to two newspapers in each State. I think it better to strike out, in line five, the words "in number," and after "number" to strike out "of Representatives" to which they would severally have been entitled by the apportionment based upon the census of 1860" and insert "now allowed by law;" so as to read "not exceeding the number now allowed by law." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to insert as an additional section:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to such assistant assessors as were actually employed in the collection of internal revenue in the rebel States prior to the 1st day of August, 1863, compensation at the rate prescribed by law, and an amount sufficient for that purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. This is an old subject that we have had before the Senate several times heretofore, and I think this proposition never met the approbation of the Senate. I hope Senators will give their attention to it and certainly not allow it to pass sub silentio. The Secretary of the Treasury, in open violation of law, against a positive statute, thought proper to appoint persons to assess and collect the revenue in the rebel States who could not take the oath of office. In other words, he appointed men who had been engaged in the rebellion to do the work of this Government in defiance of a positive statute. They were continued in office after Congress met; and now I am sorry to see that the Committee on Finance have reported a section in favor of paying these persons thus employed in violation of law, and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury in his discretion to pay them. The language is:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to such assistant assessors as were actually employed in the collection of internal revenue in the rebel States prior to the 1st day of August, 1863, compensation at the rate prescribed by law.

And it then proceeds to make an appropriation of a sum sufficient for that purpose. No such provision as this would be necessary if these officers had not been appointed and continued in office contrary to law. The law provides that a person who cannot take the oath shall not be paid. The Secretary of the Treasury knew this, and a provision is here made to pay these parties down to the 1st day of August, 1863, to the close of the last session of Congress. I think it is setting a very bad example to the officers of the Government if after they have violated the law, and violated it in so objectionable a form as this by employing rebels to do the work of the Government, that violation of law is to be set aside and the parties thus appointed to office to receive the same compensation as if they had been legally in office. There will be very little encouragement hereafter for officers to do their duty, and to comply with the law, if these dispensing statutes are to be passed to relieve them from the consequences of violations of the law.

Mr. SHERMAN. The facts that induced the Committee on Finance to report this amendment are very simple, and may be briefly stated. The Secretary of the Treasury, if I remember aright, in his annual report a year and a half ago stated that it was impossible for him in certain districts in the southern States to procure resident assistant assessors to discharge the duties imposed by law. The law required that every assistant assessor should live in the county in which he was appointed. Another law declared that no one should be appointed who did not take the oath prescribed by law. The Secretary stated in his report that he could not get such persons residents in many of the counties in the southern States, and was compelled, from the necessity of the case, to employ other persons, and to dispense to some extent with the oath required by law. An effort was made at the last session of Congress to modify the oath so far as the assistant assessors in rebel States were concerned; but Congress, by a decided vote, refused to modify the oath. In the mean time, however, these persons, not very many of them, but so many as were employed, continued to discharge their duties, and actually rendered efficient service to the Government as assistant assessors, and their claims were presented to Congress at this session and referred by the Senate to the Committee on Finance. After an examination of two or three of these claims, we found that the services had been actually rendered in good faith upon the appointments made by the Secretary of the Treasury, and had been continued until Congress had determined that money should not be paid to them, when they were promptly discharged, so far as the facts before us show. This amendment simply provides that until the time Congress determined that they should not be paid they shall be compensated for the services actually rendered.

Now, I would ask the Senate whether it would be wise or just to refuse these men payment for their services when those services were rendered in the discharge of their duty, as they supposed, by order of the Secretary of the Treasury in pursuance of law, when the services were, as it appears, faithfully and honestly rendered and the taxes assessed by these assessors were collected by the Government? Under these circumstances the committee thought it was not wise to refuse to these men payment for services actually rendered. Hence we provide that they shall be paid up to the 1st of August, and prohibited all pay beyond that, because we thought the Secretary of the Treasury was bound to respect and did respect the decision of Congress at the last session.

It may be said that these services were rendered without law or in violation of law. That was true, and it was admitted by the Secretary of the Treasury; but the necessity for it was stated and the services were actually rendered by these men. Their money was expended, and we have had the benefit of their services; we have collected the taxes assessed by them. These claims were supported by urgent letters from some of the leading loyal men of the southern States, among the rest by Joshua Hill, of Georgia, and by very many Unionists in Charleston, South Carolina, and perhaps by others. Under these circumstances the Committee on Finance thought it was but just to pay for services actually rendered up to the 1st of August, and from that time as a matter of course these persons cannot draw any pay. It is a question appealing simply to the equity and I think the justice of Congress.

Mr. SUMNER. The Secretary of the Treasury has been guilty of an illegal act; ay, more, sir, he has been guilty of a crime, and the Senator from Ohio is now seeking to cover it over. I use plain language, for it is only in that way that the conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury can be properly characterized. There was a law of the land as positive, as plain, as imperative as any law in the statute-book which prohibited the employment of any person who could not take a certain oath. In defiance of that statute the Secretary of the Treasury, in his insane policy of reconstruction, in that madness which visited him and the President whom he served, undertook to employ certain persons who could not take this oath. Complaint was made, and how did the Secretary vindicate himself? By a falsehood, by an untruth. I have his report in my hands, from which I shall read. In it he said:

"In most of the southern States nearly every man of the character and intelligence necessary to qualify him for a position as a revenue officer, some time during the progress of the war, either engaged in hostilities against the Government of the United States, or held (willingly or unwillingly) office under rebel authority."

Now, it is notorious, and there has been ample evidence before the Senate, that in every one of the southern States there were faithful Unionists, some of whom had borne the brunt of battle under your flag, who could have held every one of these offices. In face of that unquestionable fact the Secretary goes forward and appoints rebels; and then he adds to the enormity of his conduct by a declaration of the notorious untruth that there were not Unionists who could be appointed.

Sir, the Congress of the United States has been too patient under the misconduct of that officer. I had the honor at the beginning of the last session of calling the attention of the Senate to these very transactions, and I now hold in my hand the report of the Secretary which was made in answer to a call which was passed through the Senate on my motion. Senators may remember that at the time it was debated I say nothing now which I did not say then. The Secretary of the Treasury has been guilty of the grossest violation of law. Congress ought to have censured him in the most solemn way. Both Houses ought to have censured him for this violation of a law of the land. But now, at this late hour, the Senator from Ohio comes forward and asks us to pay the rebels who have been thus put in office in defiance of the laws of the land. Sir, if anybody is expected to pay them, let the Secretary of the Treasury pay them out of his own pocket. He is the offender; he has violated the laws of the land; let him pay for the violation. I am against putting my hands into the pockets of the good people of this country to pay for the misconduct of one of our public servants.

When an act is done in unconscious violation of law there may be an occasion perhaps for some kind of remedy; but here there was an open, flagrant, barefaced violation of the law of the land. All who are familiar with the history of the time know how notoriously and with what barefaced language he vindicated it. You see his report, which I hold in my hand, by which he also vindicated it, perhaps in less barefaced language than he notoriously employed in his daily conversation, but there it is, an open violation of the law of the land; and now, if I understand the Senator from Ohio, he proposes to pay down to a certain date, and what date does he select? The date when he assumes that Congress had determined not to change the oath. Why, sir, Congress determined originally on the 2d day of July, 1862, not to change the oath. It was on that day that the oath became the law of the land, and when it became the law of the land you had embodied in it the determination of Congress not to change it, certainly until the change was made. I submit, therefore, that there is no occasion now for us to put our hands into the pockets of the loyal people of the United States to make payment to rebels. If the payment is to be made, let the Secretary of the Treasury, who in violation of law undertook to appoint these men, pay it out of his own pocket.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust my friend from Michigan will allow me to reply in a few words to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CHANDLER. This proposition is the substance of a bill which I originally drew.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know, but I desire now a few moments for the purpose of replying to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have nothing to say with respect to the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to the Secretary of the Treasury. It seems he has some difficulty with the Secretary of the Treasury, or some dislike to him, and he vents that dislike on every occasion, proper or improper.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator will pardon me—

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not yield now.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senator will not charge me with—

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not yield the floor. The Senator from Massachusetts has said that the Senator from Ohio endeavors to cover up a crime. Mr. President, it is not parliamentary language, and the Senator prides himself on using such. It is not gentlemanly language, and the Senator prides himself on using such. It is false. I have endeavored to conceal no crime; and I never did conceal crime in all my life. The same charge could be made in regard to every member of the Committee on Finance, and in regard to the Committee on Commerce which reported the same proposition at the last session, and also in regard to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. It seems to me that it is too strong language to say that a Senator here in the discharge of his duty, in the advocacy of an important public measure, is covering up a crime. Certainly we did not seek to cover up a crime; on the contrary, the claim that is proposed to be paid by this amendment is as just as can possibly be made by any man under the circumstances by which these men were surrounded. These men, it is true, could not hold office under and by virtue of the provisions of a law in which I concurred, which met my hearty approval. I refer to the law providing that no man should discharge the duties of any office under the United States who could not take the oath of office. That was the law; but the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report last year stated that on the close of the rebellion he could not find in some counties of the southern States proper men who could take this oath. Wherever he could find such men he employed them, but in some of the counties he could not find them. The Postmaster General made the same declaration. Why does not the Senator now abuse one of the honored citizens of my own State who made the same declaration?

Mr. SUMNER. Who was that?

Mr. SHERMAN. Postmaster General Denison. He made the same declaration, and actually did appoint as postmasters in the southern States persons who could not take the oath of office, and they have actually been paid by appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. SUMNER. Does the Senator ask me the question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; and I will hear your answer.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator will have the goodness to go back to the debates at the beginning of last session, he will find that I criticised the Postmaster General as I criticised the Secretary of the Treasury, and that all the information on this subject was brought out on my call, whether it concerned the Treasury or the Post Office just the same.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then let us look at it. These men who could not take the oath of office were employed by two public officers, and the reasons for that action were given in their formal communications to Congress. Congress, with this fact staring them in the face, with full official knowledge that these men were going on in the discharge of their duties, that they were assessing taxes, took no action for months. No action was had by Congress until the close of the last session, and then in one of the appropriation bills by a definite vote Congress refused to recognize the validity of this employment, refused to pay the persons up to that time for the services rendered. In the mean time these men had performed the work; they had made out their assessment rolls, and on these rolls we collected money. We have appropriated and spent the money collected by these men, and now it is proposed to refuse them their pay. If my friend from Massachusetts should go to his house and see some negro man sawing a pile of wood, and he should allow that man to proceed until the employment was finished, would he then turn around and say to him, "I will not pay you for this because I did not employ you?" Would that be honorable or honest or just? Certainly not. The law would say that in such a case the Senator must pay for the cutting of the wood, because he allowed the person to go on in an employment beneficial to him and did not object to it. By the plainest principles of law he would be held responsible. That is precisely this case. These men rendered services, and we have availed ourselves of their services. We knew they were rendering the services and we made no objection to it. For five months they continued to render these services before Congress acted on the subject, and then Congress acted so as to deny the obligation.

Mr. SUMNER. Allow me to correct the Senator there. Objection was made to these services; I think it was the first week of the last session of Congress. There was no occasion of course for a statute; all that was needed was to call attention to the existing law of the land, which I did from my place, and the Secretary of the Treasury was standing on the floor of the Senate Chamber at the time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then the question is whether an assistant assessor discharging his duties in the State of Georgia would probably know what the Senator from Massachusetts said here in the Senate of the United States. On the contrary, would he not rely upon the official appointment of the Secretary of the Treasury, and go on in the discharge of the duties of his office? If the voice of the Senator from Massachusetts was so potent, he ought to have put it in the form of a joint resolution and have had the sanction of Congress. It was natural that the assistant assessor would go on in the discharge of his duties until he heard the potent voice of Congress. The Senator from Massachusetts, although eminent in his way, must not suppose that he is so potent that every word he utters here about an insignificant matter of this kind shall be heeded in the remotest parts of the Union, and that an officer of the law will act in conformity to his opinions instead of to the official documents before him signed by the Secretary of the Treasury. But I know the Senator spoke warmly. He does not really intend to repudiate what is a fair and just obligation.

I am informed by the honorable Senator from Maine, a member of the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. MORRILL,] that that committee have reported in favor of paying these claims where the service was actually rendered in certain cases. Some applications, however, were referred to the Committee on Finance, and we examined them and came to the conclusion that after the decision by Congress was rendered these men ought not to draw pay; and so far as we could learn, all of them were then discontinued; but up to that time we thought it was but just and right that they should be paid. The amount involved in this appropriation probably does not exceed $10,000. There are between fifty and one hundred assistant assessors who discharged duties under these circumstances. One of the claims sent to us amounts to $107, and others are for amounts equally small. For us to refuse to pay these little accounts it seems to me is carrying the doctrine of rebeledom and loyalty to an extreme. Even rebels might render service to the Government for which the Government might be willing to pay them. If these services were rendered in violation of law it is a mere appeal to our equity, and I submit to every Senator to say whether under the circumstances these men ought not to have their pay. If not they will besiege the Halls of Congress and will eventually get the whole amount through the Committee on Claims or by appeals in individual cases to the equity of Congress. I think we might as well settle the question at once, pay them, and dispose of the case.

Mr. CHANDLER. Last winter the Committee on Commerce introduced a joint resolution to pay these claims, and my impression is that the Senate passed it upon the ground that these parties were innocent persons, and that unless the Congress of the United States impeached the Secretary of the Treasury for crime Congress was bound to pay these claims; that the only criminal was the Secretary of the Treasury, who appointed them. These men accepted their commissions believing that they had a right to accept them, and under their belief they had that right. The Secretary of the Treasury, however, knew that he was committing a crime. The Senator from Massachusetts properly says that it was a crime, and it was a crime known to him when he committed it. He knew that these parties could not take the oath. He knew that he was violating the law in appointing them; but they, perhaps, did not know it. They were innocent individuals. The Committee on Commerce reported a joint resolution to pay them for their services, and my recollection is that the Senate passed that joint resolution. I may be mistaken, but that is my recollection.

Mr. SUMNER. No; the Senate never passed it.

Mr. CHANDLER. But if the Senate did it was defeated in the House of Representatives. In my argument a year ago I said that if the Congress of the United States did not impeach the criminal, the Secretary of the Treasury, it must pay the claims, the honest claims of these innocent individuals.

Mr. SUMNER. Allow me to suggest to my friend another way. Make the Secretary of the Treasury pay them out of his own pocket.

Mr. CHANDLER. He is not able; he is a pauper. He cannot pay one hundredth part of them. The Government cannot afford to take that position. Congress must either impeach the criminal and bring him to the bar of justice, or must pay the honest claims against the Government.

But, sir, these claims seem to have been transferred in some way from the Committee on Commerce and put into the hands of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. And we came to the same conclusion.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well, they ought not to have been transferred. The case should go back where it started, and I hope the Senate will reject it since it has been transferred. Let it go back where it belongs. It does not belong to the Finance Committee. It is properly in the hands of the Committee on Commerce, and if it is a just claim we will carry it through if we can. I hope, however, the Senate will not submit to the transfer, but will reject it in the hands of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make my humble apologies to the honorable Senator for this question having been transferred from the Committee on Commerce to the Committee on Finance. It seems the Committee on Commerce very wisely came to a correct conclusion on the subject. I am only sorry the Senator did not press the matter to a final vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senate did press it to a final vote, and passed it according to my recollection; but the other House rejected it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is mistaken. The Committee on Finance had nothing to do with having the matter sent to them. I hope the Senate will take that into consideration in deciding the measure of punishment that ought to be accorded to us. The subject was referred specially to the Committee on Finance without our motion, and it properly belongs to the Committee on Finance. I do not see how it ever went to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHANDLER. It belongs to them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not. I do not see what the Committee on Commerce have to do with collecting the internal revenue, and I do not think anybody else can see that but the Senator from Michigan. I did not know before that the Committee on Commerce attended to the internal revenue, and I supposed that really was the chief business of the Committee on Finance; but as both committees have come to the same conclusion, I do not think there ought to be any controversy between us.

Mr. WADE. I feel no particular bias as to which committee considers this subject, nor do I feel at all interested about it. We did very deliberately and with a stern purpose pass a law that no person should be employed in this agency unless he could take a certain oath. That oath was published to the people of the United States. The law was as well-known to the people as any law that we require shall be obeyed. It is a well-known legal maxim that no man can plead ignorance of the law. Even in the sternest criminal cases a man who has violated the law is not allowed to come up in open court and say that he did not know there was any such law. The courts do not hear such an excuse, even when they are going to visit on a man exemplary punishment for a crime. Surely if the courts will not permit such a defense it ought not to be allowed in this case.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me, I will state to him that these persons cannot even plead ignorance of the law; for they were informed in the communications of the Treasury Department that if they did not take this oath they could not be paid, and they went on knowingly.

Mr. WADE. I did not care to resort even to that kind of evidence, because if you let everybody off by a plea of ignorance of the law, as is attempted here, there would be very little use of passing any laws. I do not see how we can vindicate our own principles if we pay these claims. If the parties did not know that they were violating the law, it would be a hardship on them, to be sure; but it is one of those hardships that you cannot remedy without trampling the law under foot and giving universal impunity to anybody that see fit to violate it. There is the difficulty. I have no ill feeling against these people; but they did undertake to execute a business which you had sternly prohibited them by law from doing under a penalty; and having done it, it is now proposed, not that they shall be punished for their violation of the law, but to pay them for the work and labor they did in violating the law. If we do that they will hold us and our legislation in utter contempt. We cannot do it and preserve the dignity, authority, and power of Congress. I do not see how we can do it unless we mean to license all transgressions of the laws. If you pay these men for work and labor done in transgressing your law, how can you punish anybody for its transgression hereafter?

It is said these men have labored for us and they are equitably entitled to pay. No court on God's earth would permit such an obligation to be inferred. No man can raise an assumption to pay a debt for labor in violation of the law. If you do what is now proposed, you give universal immunity to everybody to transgress and violate your law. I do not see how you can do it; and I hope no man will vote for it who intends to vindicate the laws we lay down for the government of the country.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, there is more involved in this than a few thousand dollars, $10,000 I think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] said.

Mr. SHERMAN. The claims we have had presented to us are about from one hundred to one hundred and twenty dollars each, and I do not know how many there are.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is not the amount of money that is involved in it, nor is it any desire, on my part certainly, to cast any imputation upon the Secretary of the Treasury. I have no unkind feelings toward that officer. I have not, and never have had, any other than relations of personal kindness with him. It is only as a public matter that I regard this as important. The loyal men of the South whom I have seen—and I appeal now to the Senator from Ohio and to the members of the Reconstruction Committee in this body for the truth of what I say—the loyal men of the South who have come here complaining of the condition of things there, have based their complaint upon the fact that offices in the rebel States have been filled by disloyal men. That is the great complaint on the part of our loyal friends all through the rebel States. And what has been the complaint in regard to the reconstruction policy adopted by the President? It has been that under that policy disloyal men have taken control of the political organizations in the rebel States. Certainly I would not care how the political organizations originated in a State if, when formed, they were in the hands of loyal men, and legislated so as to protect the rights of loyal men and of all alike. It would be immaterial how the organizations originated or who got them up in that event. Our complaint, and the question upon which we went before the people during the last canvass, was that under the policy of the President, the rebel States had been placed under the control of rebels. And now what do we propose to do? After having made this point: after having carried the country upon it; after having passed a bill through Congress at this very session disregarding the governments in the disloyal States, because they were in the hands of disloyal men, you propose to turn around and pay the officers who, in violation of your law, were appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Here is the importance of this question.

I recollect that early in this session I had occasion to present a memorial here from the loyal people of Louisiana; and I was furnished with evidence at that time, and stated in the few remarks which I then submitted to the Senate, that in the State of Alabama loyal citizens of that State were being taxed to raise money to pay the salaries of disloyal officers, of officers under the rebel government; and I recollect that I was informed at that time by a gentleman who had fled from his home to avoid conscription into the rebel ranks, and who afterward raised a regiment for our Army, that the very officer who commanded the squad of rebels that drove him from home when they were endeavoring to conscript him into the rebel service, had been paid a salary for his services while a rebel officer out of the money raised by taxation in Alabama since the conflict of arms had ceased; and now you propose to tax the people of this country to raise the money to pay rebels who held office in utter violation of your law.

It will not do for the Senator from Ohio to say that this was stopped as soon as the Secretary's attention was called to it. It was no inadvertence. One of the very first things which the Congress of the United States did after assembling a year ago last December was to pass a resolution on the 13th of December, 1865, calling for information in relation to persons in the employ of the Treasury Department who had not taken the oath prescribed by law. The Secretary of the Treasury responded to that resolution on the 5th of January, 1866. Again, on the 11th of April, 1866, nearly a year ago, we had another response from him, and I hold it in my hand, and there is upon one page of it a list of more than fifty persons in the employ of the Treasury Department who have not taken the oath, and the names are given.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me ask the Senator whether Congress took any action upon that report?

Mr. TRUMBULL. What action was necessary? Must we repeat our laws? What action could we take?

Mr. SUMNER. Allow me to interrupt my friend there. In the debate on that report it was stated all around that no action was needed; that there was a law of the land which the Secretary was bound to obey.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I would ask what other action was necessary than to point the Secretary of the Treasury to the law. The law was quoted in the very resolution which was submitted in this body. I will read the resolution which the Senate passed, as I said, on the 13th of December, 1865:

"Whereas it is provided by act of Congress that every person in the civil, military, and naval departments of the public service, excepting the President of the United States, shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, and before being entitled to any of the salary or other emoluments thereof, take and subscribe a certain oath in prescribed form; and it is further provided in another act of Congress (February 9, 1863, chapter twenty-five, section two,) that 'no money shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States to any person acting as an officer, civil, military, or naval, as salary in any office, which office is not authorized by some previously existing law, unless where such office shall be subsequently sanctioned by law; and whereas it is reported that, notwithstanding these acts of Congress, certain persons have been allowed to enter upon the duties of office, and to receive the salary and emoluments thereof, without taking the prescribed oath, and certain other persons have been appointed to offices not authorized by any previously existing law.' Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War be requested, so far as the records of their respective Departments allow, to inform the Senate whether any persons have been permitted to enter upon the duties of office, and to receive the salary and emoluments thereof, without taking the oath prescribed by Congress, or, if they have taken it, adding thereto explanations; and also whether persons have been appointed to any office not authorized by some previously existing law; and if any persons have been so permitted or appointed, then to report if the same have received any salary or emoluments, and what they were, and out of what fund they have been paid, with the reasons for such permission or appointment, and also the explanations, if any, assigned by such parties at the time of taking such prescribed oath."

Could the Secretary misunderstand Congress when they called his attention to this law and said to him that it was reported or represented that persons had been appointed in violation of law, and he was called upon to say if that was so, and he sent his report here with the names upon one page of fifty-eight persons holding office in direct defiance of that statute which said that no person should enter upon the discharge of the duties of any office, civil, military, or naval, in the Government without first taking the prescribed oath? Now, the Senator from Ohio wants to know if we took any action. There was the statute. It need not be repeated. I trust it is not necessary to give line upon line and precept upon precept to a public officer as to his duty. It is enough if Congress has declared the law, and, when he violates it, points him to it and says, "Thus it is written."

But it is now proposed by the Finance Committee, which the Senator from Ohio represents on this occasion, to pay these officers, not up to the 13th of December, 1865, when this resolution was passed, not up to the time when the answer came in in January or in April, and the discussion took place, but to pay them until August, 1866, half a year afterward. Why, sir, we should cease in this body and before the people of the country complaining of the Executive of the United States, that he appointed provisional governors without authority of law, and afterward paid them without authority of law. We should cease complaining of the Administration or the policy of the President that it has inaugurated in power rebels, if we are prepared to pass a law here sanctioning the acts which have been done in appointing rebels to office, in defiance of law, by making an appropriation to pay them the salaries which the law said they should not receive.

Mr. DIXON. I do not desire to say a word in regard to the proper construction of the law to which the Senator from Illinois has alluded on the question whether this money shall be paid, but to allude to a single charge which fell from the lips of the Senator from Massachusetts with regard to the Secretary of the Treasury. He says he said precisely the same thing of the Postmaster General. I think he is mistaken. If I understood him this evening he said that the Secretary of the Treasury had not only been guilty of a violation of law, but that he had been guilty of falsehood—that was the word—actual untruth; that he had added to the violation of law falsehood. Now, sir, I am not here to say that what the Senator from Massachusetts has said is improper. I know too well the proprieties of the Senate to take upon myself to intimate that any Senator has said what he ought not to have said in this body; but I do say that the Secretary of the Treasury has not been guilty of untruth or of falsehood. I take issue with the Senator on that subject. Now, sir, I will read what the Secretary of the Treasury did say:

"In most of the southern States nearly every man of the character and intelligence necessary to qualify him for a position as a revenue officer, some time during the progress of the war either engaged in hostilities against the Government of the United States, or held (willingly or unwillingly) office under rebel authority."

That is what the Senator says is a falsehood, an untruth on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury. Now I take upon myself to say that the assertion is true, and that the Secretary therefore has been guilty of no falsehood, and that the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts were not deserved.

Mr. NYE. I simply desire that it may be known that I am opposed to this amendment, and I am sorry to see the struggle between the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Finance for the honor of the introduction of this measure. The measure itself is an insult to the loyal people of this nation. It is a downright wrong on its face, and in its essence and whole character. It is a base outrage to tax the maimed and wounded soldiers of the Federal Army to pay for illegal services rendered perhaps by persons from the rebel army, whose hands were red with loyal blood at the time they entered upon their official duties. It seems to me, in a word, that the Senate of the United States would perform an act that would do anything but redound to the dignity and the glory of this country by adopting this proposition. I undertake to say in mildest phrase that the Secretary of the Treasury was entirely mistaken when in his report he said that loyal men could not be found to discharge the duties of these offices. Sir, the last gathering of loyal men in the city of Philadelphia showed an army of loyalists who would not suffer in intelligence or integrity by comparison with any Senator upon this floor. The State of Alabama alone presented the scattered remains and desolated ranks of an entire regiment that had borne, not only the brunt of the battle, but borne the scorn and contumely of the men who came to gather taxes at their door. In mildest phrase, I repeat, the Secretary of the Treasury was mistaken when he said that. It cannot be that he looked for them. It is as patent as that the light shines upon us that this city was crowded with refugees begging, not for place, but for bread, that had been driven by the cruelty of these men from the States where these officials were doing their work.

But, Mr. President, these men were not officers. They were appointed in open violation of the law. It was no legal appointment. They knew what the law was. Not one of them had the power to enforce the collection of a dollar. Neither had the Government a bond from them that was worth the paper on which it was written. Overlooking in a word the entire Union population of those States, putting the men who had lorded over them with the sword to drain their last little pittance as tax-gatherers, with no responsibility to the Government, I should like to know how the Committee on Finance ascertained that they discharged their duties faithfully. To what tribunal were they bound to report? None. It was simply a license from the Secretary of the Treasury to illegally collect taxes that the Government could not coerce the collection of a single penny of.

Sir, in the name of common decency, and in the name of common propriety to the Union sentiment of the South, I protest against this legislation. It is wrong in itself, and I desire to record my vote against it. I know that the constituency whom I represent would feel wounded in their own person to have money wrung from them to pay red-handed rebels, illegally appointed, for services that they had no right to perform. The amount is nothing; but it is the character of the legislation to which I object. It is a recognition, a legislative recognition of a downright wrong. The Senator from Ohio said, very properly I have no doubt, that he would cover up no crime; that was not his duty, I do not believe the Committee on Finance intend to do that; but they have mistaken, I think, in a moment of generosity, what was stern duty in regard to this question. I am willing to trust the high sense of honor of the Committee on Finance; but while this proposition redounds to their generosity, it works a downright outrage upon the laws of this land, and the Senator from Illinois well remarked that we had better stop finding fault with the President for his illegal and improper actions if we here indorse the principle upon which he has acted.

Sir, I am content to record my vote against this measure, and I sincerely hope that this body will not adopt it. I hope that upon a review of the question it will so strike the Committee on Finance, who have the honor now of taking the proposition from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Nevada cannot be in earnest in saying we took this from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NYE. I leave that question to the Senator from Ohio and my belligerent friend from Michigan. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I have before me five papers which were referred to the Committee on Finance by the Senate.

Mr. NYE. I desire to relieve the Senator from any misapprehension. There have been papers enough here for all the committees.

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is one petition, in which the petitioner states exactly what he did in the ordinary form of a revenue return. It seems that Thomas D. E. Dudley, one of these petitioners, rendered his account in the regular form prescribed by the Treasury regulations for the amount of $115 58. This is certified to by the assessor, who was appointed and confirmed, no doubt a loyal man, for the first district of South Carolina. It seems that the amount of his assessments was about two thousand dollars. The amount assessed on the monthly list $125, on the annual list $595, on the special list $1,182; making about two thousand dollars collected on his assessments, and his account for services is $115 58. I have no doubt the Treasury of the United States received this $2,000, and it could not have been received but for his assessments. In his petition he states, whether truly or not, that there was no one in his district who could have subscribed to the oath.

Mr. SUMNER. Now I ask the Senator whether he can believe that?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not say that I cannot believe any man who makes a statement until I know the contrary.

Mr. SUMNER. When any person tells me that in one of those districts there was nobody who could take the oath, I take the liberty to say that I do not believe it.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the State of South Carolina, where this man lived, I am not prepared to say that there was any person in one of the districts competent to discharge the duties of the office who could take the oath. No doubt all fell under its operations directly or indirectly; but I do not go into that question. Suppose it is true this man rendered service as assistant assessor, and he earned, according to the law, $115.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Not according to law. Mr. SHERMAN. He could not take the oath; but by his services he has secured to the Government $2,000. Now, will the Government refuse to pay him $115, and at the same time keep the money that has been collected through his agency? I have done my duty. We had no doubt about the question, after full examination, in the Committee on Finance. It was an appeal to our sense of justice and our sense of equity.

Mr. SUMNER. I should not have said another word but for the remarks of the Senator from Ohio. He complained because I called the conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury criminal.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; I did not say anything about that.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the report will show that the Senator said a good deal about it; and then he complained because I went further and said that he had sought to cover up a crime. Now, I mean that there shall be no question between my friend from Ohio and myself on that. I do not suppose that my friend intends intentionally, if I may say so, to cover up a crime; but I do say that the effect of all he is now proposing to do is to cover up a crime, and a great crime, against the loyal people of this country. The Senator evidently does not feel very strongly on these questions. Those of us who listen to him in debate know that he feels less strongly upon them than some of the rest of us. He did not feel strongly when some of us felt it our duty to arraign the Secretary of the Treasury, now more than a year ago, for the crime he had committed. He was not aroused then; he did not summon to his mind those brave Unionists, all of whom were blasted by the conduct of this functionary here in Washington. He gave his sympathies at that time to the rebels appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury as he gives his sympathies to them now. Very well; I am sorry for it; I wish it were otherwise.

Sir, there is but one policy by which peace can be secured to this country. It is by cordiality and sympathy extended toward those brave Unionists who have been for so long a time looking for shelter under our flag. Alas! they have not yet found it. The flag has appeared within their borders; it has traversed their land; one bearing the name of the Senator from Ohio has carried it across their territory; but down to this hour that flag has failed to afford to the Unionists the protection which they have a right to expect. And now, sir, that protection, let me say, can be afforded only by requiring obedience to the laws of the land. We have already enacted, so far as we can do, a statute providing military protection for their protection with some elements of reconstruction. Must not that statute be obeyed? Is it to be trifled with? Is it to be set at naught? The Senator from Ohio sets an example of trifling with the laws of the land. I insist that the laws of the land throughout that whole region, so far as they are calculated to provide protection for the loyal people, shall not be trifled with. And now let us on this occasion set an example; let us teach the functionaries here that the laws must be obeyed; let us teach the loyal people throughout those States that they may look to the laws of the land for protection. It is in this spirit that I object to any such payment as is now proposed.

I have already said that if the payment is to be made it should be made by the criminal. Let the Secretary of the Treasury pay for the agents that he has employed in defiance of law. The Senator from Michigan says that he is a pauper and cannot pay. I know nothing about that. I only know that he is a great offender, who ought to be held to account. In the discharge of my duty here now to the measure of my ability I do hold him to account.

I will not, however, travel with these facts and characterize that officer further. Perhaps some other occasion may come yet when I may express my mind more freely with regard to him.

The Senator from Ohio says that I have some personal unkindness to the Secretary. The Senator does me injustice. I judge the Secretary by his acts. It is now something more than a year ago that I had occasion to denounce him for this very transaction which I now drag again into the Senate Chamber. Since then other incidents have occurred, all of the same character, showing how radically unworthy he is of public trust.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I believe the members of this body speak under the protection of the Constitution of the United States, and for language uttered here they cannot be called in question in any other place unless indeed it be in the forum of public opinion. The Senator from Massachusetts in denouncing a high officer of the Government as a criminal and ringing the charges upon that word, and the Senator from Michigan, perhaps with still more elevated taste, in informing us that he is a pauper instead of a high official of the Government, speak without any responsibility to the individual whom they assail. They cannot be called to account except here, and called to account only by way of debate.

I propose to show that the charge to which I first adverted is unjust. I do not think it is my business to investigate the pecuniary condition of the Secretary of the Treasury as a citizen of this country.

The employment of persons who were not qualified to take the oath prescribed by the act of July, 1862, was wholly discontinued when the action of Congress took place in July, 1866. No such persons have been employed in the public service since Congress expressed their opinion at that time. The employment of these persons was about the time of the conclusion of the war and for a brief period afterward, when the condition of things in the southern country was unsettled, and when it was necessary for the Treasury Department, by energetic and prompt action, to extend our revenue laws over that portion of the Union. Men described as "loyal," in the parlance of the times, and described as such, too, in our legislation, were appointed to those offices; a great part of them from the northern or central States. They were sent down into the southern country, some by Mr. Lincoln and some by his successor, in the latter part of 1864 and in the summer of 1865. These assessors sent there, and toward the latter portion of this period persons selected in some of those States that had been disloyal during the war were all qualified, as I understand, and all took the oath prescribed by the act of 1862; but in proceeding to their districts for the purpose of executing the laws, performing the duties with which they were charged, they found themselves unable to put the laws into execution because they could not obtain the proper assistance. They reported to the Secretary of the Treasury that it was necessary to employ certain persons who were competent and in whom they could confide to assist them; and it was upon these reports and applications that the selection of these subordinates was made. I have just looked at the list which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] held in his hand, and every one of the officers in that list, I think fifty-eight in number, are assistant assessors. None of them are principal officers.

Mr. SHERMAN. No collectors or assessors.

Mr. BUCKALEW. No collector or assessor in the whole southern country was appointed from among those persons who could not take the oath prescribed by the act of July, 1862.

Now, sir, what was the alternative presented to the Secretary of the Treasury at that time? It is proclaimed here that he broke the law. Consider that it was his duty to execute your revenue laws. That was a duty charged upon him by his official position; and if he had failed to apply his best efforts, put forth his best exertions for the purpose of executing the laws, he would, in the coarse and rude language of this debate, have broken the law, and to that extent would have been criminal. He had an alternative presented to him. It was that the revenue laws should not be executed, or that he should temporarily employ persons in the execution of those laws who could not take the test oath of 1862. So much, sir, with regard to the condition of things when he was called upon to act on this subject.

At the meeting of Congress in December, 1865, to a resolution promptly introduced and passed here, the Secretary responded and responded frankly. He told us precisely what he had done; he described the circumstances under which he had acted; he informed us of the necessities of the case; and he submitted the whole subject to the judgment and opinion of Congress; and when afterward Congress did act and declared in the summer following, some eight months afterward, that it was its opinion that no such person, even in subordinate employment, should be in the service of the Treasury, the entire practice of employing such persons was discontinued. That is the plain narrative of the conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury in this matter.

Now, sir, what as to these persons who were employed? Of course they were not officers. The law does not prevent the appointment of such persons, but they cannot legally act as officers, nor can they draw pay until they take the oath. The taking of the oath is not a qualification to appointment in the first instance: it is a qualification to the exercise of duties. In the first place, sir, observe that the law has never been violated or impinged upon in the slightest degree as to payment of salaries. Not one dollar has ever been paid for this service. That payment is forbidden by law, and so far the law has been strictly kept. As to their being officers, as to their authority to act in collecting taxes, I have a clear opinion about that. Suppose that a collector in the State of Georgia had reported to the Secretary of the Treasury that he could find no assistants to collect the taxes in his district, could not the Secretary of the Treasury, under such a state of facts, have sent down three or four clerks of his Department to pass around and collect the taxes in a district, and if the people submitted to it, if there was no question there and the taxes were paid and returns made through the regular principal officer, to wit, the collector, would not the proceeding have been legal? It would not have been breaking the law; it would have been an act of necessity. These subordinates of the collector who actually performed the duty would not have been legal officers; but their acts being acquiesced in, there would have been no room for complaint; there would have been no violation of law.

Now, what more was done in this case? Instead of the Secretary sending down a clerical force from his own bureau to assist his officers there, he allowed the assessors to name certain assistants in their districts. Those persons so appointed, in my opinion, violated no law at all in making assessments, and they would have violated no law in making voluntary collections also. The only difficulty in the case would have been, if any tax-payer had resisted the assessment and collection of tax from him, it could not have been perhaps imposed or exacted. The thing was voluntary on the part of the people, and if complaint ought to be made in any quarter with reference to the employment of these assistant assessors, it would be a complaint by the people there upon whom our taxes were charged. There was no law of ours broken. The only effect of those persons proceeding to perform their duties without taking the oath was that they could not enforce their jurisdiction; they were not legal officers; the proceeding was voluntary; they acted simply in the capacity of citizens and in a voluntary manner.

Let me mention a case. Here was an assessor appointed from the State of Kansas, a loyal man there, and sent down to the State of Georgia. He was appointed by Mr. Lincoln, and it was upon his recommendation that several of the persons that are arrayed in this list were engaged as assistants to assist him in the performance of his duties; and I presume that was the case with reference to every other principal assessor who went to that section of the country at that time.

The Senator from Massachusetts carefully avoids in this debate noticing the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury was not alone in his proceeding; that the Postmaster General at that time, under the necessities of the occasion, was obliged to employ persons to attend to the mails in the southern country without taking the oath of office.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senator will excuse me. When I was interrupted before I stated that I believe the fact is the other way. I think, in reply to a call of the Senate, he distinctly stated that he had not employed any such person.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I recollect very well that the Postmaster General responded to the inquiry of the Senate that, in his opinion, there was a necessity for the employment of such persons.

I have but a few words to add. I only speak because this debate ought not to go into our published proceedings without a further statement of the points which constitute an answer to the large amount of declamatory matter to which we have listened. This employment of subordinate revenue officers in the southern country was clearly in good faith, for the purpose of promoting the public interests. What was the object of it? It was to impose and to collect taxes and bring them into the Treasury of the United States. This was the object. It was not to favor rebels; it was not to favor the people of the South; it was to favor our own Treasury; it was for the advantage and for the interests of the United States that this whole proceeding was conducted. Why then such heat and warmth? Why these appeals to popular passion against this proceeding? It was but temporary. It was to meet an exigency in the public service which has passed by, and which will not again recur.

I must remark another thing. This subject was brought up and discussed most thoroughly at the last session of Congress. The Senator from Massachusetts said then all that he can say upon this whole subject, and he had the advantage, if not the pleasure, upon one occasion of speaking in the presence of the Secretary himself, and of speaking with his utmost warmth, and conveying, perhaps to unwilling ears, the entire body of opinion which he held upon this subject. I think the Senator might have been satisfied with the delivery of that triumphant piece of rhetoric with which he assailed this high officer of the Government in this Chamber. He might have been satisfied with the impression which he then produced upon the Senate and upon the country, and have spared us at the present session a repetition of the debate. He might have supposed that we understood what his opinions were on this question and his eminent capacity for turning this proceeding of taxing rebels and collecting revenue into the United States Treasury into a piece of favoritism to the southern people, and of criminal conduct in their interest by our Secretary.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Pennsylvania says that I have made certain charges against the Secretary of the Treasury; among others that he is a pauper. Well, sir, that was a comparative term. The claims that would be brought against him under the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts would amount to millions. As regards his ability to pay those claims he is a pauper, unless he has stolen more than I think he could be able to steal during the time he has been in office. He may have been worth when he came here a few thousand dollars, or a hundred or two hundred thousand dollars; I do not know; but these claims that the Senator from Massachusetts proposes he shall pay amount to millions; and comparatively, therefore, he is a pauper. He could not pay ten cents on the dollar of the claims that would legitimately arise against him under the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts. I did not mean that he could not buy a loaf of bread. He was worth a little something. He had been a cashier or president or something of a little bank out in Indiana; and came here as a clerk, I believe, at two or three thousand dollars a year; I do not remember how much.

Mr. SUMNER. Three thousand dollars a year, I think.

Mr. CHANDLER. Three thousand dollars a year. It was his highest ambition, sir; but it was beyond his merits; it was too high for him. He was not equal to the clerkship; but through the favoritism of a very good man he was promoted; and then, sir, he lost his identity.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If the Senator will permit me, I have one very modest question to ask. I should like to know what clerkship the Secretary of the Treasury filled in the Government?

Mr. CHANDLER. Commissioner or Comptroller of the Currency, I believe.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I was not aware that the Comptrollership of the Currency was a clerkship.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly it is a clerkship at $3,000 a year. It was too high a salary. He was not worth it. [Laughter.] Fifteen hundred dollars would have been enough for him; all he could earn. I would not give him over $1,000 a year to be the teller of my bank in Detroit. [Laughter.] He is not fit for it. He is perhaps fit to manage a little bank out in South Bend. I think he could, with a good board of directors, manage a little bank of $100,000 capital admirably; but if he were in charge of my dry goods store in Detroit he would sink the institution in twelve months. [Laughter.] He is not fit to manage it. He does not know enough about finance to run a dry goods store in Detroit. [Laughter.]

Well, sir, he was not a pauper; he was worth a little something; but when the Senator from Massachusetts proposes that he shall pay these illegal claims, they would swamp all that he ever was worth or ever hoped to be worth.

The Secretary of the Treasury was very well in his place. As a clerk in the Treasury Department under the direction of a competent Treasurer he was very well; but when, through the partiality of the President, he was made Secretary of the Treasury, he lost his balance and turned politician. Well, sir, he is a better politician than he is Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SUMNER. He is a very bad politician.

Mr. CHANDLER. He is a worse Secretary. He knows literally nothing about politics and less about finance. [Laughter.] As a politician the country will judge him; as a financier I judge him.

The Senator from Pennsylvania says that charges have been made here because we are protected. Mr. President, I never made a charge here under the protection of privilege. Every charge that I ever made here I was prepared to make elsewhere and everywhere; and I claim no privilege. I never make a charge here that I am not prepared to publish to the world under my own signature; and if the Secretary of the Treasury takes exception, let him; that is all.

Sir, the Secretary of the Treasury knew, or ought to have known, when he made these appointments that they were illegal; and he knew that he made himself liable to impeachment when he made them. He knew that they were in direct violation of law.

Mr. President, the world has been moving for the last six years. In 1861 this Congress was not prepared to say that slavery should be abolished. In 1862 it was not prepared to say that our armies should not deliver slaves back into the hands of rebels. In 1863 it was hardly prepared to sustain the proclamation of emancipation of Abraham Lincoln. In 1866 it was just prepared for the constitutional amendment, and not any more. In 1867 it is prepared to insist upon the constitutional amendment and negro suffrage and the abolition of the rebel provisional governments. So it has decreed.

In 1861 the rebels were not obliged to us for any concessions that we made. They said it was from cowardice that we made any concessions of humanity or anything else. In 1866 I was prepared to advocate, and did advocate, a bill to pay these rebel claims. The Senator from Nevada has satisfied me that I was mistaken. These men knew that they were not officers of the Government. The Secretary of the Treasury knew that they were not officers of the Government. No man was obliged to pay taxes to them as officers of the Government. I now take back all that I said in 1866 in advocacy of this proposition, except that the Secretary of the Treasury should be impeached for his illegal acts. Then I said that he should be impeached or we should pay.

I believed it, sir. I then said that unless we were prepared to impeach the criminal, we ought to pay these honest men. But, sir, I am now satisfied that these men have held office for a full year after that declaration was made, and I shall now vote against paying them one single cent. They knew they were not officers of the Government, and they had no right to collect a dollar under the law if they were not officers of the law. I hope, sir, that this proposition will not pass at all now.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, it is certainly a somewhat novel position for me to occupy as a defender of the Administration or any member of it; and yet I feel impelled on this occasion to say a few words in vindication of the high standing and integrity and truth of the Secretary of the Treasury. I have known him for thirty years. No man in the State which I in part represent came here with a higher character than he did; he is regarded as an honest, efficient, and able man. Instead of being the cashier or clerk of an inconsiderable bank in the State of Indiana, for many years he was the president of the State Bank of Indiana with some twenty-five branches, and a capital of three or four million dollars, and managed it with great success. His management of that bank was doubtless the reason of his being selected as Comptroller of the Currency, selected by Mr. Lincoln upon his own motion, from personal knowledge of his character as a business man, an honest man, and an upright citizen. The position was not sought by Mr. McCulloch. He came here with great reluctance. After two years' experience as Comptroller of the Currency he was selected by Mr. Lincoln as Secretary of the Treasury, and no man perhaps knew him better or more intimately than did Mr. Lincoln. I cannot then sit quietly by and hear him denounced as a man wanting in truth, wanting in integrity, and having committed a great crime.

I shall not enter into the argument of this case further than to say this: I think as Secretary of the Treasury he violated the law, perhaps, in the appointment of these subordinate officers; but in his case there was a conflict of duty. It was his sworn duty to collect the revenue and enforce the revenue laws. Loyal men were appointed collectors and assessors in every single instance, but were unable to carry out the objects of that appointment without the assistance of some persons known to the community where the officers were stationed. These officers were not appointed by Mr. McCulloch in the first instance. They were appointed upon the recommendation of loyal collectors and assessors. They were not officers in any sense; they were not officers under the act of 1862. The only revenue officers recognized by that law are assessors and collectors for each congressional district. It is true they have a right to appoint assistant collectors with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, but these assistant collectors are in no sense officers. What is an officer? A man appointed to discharge the duties of a certain office, the duties of which are limited and established by law. No such duties are prescribed and established by law to be discharged by these assistant collectors and assessors. The whole duty devolves upon the principals, and they alone are the officers. These others are mere agents, selected for convenience.

But suppose the Secretary of the Treasury made a mistake; is that a crime? Suppose he acted, as we believe, in contravention of the law of 1862. There was a conflict of duties. One duty was to obey the one law; the other, to obey the other. There was an anomalous condition of things in the country. These two duties were inconsistent, and he simply chose between them. I think he made a mistake, though I am not clear as to that, for I think the proof will show that not one single assessor or collector was appointed who could not and did not take the oath.

Now, sir, I do not feel like recognizing payment to these rebels who cannot take the oath, and yet I see a very strong equity in their case. When they were appointed they supposed that their office was legal. They were, perhaps, uninformed as to the law. I recognize the old law maxim, that ignorance of the law can excuse no man; and perhaps in strictness, in technical law, they might not in a court of law, as between individuals, recover their compensation. But here are poor, obscure deputy assessors and collectors, who have discharged duties to the Government where the whole charge for their services is less than $10,000, and where millions have been collected in your Treasury. Does it become a great, just, generous, magnanimous nation to turn around and make a technical point upon a hundred and twenty-five dollar account of a deputy whose services are certified to by your own assessors and collectors appointed by the President and confirmed by this very Senate? Every one of these collectors and assessors swore to the justice of this account, and you turn around and say you will not recognize the affidavit of your own officers, confirmed by yourselves, and will make this technical point against a petty deputy assessor whose account is only $125.

Any gentleman who will read these papers will see the strong equity of the case, even though he may fail to apply technical law learning to such a case. One of them I saw but a moment ago, certified to by our own collector, appointed and confirmed by your own Government. He was a member of the South Carolina Legislature, voted against the ordinance of secession, voted against sending troops to Virginia; but at a later stage of the rebellion he gave some aid to it, and therefore could not conscientiously take the oath; and the very moment the oath was presented he resigned his office. You owe him $121, and you will not pay him for fear you are encouraging rebels and acknowledging the sovereignty of the rebel States! This hundred and twenty-one dollar account, for honest service honestly rendered, is too little a point to make, as it seems to me, as acknowledging the sovereignty of the southern confederacy. I cannot see it in that light.

But I rose simply to enter my protest against this charge of want of honesty or want of integrity or ability on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury. God knows I see little enough in this Administration or in any of its personnel to vindicate and justify. It may be that a mistake has been made here; but that Mr. McCulloch in that report to the Senate uttered a deliberate falsehood I will not and cannot believe. What was the statement? That he could not get assistant assessors and collectors who could take the oath. Suppose he could have got hundreds; but suppose he had been misinformed, and really believed what he said in the report; is there any falsehood in that? Is there any crime in that? Suppose he simply chose the alternative between a conflict of duty and the enforcement of two laws; is there any crime in that?

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "that" in the first line and inserting:

In employing persons who could not take the oath required by law as assistant assessors in the rebel States in the collection of internal revenue, the Secretary of the Treasury acted in violation of law; but the persons so employed being guilty of no offense are entitled in equity to be paid for services performed; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to such assistant assessors as were actually employed in the collection of internal revenue in the rebel States prior to the 1st day of August, 1865, compensation at the rate prescribed by law; and an amount sufficient for that purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CHANDLER. There seems to be an entire misapprehension with regard to this whole case. It is not the assistant assessors who are at fault; it is the assessors themselves; men appointed who could not take the oath, and who it was known could not take the oath. It will be remembered by nearly all the Senators in this Chamber that a year ago last fall the Secretary of the Treasury sent in a bill to relieve these men from taking the oath; and his claim to me was that he supposed Congress would annul or mitigate the oath, and parties were appointed whom he knew could not take the oath. They were not assistants, not subordinates, but the principals; and this provision applies not to subordinates, but to principals and their subordinates. Wherever he appointed a rebel, that rebel appointed rebels to act under him. Wherever he appointed a loyal man, that loyal man appointed loyal men to act under him.

I repeat, sir, this provision applies not to subordinates, it applies to principals and subordinates. I ask any Senator in this Chamber to point me to a case where a truly loyal man was appointed as principal, where he appointed a rebel as a subordinate. The principals and the subordinates are together; and, sir, let them together stand or fall. Rebel principals appointed rebel subordinates. Loyal principals appointed loyal subordinates. I know of no instance where that rule was reversed. I ask any Senator on this floor to point me to a case where a truly loyal principal appointed a rebel subordinate. Sir, the whole thing is an assumption—

Mr. BUCKALEW. As the Senator is putting that question in so confident a manner, I point him to the very case which I mentioned: the appointment of an assessor in Georgia from the State of Kansas, known to the Senators from that State. I spoke of it in my remarks a few moments ago.

Mr. CHANDLER. Who was the principal and who the subordinate?

Mr. BUCKALEW. The list shows who the subordinates were. I do not know the names. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] has the names.

Mr. CHANDLER. Well, sir, I can point you to a worse rebel in Michigan than you can find in South Carolina; but I have yet to hear of the first truly loyal man who has ever appointed a rebel as a subordinate. Now, sir, in Tennessee, in South Carolina, in Georgia, in Louisiana, wherever a truly loyal Union man was appointed he found truly loyal Union men who could take the oath as subordinates; but in South Carolina, in Louisiana, in Tennessee, or anywhere else, wherever a rebel was appointed he appointed none but rebel subordinates; and it is the same in Michigan. Wherever Andrew Johnson has appointed a copperhead in Michigan, that copperhead has appointed copperhead subordinates; and I prefer a South Carolina rebel to a Michigan copperhead. A Michigan rebel is worse than a South Carolina rebel. Sir, if I have got to take either, and the appointments show that we must either accept or reject them, give me a South Carolina rebel and traitor, but God deliver me from a Michigan copperhead.

Mr. CRAGIN. I understand the Senator from Michigan to say that these principals are the ones who are really guilty.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do.

Mr. CRAGIN. I ask him if they were confirmed by the Senate of the United States?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir; they were not.

Mr. SUMNER. Never; not one of them.

Mr. CRAGIN. Then they were never in office.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir; they never were in office.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This debate, if debate it may be called, the principal part of which consists of personal abuse, and language that certainly is very seldom heard on the floor of the Senate as applicable to anybody, has taken so singular a range that I really feel called upon from the position which I occupy, and which necessarily brings me in connection very much with the Secretary of the Treasury, to say a few words.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to the facts in this case. They are very simple. We passed a law which provided that if anybody should be appointed to any office he should take a certain oath, and that if he could not take that oath he should receive no pay for his services. That was substantially the law that we passed. After the adjournment of the last Congress, when the rebel armies surrendered, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, on examining the condition of affairs in the conquered country, the rebel States, found, as they thought, that they could not get fit men in some portions of those States to discharge the duties of assistant assessors and deputy postmasters without selecting men who could not take that oath. They deemed it very important to open communication with the rebel States, so called, as soon as possible; and accordingly the honored citizen from Ohio, who was then Postmaster General, selected certain men in certain portions of that country who could not take the oath, and appointed them deputy postmasters.

Mr. SUMNER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there? The Postmaster General, in reply to our call, distinctly stated that he had made no such appointment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is an admitted fact that he did make those appointments. They were made, at any rate, from the Post Office Department.

Mr. SUMNER. His reply was printed by the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have seen no such reply. You are speaking about the recent reply we have had from Mr. Randall.

Mr. SUMNER. No; about the reply made at the beginning of the last session. It was in reply to a call moved by myself in the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I took the statement from the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SUMNER. He was mistaken, entirely mistaken.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think he was not; but, nevertheless, suppose he was. The Secretary of the Treasury came to that conclusion with regard to certain minor offices, and he laid the matter before the Cabinet. It was a matter of very great consequence that the communication should be opened, that the laws should be enforced, that our revenue system should go into operation, and that it should go into the hands of honest and competent men. Under those circumstances, making no concealment at all, on consultation the Secretary of the Treasury concluded to take the risk and appoint certain men that he knew could not take the oath to fill these important offices, but minor offices, to collect the revenue in some portions of that country. At the very beginning of the next session of Congress he laid the matter before Congress and stated what he had done. He stated it openly. There was no concealment; there was no attempt at concealment, and no desire for concealment in reference to the matter. He informed the persons whom he appointed that if they took those offices they must take them at the risk of not being paid; that he could not pay them, because it was against the law; but if they choose to take the risk under the law of Congress, and perform the duties, and perform them faithfully, he thought Congress would be willing to pay them. He thought, probably, at that time as many others thought, that the oath, in its full extent, would not be exacted in those States of all men who should happen to hold these comparatively unimportant offices. That is the simple fact about it.

Now, sir, I have spoken of this matter before at a previous session, and perhaps at this session; and I stated then that perhaps if I had been Secretary of the Treasury I might have concluded that I would let the revenue go rather than undertake to make such appointments. The Secretary came to a different conclusion; and I do not know but that in coming to that conclusion he manifested more manliness than another man would have manifested who would have refused and let the interests of the country suffer rather than do what the Secretary did and what he thought best to do.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to inquire if there was any difficulty, if the law required that these assistant assessors or any of these officers should be residents of the localities?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The law requires the assessors and collectors to be. I do not remember about the assistant assessors, but I believe it requires the same thing of them.

Mr. HOWE. That they shall be residents of the locality?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have that impression; but at any rate, it is not probable that you could get loyal and fit men from the northern States to go down into a rebel State and take all the risk of it for the pay of an assistant assessor; and besides, to do this business well and collect this money you must have men who are acquainted in the vicinity and who can live in the vicinity, and who are known to the people of the vicinity. Sir, I am not prepared to say at this moment that in coming to that conclusion, if he came to it honestly and for these reasons, the Secretary of the Treasury did not manifest more manliness than another would have manifested who had said, "I will let the interests of the country suffer rather than try this experiment, and trust to the magnanimity and sense of justice of Congress under the circumstances in which I am placed with regard to this matter."

And now, sir, because he has done that, and says that, and gives that reason, and gave it then, that he could not find the men, on his statement the honorable Senator from Massachusetts gets up here in his place in the Senate of the United States and says that he has stated a falsehood. Sir, the Senator from Massachusetts had no right to make that statement. He has no evidence on which to make it.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon; I have.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator says he has, but we have not heard it. He takes it for granted, because he says they can be found. Who knows that they can be found to this day?

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to inquire how these offices have been filled since the 1st of August last?

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is more than I can tell you. That is a matter I have not inquired into.

Mr. NYE. Were there not loyal men enough in the loyal States to fill them?

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is very true, and that is a question for the Senator to answer. I am not responsible for that effort any more than the Senator is; and on that he and I perhaps agree. But the Secretary's opinion was as I state. Now, sir, I undertake to say that if any man in this Chamber, who belongs to the Radical wing, as it is called, of this party of ours, had been in the same situation as the Secretary of the Treasury and had come to the same conclusion, neither the Senator from Massachusetts nor any other man would have opened his mouth; it would have been all right, the whole of it. In saying that I include myself; I believe that if I had been there and had taken the same course he did in this matter, and had not taken the same course that he has politically, the Senate would have found no fault with me about it. They might have overruled me, but I should not have been accused of lying or had any other of these foul-mouthed accusations made against me.

But, sir, what I object to is the language that is used in connection with this thing. I believe that the Secretary of the Treasury at that time in doing what he did acted with the most perfect integrity and honesty, and with a single view to collect the revenues which ought to be collected there, and to carry out what he believed to be for the good of the body-politic, and no other reason. I have always believed it. I believe it now; and I do not hesitate to say so here; and I do not think these railing accusations ought to be brought against him on that account.

Sir, unfortunately perhaps for the Secretary of the Treasury, he has not thought as we think with regard to certain political questions that have arisen here, and perhaps he has been quite as open as he ought to be in expressing his opinions on those subjects. There is the "head and front of his offending." Now, sir, while I differ with him on those points, and while I do not approve his opinions in relation to those matters, I do not think it just to get up here in the Senate and abuse him and attack his character for integrity, which has never yet been assailed where he is known. I know that he is not a favorite with the party to which I belong; but, sir, I would do justice to any man in that position. Had there been a man we call a copperhead, my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BUCKALEW,] or any of his kith and kin, in the same position, acting in the same way, so long as I believed in his personal integrity, I would have defended him as I defend Mr. McCulloch on this floor for what he did in relation to that matter. I do not believe the country will be convinced by using hard words and calling hard names with regard to any man, that therefore there is ground of accusation. Sir, making so much, or attempting to make so much out of this matter shows, in my judgment, the violent straining after something to find fault with and something to abuse a man for.

The Senator from Michigan has also made a very violent attack upon the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not propose to reply to it. It was made in terms and in language that I cannot possibly reply to here. He is the judge of the proper kind of language for him to use, and it is not for me to characterize it. But, sir, one thing I will say, I differ with the Senator entirely when he speaks of this high officer as a man who would make a very good clerk, and who came here as a clerk, and that was all he was fit for, after having a little bank out in Indiana. Indiana, I suppose, is not so great a State as Michigan. I do not know how that may be. If it was not for fear of offending somebody, I would say it does not send such great men here; and I mean no offense to Indiana in any way. But, sir, such as it was, I believe he was at the head of one of the greatest banking institutions of the West, and managed it with distinguished ability; and when he came here, it was not as a clerk, it was as the Comptroller of the Currency, a most important office, then just created; and, I believe with the common consent of all men, he managed that new office, put it in execution, controlled it, did all that his duties required of him in it with distinguished ability. I know he did it to the entire satisfaction of the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury who appointed him, and to the entire satisfaction of the undistinguished Secretary of the Treasury who succeeded the one who did appoint him. I know, moreover, that while that undistinguished person to whom I refer held the office he found in Mr. McCulloch a safe and prudent and able and most honest and upright adviser and friend; and having found him so, he is not disposed to stand here or in any other place and hear him reviled and abused as a man merely fit to be a clerk.

The honorable Senator spoke of his having a little something, being worth a little money, and he seemed, as he said, "I judge him as a financier," to have come to the conclusion that a man must be considered a financier exactly in proportion to the depth of his pocket. Let me remind the distinguished Senator from Michigan that the greatest financier perhaps that ever stood at the head of our national Treasury, Alexander Hamilton, lived and died a poor man; and some of those who have succeeded him and been distinguished men have not been remarkable for the depth of their pocket or what they had in it. I differ with the honorable Senator therefore. I do not think that the mere capacity to trade and make money makes a financier. It may work very well so far as the individual is concerned, but I do not believe it proves the capacity to manage the financial concerns of a great nation. It requires something more besides barely making money. Although the Secretary of the Treasury may not be so distinguished as he ought to be in that line—I believe he is comfortably off—yet I think the country, as a whole, is pretty well satisfied that he is an able and an honest man. There may be abler men in the country, though not more honest, for I think he is as honest as a man can be; but, sir, we do not always get the best. It is our misfortune that we do not go to the right State to get a Secretary of the Treasury; but those things are accidental; they will come about in spite of all that we can do. I think that while he does stand there at the head of the Treasury Department trying to discharge his duties, it is very poor policy in us, owing as much money as we do, so much depending upon our national credit, so much depending upon the confidence that the people have, or ought to have, in the management of our financial concerns, to be continually in public depreciating, running down, and abusing the man who is placed at the head of it. Give him a fair chance at any rate. Judge him by his acts, and not deal in general declamation upon a matter so vital.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, the most beautiful passage that has come down to us from antiquity I believe was that famous epitaph written by the Greek poet Simonides on those who fell at Thermopylae. It was, if I remember it, as follows: "Stranger, say at Lacedæmon that we died here in obedience to her laws." God be praised that an ancient poet was inspired to give to mankind that legacy of obedience to law.

And now, sir, as a Senator of the United States, I arraign the Secretary of the Treasury for a violation of a solemn law of this Republic. The Senator from Maine treats it as a trivial offense. I treat it as a crime; and so from my place now arraign him. The Senator says that when he undertook to fill these offices he consulted the interests of the country as he understood them. How did he understand them? It was in this way: to save a few dollars of revenue; but what was the consequence? He set at naught a sacred statute of this Republic which was intended as one of the guardians of the public peace. If ever there was a statute which a member of this Government was solemnly bound to follow it was that statute which the Secretary of the Treasury thus set at naught. Therefore when it is said that he acted for the best interests of the country, I openly say the contrary. In undertaking to save a few dollars of revenue he set an example of infinite evil to the country. At this moment we are suffering incalculably from the example which he gave us.

This is what I have to say in reply to that part of the Senator's remarks in which he treated this criminal conduct of the Secretary as trivial. It was not trivial; it was a great offense; and as often as I think of it I wonder that the thunders of Congress have so long slept.

I shall not, however, be betrayed by the diffusive speech of the Senator into any general discussion of the character of the Secretary of the Treasury. My habit is to confine myself to the precise question. I shall not be led into a consideration of his previous history, of his character as a financier, or as an agent of a bank, or as a Comptroller. I have thus far made no allusion to that in this debate. I have confined myself strictly to the question under consideration; and that may be expressed in one single word: he is an open violator of the laws of the land. Do not treat it lightly, sir. Do not undertake to apologize for it by suggesting that in that way he saved a paltry revenue to the country. Ay, sir, in saving that paltry revenue he sacrificed the good name of this country, and unsettled the securities of peace and tranquillity. Ay, sir, human rights suffered immeasurably on that day when the Secretary of the Treasury was inspired to that evil conduct.

Sir, in thus arraigning him I do now nothing but what I have done before on this floor. And let me say, too—and I now make a statement which I have never made before—I act simply in the execution of a promise, of a vow made months before the last meeting of Congress, when I first heard of this unhappy conduct, and which, by letter, I communicated directly to the Secretary himself. I wrote to him from my home in Massachusetts the moment that I saw this unhappy conduct, fruitful as it has been in woes to our beloved country, protesting against it with all the ardor of my soul, entreating him not to pursue it, and telling him that if he did I should deem it my duty at an early occasion to expose it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I think that the debate of this evening is unworthy of this body. Two committees of this Senate, both of them standing high, one last year and one this, have recommended the passage of this measure. The Committee on Finance have to-day reported it again. I do not mean to counsel the breaking of the law; but I know that if I occupied the position of the Secretary of the Treasury at the time that he broke this law, as it is alleged, I should have done exactly as he did. I know that if to-day I had any business to perform in the southern States I should more certainly take one cognizant of the people and of their relations to the business of the people than I should send a stranger to that point.

Sir, these constant attacks upon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States undermine the industry and the business interests of this country. Few can really understand how intimately connected all the relations of business are with the Treasury of the United States; and when you attack that, through its highest officer, you attack every business relation in the country. I trust that when Senators hereafter unguardedly and thoughtlessly attack that high officer and the Treasury of the country, they will consider that they are undermining the foundation of the industry and business interests of the country.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I confess myself a little surprised at the purport of the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island, in which he deplores the debate to-night as undermining the interests of the country in attacking a public officer. Did it not occur to him that in setting the high example of violation of law there was no undermining of the public interests of the country?

Sir, I hope the Senate is not to be led astray from the question before it by this discussion in regard to the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not think that we need to discuss him on the present occasion. For my part, I have nothing to say in regard to the Secretary of the Treasury. The question before us is whether these officers appointed in violation of law shall now be paid. The Senator from Maine seems to suppose that they could enter upon the discharge of their duties without taking this oath. The law prohibits that, and says:

"Before entering upon the duties of such office they shall take and subscribe the following oath."

Mr. SUMNER. And before being paid also.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am now speaking of their entering upon the duties of the office. They had no right to enter upon those duties.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. LANE] in his ardent and enthusiastic speech, and he is always earnest, seems to have been misled as to the facts. In his zeal to defend the Secretary of the Treasury he seems to have forgotten the case, and he supposes that these persons were not officers, that they were deputy collectors and assessors only; and the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON,] perhaps catching the idea from him, has offered an amendment confining the provisions of the section to assistant collectors and assessors of the internal revenue. Let me inform the Senator from Indiana that these persons who were appointed were officers—officers of the customs as well as assistant assessors and collectors. One of them is James M. Matthews, collector of customs at Tappahannock, Virginia. Was he not an officer? Could you not find a loyal man at Tappahannock, in Virginia? One of these officers was William Y. Leitch, surveyor at Charleston, South Carolina. Is he not an officer?

Mr. LANE. If the Senator will pardon me, my remarks were confined exclusively to assistant collectors and assessors of internal revenue.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know they were, and that was the mistake of my good friend from Indiana, that in defending the Secretary he seemed to suppose nobody had been appointed in violation of law except assistant collectors and assessors. Why, sir, J. F. Marrast was appointed an inspector at Mobile, Alabama. Now, I want to ask the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Maine, do you believe that no loyal man could have been found at Charleston or at Mobile, or at Tappahannock in Virginia? Why, sir, does not every one of us know, have we not a personal acquaintance with men in Mobile as loyal as any of us? I know some persons in Mobile who are loyal. Here were officers appointed at Savannah. I know persons in Savannah, with my limited acquaintance, who have been loyal all the time.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, the reason why I confined my remarks to assistant assessors and collectors was that they are the only persons embraced in this appropriation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Well, sir, if we pay them, I know not why you should not pay these others. I do not recollect whether the appropriation is confined to them or not.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is confined to assistant assessors.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I see no distinction between these officers and the others. Officers were appointed to collect the customs in these cities who did not take the oath, and these officers were continued for months and months, nearly a year after the attention of the Secretary was called to this matter. Now, the question is, whether we shall pay them; and as I said before, let us not lose sight of this great question, not as to the dollars and cents; there is very little importance in that; it amounts, I am told, to but a small sum; but it is the example. It is the very difficulty which besets us in restoring peace and harmony in this country. If we had placed governmental authority in the hands of loyal men in the South we would have had the States restored long ago to their proper relations in the Union. That is the difficulty. That is what we complain of. What the loyal men of the South have complained of all the time, and what they complain of now is, that official position is given to the disloyal, and that they are oppressed. I have not seen a loyal delegation here during this winter, and we have had them here from almost every rebel State, that has not assured me that if the authority of office and official position could be given to the loyal men in the South they could maintain themselves. That would give them strength; and what they ask of us is to pass some law under which those States may be organized in such a way that the offices of the country will be filled by loyal men, and then the influence of the positions they occupy will enable them, as they think, to maintain their authority. It is in that point of view that I consider it very important that we do not adopt such a provision as this.

It is said that this has been reported by two committees, and that it was reported at the last session of Congress. Well, if it was, Congress did not pass it; and the very fact that the Congress of the United States, when the question was presented to it, refused to pass such a provision, it seems to me, should have as much weight at the present time as the other fact that committees have heretofore reported in favor of such a proposition.

Mr. WILLEY. It strikes me that the character of the Secretary of the Treasury for integrity, for truth, or for capacity is really in no wise involved in this original proposition. Now, allow me to ask the honorable Senator from Illinois, if he were to employ me as his agent to build him a house, and in giving me authority as his agent to do so, he was to direct me to employ John Jones as a mechanic to do it, and I, it may be without his knowledge, were to employ John Smith to do it, and John Smith should accordingly proceed and build the house according to the specifications, in every respect perfect, and at the proper time I was to hand over to him the house, would he willingly enter into that house and say to Mr. John Smith, "I will not pay you for the labor and outlay that you have made in erecting this mansion?" When the storm was beating upon it and when his family were secure under it, would it be a comfortable reflection to him as a man of honor, of integrity, of justice and equity, to remember that he was secure in his home which cost him not one cent to erect?

The Secretary of the Treasury may have violated the law in making these appointments; but then the service was done. I hear no complaint in regard to that. The service was rendered, and the country has had the benefit of it. These may not have been the employes and agents contemplated by law; but the money has been received into the Treasury of the United States through their agency and through their services. We have got the benefit of them. Now, as a great and magnanimous nation, as a nation influenced simply by a sense of justice and equity, would we take advantage of that informality, it may be of that violation of law, and say that as a nation we are willing to receive these services, these benefits, and make no remuneration for them? As a man, in the case which I have put, I think I may certainly interpret the answer of the Senator from Illinois, and say that he would be the last man in the world to enter his mansion and enjoy it without paying the man who had built it for him. He would scorn to do it. He would not place his foot upon its threshold for an hour until he had made just compensation. No matter what the informalities or what the violation of his instructions to his agent had been, he would not receive his house and enjoy it without paying the man honestly for the cost of constructing it. Shall we then as a nation, actuated by the principles of justice and equity and honor, refuse to pay these men who have rendered a service to the country, satisfactory in itself, simply upon the ground that they were not the men that we directed to be employed to do it.

Entertaining this view of the subject, and without at all believing that the character of the Secretary of the Treasury is involved really in the merits of this question, I shall vote most cordially and most heartily for the original proposition and against the amendment of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Wilson.] I am sorry that he has introduced an amendment that does in its terms bring the character of the Secretary of the Treasury absolutely and directly into the discussion. I hope that it will be voted down, and that we shall secure the passage of the proposition as it came from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, the case put by the Senator from West Virginia comes so near my own idea of the point on which this controversy turns that it has induced me to attempt to point out the distinction between the case he puts and the case before the Senate. He supposes the case of a house built for his enjoyment by an agent of his own, but erected by an artisan in direct defiance of his commands, and he thinks it would not be just and right for him to enjoy the protection of that house without paying the artisan what his labor was worth; and I think he is right. But if his agent had employed an artisan to build the house in direct defiance of his commands, and then the agent should demand possession of his purse to pay John Smith according to his own pleasure for his services in building the house, I think the Senator from West Virginia would decline to yield the purse for that purpose.

If these assessors and other officers connected with the collection of our revenues have done honest labor for the Government, and will present their claims to the Government, I have no sort of objection to the Government paying them what their services were worth, and I think the Government ought to do it; but they have been employed, as has been said and shown over and over again, in defiance of a positive statute. An agent of the United States employed them; and now the proposition is to put the Treasury into the hands of that agent to pay them whatever he sees fit to pay them for their services. True, their per diem is limited by law, and the days are limited by the calendar perhaps; but he is authorized to determine the number of days they actually worked. He cannot pay them I suppose for more than three hundred and sixty-five days in the year; but then up to that time there is no limitation. It seems to me we ought not to do this. If these gentlemen have done honest labor for the United States Government, as I said before, let them present their claims, and let the Legislature of the nation pass upon those claims. I think that course is all the more necessary to take because of an item of information conveyed to the Senate just now by the Senator from Ohio. He has presented to us one of those claims; if I understood him, the claim of an assistant assessor who says he assessed $2,000—

Mr. SHERMAN. He swears to it. His statement is sworn to.

Mr. HOWE. And charged $115 for doing it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the regular rate. I have here the account made out in full if the Senator wants to see it.

Mr. HOWE. I do not understand that to be the regular rate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is not much worse than it is in the free States.

Mr. HOWE. I take it it is very much worse than it is in the free States. That is six per cent. for the mere work of assessing the internal revenue. Now, I think the whole expense of assessing and collecting the internal revenue does not amount to five per cent. That is my impression. But six per cent. for assessing internal revenue must certainly be an extravagant demand anywhere; and I think these claims should be inspected and examined.

There is another reason why I think these claimants should come before Congress with their individual claims, and that reason is this: neither the Senator from Ohio, nor the Senator from Maine, undertakes to tell us that the employment of these very assistant assessors is yet dispensed with. For aught we know they are still in the service of the Government. To be sure the amendment before us only proposes to pay them up to the 1st of August; but I suppose during the next session of Congress, if they are still in the service of the Treasury Department, there will be an application to Congress to pay them up to the 1st of August next; and so you go on; and the only distinction you make between these men whom the law says shall not be employed and those whom the law permits to be employed is that in the last case you make the appropriations for the payment a year in advance, and in the former case you make the appropriations a year after the work is done. That is all the distinction I see that is made by this sort of legislation.

If these gentlemen, for any reason whatever, have done service, and will come before Congress and say that they have given up these employments, are no longer prosecuting them, and show what number of days' work they did, then let Congress pay them for that work, and let that be the end of it. But, while we are told that these employments have been in direct defiance of a positive statute, I think we should not pass a general act authorizing the payment of them at the pleasure of the very officer of the Government who employed them; and certainly it seems to me if we are to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make these payments, as proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, we ought not to precede that authority by the recital which is contained in the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I should hate to vote for a proposition which denounces the Secretary of the Treasury in one breath for a violation of a positive law and in the next opens the Treasury to him to pay the agents that he has thus employed. I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I shall vote against the section in the bill reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I believe I have never had any occasion heretofore to explain any vote I expected to give in the Senate; but I think perhaps I had better do so now. I intend to vote against the payment of the money to these persons; but I do not intend to do it because I believe the Secretary of the Treasury is a liar or a dishonest man or a fool; I do not believe either of those things. In the spring of 1865, when the war closed, he deemed it necessary and proper to attempt to collect as much revenue as he could under the law in the lately rebellious States. He said that upon the information he could get, upon the inquiry he had time to make, he could not find in all parts of those States men who could take the oath of office. When he says that, I believe him. I believe in saying that he said what was true, that upon the inquiry he had time to make, and did make, he could not find those men. The Senator from Illinois must recollect that it is more easy to find loyal men in Savannah, Mobile, and Charleston now than it was just after the close of the war; at least I think so.

If he had not gone on then and proceeded to collect the revenue, if he had let our revenue go uncollected for six months until Congress met or for three months, is it not possible that we might have found men here denouncing him for a neglect of duty in that particular as well as for a neglect of duty in the particular for which he is now blamed? Would he not have been blamed for not collecting the revenue which he has brought into the Treasury by means of these officers? He had much work to do at that time; he could not give his whole time and attention to hunting men in these States who could take the oath; but upon the information he had, he thought he could not collect your revenue without employing men who could not take the oath. He did employ them, and in that way there is no doubt that he violated the letter of the law; but that he meant to do wrong I do not believe.

Another thing I must be permitted to say. I cannot see the public good to follow from these violent attacks upon both the integrity and the ability of the head of our Treasury Department. It has been well said here to-night that much of the welfare of this country depends upon the successful administration of our finances, upon the confidence of our own people and the people of other countries in the stability of our finances, and it does not seem to me to be a good way to produce or promote confidence in that stability for gentlemen here to attack the head of our Treasury Department in the way he has been attacked here on this occasion and on previous occasions.

I shall not vote to pay these men, not because as I have before remarked I believe the Secretary of the Treasury is dishonest or unfit for his position, but because I fear that the payment of these men at this time, or at any time before the lately rebellious States are restored to their former position in the Government, will induce subordinates in those States to employ men under them, without the knowledge of the Secretary of the Treasury, who ought not to be employed; and I think it better to leave these men wholly unpaid until these States shall be brought back to their former positions in the Government. I shall therefore vote against paying them in accordance with the recommendation of the committee, and also against the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. MORRILL. Inasmuch as I happen to be a member of the Committee on Commerce, and that committee it is said is to share the bad eminence of the Committee on Finance for reporting this measure, and particularly as my chief and leader and head has flopped over, gone on to the other side, deserted the measure, I feel called upon to say a word or two in explanation.

The Committee on Commerce, when they considered this matter as a business affair, had no idea of its enormity in the way it seems now to be stated. They did not look at it as a matter of crime, nor did it occur to them that in authorizing the payment of the agents who had acted in collecting the revenues of the country, the committee were indorsing a crime and becoming responsible for it, as the Senator from Massachusetts seems to think. There are two views to be taken of this question. One is fanciful and poetical and dramatic, and the other is business-like. The Committee on Commerce, instituted for the transaction of business, took the latter view of it. My honorable friend from Nevada [Mr. Nye] takes the poetical view, and none can do it up better than he. He took at one time the fanciful view of it and fancied that this was a tax on the Federal soldiers. How, I think will be difficult for any one to show.

Now, Mr. President, the general state of facts before the Committee on Commerce can be briefly stated. Here had been a rebellion; on the surrender of the rebel armies the Secretary of the Treasury, following exactly in the line of what the Government had been doing during the rebellion, sent agents down there to collect the revenue, continued to send persons there to collect the revenue. That was a political fact known to us and known to everybody, that the Secretary of the Treasury was actually levying taxes on the people of the insurrectionary States. In a legal point of view the committee did not doubt that the whole thing was irregular. The committee did not believe that there was an officer really in that region of the country. Assuming that all these steps were irregular, as we hold they were, there could not well be an officer in all that region of country.

The honorable Senator from Nevada, when he treats this subject as a matter of business, comes precisely to the conclusion to which the Committee on Commerce came, and that was that in the collection of the revenues in the insurrectionary States the Secretary of the Treasury had employed persons, and not officers; that inasmuch as these men had not taken the oath and became qualified, they were not officers; but, nevertheless, they had collected the revenues, and they had collected a very considerable amount of revenues, and paid it into your Treasury. Nobody doubts that. Now, what sort of morality is that which holds the money, clutches the money, does not propose to pay that back, and then refuses to pay the agent who collected it? If you repudiate the agency, why do you not pay back the money? The Senator from Nevada says not a dollar has been legally collected. Then it has all been extorted; but it is in your Treasury. If you pay these persons a small compensation, a quantum meruit, so much as they deserved independent of their being officers, simply on the consideration that they had done you a service, it is not necessary to suppose that it is to be assessed on the Federal soldiers. That is buncombe; that is sensation; that is not a business matter; and that is not a result likely to happen. All you propose to do is to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, out of the money collected in the insurrectionary districts, to pay the agents, the persons who have been employed in collecting it.

That being the business view of the case, what becomes of all those denunciations of the Secretary of the Treasury, what becomes of all this fancy sketch of assessing this tax on poor Federal soldiers, and taking this small compensation out of the earnings of Federal soldiers, and out of the pittance of their widows and orphans? That is all fancy.

According to the estimates before us probably four or five hundred thousand dollars have been collected in the insurrectionary districts in this irregular way. I agree that it was irregular. I agree with the honorable Senator from Nevada that those who collected it were not officers; but they were persons, and they were in your employment, as irregular as it was; and you have got the fruits of the employment. You have got at the least calculation three or four hundred thousand dollars as the fruits of this irregular transaction. Now, if this amendment shall pass, as proposed, out of the moneys thus collected you will pay those persons who have thus been irregularly employed. I do not feel that I shall be implicated in a transaction of that sort, nor that that act will be interpreted as participating in a crime depicted by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER.]

I did not intend, Mr. President, to participate in the debate; but it seemed to me to become necessary to explain the simple business-like view which the Committee on Commerce took of the transaction. I will read the result to which that committee came, as allusion has been made it. On the 6th of June, 1866, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHANDLER] sent to the Committee on Commerce a resolution, which reads as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to adjust the accounts and pay the salaries and compensation of all officers and employees of the Treasury Department who have been heretofore actually engaged in collecting the revenue within the States lately in insurrection; such adjustment and payment to be made with and to each officer or employee who has failed to take the oath of office required by law whenever his successor has been duly appointed and lawfully qualified, and not otherwise.

The Committee on Commerce reported it back with an amendment, striking out all after the word "that" and inserting:

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay a reasonable compensation to persons by him employed for the purpose of and who have been actually engaged in collecting the revenue within the States lately in insurrection, notwithstanding the failure or inability of such persons to take the oath of office required by law: Provided, That said compensation shall not be greater in any case than that provided for by law for officers of the revenue performing such services: And provided further, That this act shall not be deemed to authorize the continuance of such persons in such employment.

The Committee on Commerce placed it precisely on the ground of my honorable friend from Nevada: that there were no officers there, but persons had been employed, and had been collecting the revenues of the country; and therefore, without connecting ourselves with the illegality of the employment, we recognized that fact, and being participators in the collection of the money, being in the receipt of the money, we agreed that the persons who had thus collected it should have such compensation as was reasonable.

Mr. DAVIS. I have listened to this debate and have heard the facts disclosed in relation to the conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury. Certain I am that he has committed no moral offense, and if he has been guilty of an error it has been a venial one, in which is involved no wrong or impure motive. I am satisfied that if he had been acting as the private agent of any gentleman in the Senate in the collection of money in the South, and had received from his principal such instructions as are involved in the law regulating the appointment of these officers, and if in the circumstances in which the collection of the debt was involved, owing to the condition of the country, he had made just such a departure in the transaction of this private trust from the letter of his instructions as he did in the execution of his public office, his principal would have fully commended his course and approved of it.

I think the Secretary of the Treasury is an able man, that he is an experienced and skillful financier, and that he knows a great deal more about such matters than the men who impute to him ignorance and who assail his conduct. I believe, too, that he has spent a virtuous life, distinguished for integrity and principle, and the consequence has been that he has reared a character which is a solid monument and which no such assaults as these can shake. I believe that every shaft which has been aimed at him to-night will never reach him, and that if they should reach him they would rebound without hurting him.

Mr. President, some of the most impassioned speeches I have ever heard made in the Senate—short ones to be sure—I have heard to-night from the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER.] He has quoted the instance of the heroes of Thermopylae, who died in defense of that law of their country which commanded that they should never retreat from battle; and the most holy horror, the expression of the most poignant pain and grief that I have ever heard from mortal tongue in commenting upon and denouncing the violation of law, I have heard from that honorable Senator to-night. I do not know that, in the contemplation of the most heinous and diabolical crimes I have heard reprobated in my past life, I ever heard a keener or more condemning spirit in condemnation of such crimes than I have heard to-night from that honorable Senator with regard to, not this criminal, but this venial act of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the appointment of these assessors and collectors. A person to have heard his remarks and witnessed his manner and the agony of mind and of soul that the contemplation of the offense of the Secretary gave him would have thought that he was one of the most immaculate persons that ever trod the face of the earth; and that he could not look at, could not contemplate a disregard of law, much less the perpetration of an offense and of a crime, without an agony which it would be almost impossible for human nature to bear.

Mr. President, some years ago Congress passed a law which was submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States, and was by the unanimous judgment of that court decided to be constitutional. That law came before the district and circuit courts in many of the States of the Union, and before many of the State courts in the different States, and by all of them it was decided to be constitutional and to be obligatory upon all the citizens of the United States, and especially upon the law-givers of the United States, the members of Congress who had so often and so repeatedly taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. And yet this honorable Senator, with all his affected horror, notwithstanding all his indignant condemnation of the Secretary of the Treasury for this imputed violation of law, declared again and again that he would not yield obedience to that law which had been sustained by all the courts, Federal and State, that had ever passed upon it, and he entered into a criminal conspiracy by which with force of arms that law was to be defied and overturned and its execution prevented.

That was the case, then. We have heard his speech now. Sir, I cannot comprehend such inconsistency, and without making any comment upon it I leave the matter to the Senate with this simple statement of the facts in each case.

Mr. BROWN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 14, noes 13; and (at eleven o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 28, 1867.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. POLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Commissioner of Patents, communicating his annual report showing the operations of that office for the year 1866; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the usual number of additional copies of that report be printed for the use of the Senate. The motion I suppose will go to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print generally will be entered if there be no objection, and the motion to print an extra number of copies will go to the Committee on Printing under the rule. The documents will be referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to establish a department of education.

Mr. SUMNER. I have a large number of reports that I desire to make; but I am so much in earnest for the bill of the Senator that I will take my chance of making my reports at some other time.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not wish to object to this bill; but after it is taken up, I hope we shall be allowed to introduce morning business, petitions, reports, and bills.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the morning business will be gone through with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to establish a department of education.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, [Mr. CONNESS,] to strike out the word "department" where ever it occurs in the bill and to insert the word "bureau."

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California further proposed to amend the bill in section two, line eleven, by striking out after the word "per annum" the words "which said clerks shall be subject to the appointing and removing power of the commissioner of education," and to insert "and the said clerks shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior on the nomination of the commissioner."

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have not felt like interposing special objections to this bill; nor do I feel inclined to allow it to pass in entire silence. I am not of the opinion that an establishment of this sort in this city through the General Government will really promote the cause of education in the country. It will be a benefit to a few persons; but that it will reach the masses of the people of the common schools of the country in any beneficial influence I do not believe. I think in that respect it will be very much like the Agricultural Department in its effect upon the agriculture of the country. While a few persons get the seeds that are distributed from that Department and a few persons get the reports, some of which are able, the great body of the farmers are not benefited by it; and I am not able, from my observation on the subject, to say that agriculture is at all promoted by the large expenditures that are made to support that Department.

The States have nearly all now entered upon a system of common schools; and so far as I know, they are well arranged, well considered, and adjusted systems. The State of Indiana has a very good system. It is generally under the control of a man well qualified for the position; in all probability equal in his qualifications to the man who will be put in charge of any department in this city. Our own system is understood by the people. It is satisfactory to them. They support it; they encourage it; and it is felt in every neighborhood. It furnishes a school to every neighborhood. The system of school-books is decided upon by the proper authorities, and the whole thing is a great blessing to the people. I do not think that any supervising control in the city of Washington over these State institutions and State systems can be of any benefit. I apprehend the opposite may prove to be the case. This bill will furnish some offices for some men. That is about all there will be of it. It will result in the end in a very large expenditure of the public money, in my opinion, without an adequate return.

Mr. STEWART. The object of this bill is not to exercise control over the States, but to collect information as to the very good systems of the States, and lay it before the whole country, so as to enable the States that have not perfected their systems, the new States and those that have not good systems of education, to know what is being done in other parts of the country. It seems to me it is legislation that is exceedingly desirable. There has been great improvement in some of the States and in some districts in the various States; great advances have been made; and it is very desirable that information as to it should be disseminated throughout the country. There will not be the same difficulty in having this information disseminated throughout the country that there is in distributing the agricultural reports. They must go to the farmers individually; but under this system the reports that are made up from the proceedings of the various States can be sent to the different school districts, and it will not take a very great number. It will be very easy to enable the whole country to enjoy the benefits of this system. It will not be required to send a report to every individual farmer, as is required under the Agricultural Department. It seems to me there are not the same difficulties in the way of making it beneficial to all the people, but that great good may grow out of the collection of information in regard to the various improvements in the systems of education and its dissemination throughout the country by means of a department of this kind. I think it is a bill which it is eminently proper should pass.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall vote against this bill for a different reason from any which has been assigned. In my judgment, Congress has no constitutional authority to enact such a measure as this; and leaving out of consideration all questions of expediency or propriety, I should place my opposition on the ground of want of constitutional authority in Congress to pass it.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Subsequently, while the civil appropriation bill was under consideration,

Mr. BUCKALEW said: I move to reconsider the vote on the final passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to establish a department of education. I merely ask to have the motion entered for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NYE presented resolutions of the Legislature of Nevada, in favor of an appropriation of the payment for the loss and damages sustained by the inhabitants of Humboldt county, in that State, by the depredations of hostile Indians in the years 1864 and 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. NYE. I also present resolutions of the Legislature of Nevada, in favor of the establishment of a post office at Pine Grove, and a mail route from Pine Grove to some other points in that State. I move their reference to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. CONNESS. I suggest to the Senator to let those resolutions lie upon the table until we take up the post route bill, as the committee have acted on that, and it will be up soon.

Mr. NYE. Very well; let them take that course.

The resolutions were laid on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON presented a memorial of citizens of North Carolina, remonstrating against the organization of a territorial government for that State; which was referred to the joint Committee on Reconstruction.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom were referred sundry memorials of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, praying for an appropriation for the erection of a penitentiary in that Territory, and that the Secretary of the Treasury may be authorized to direct that the stone in the present unfinished penitentiary be used in finishing the capitol building, and that the site of the present penitentiary may be sold and a new site selected where there is a sufficient supply of water; and a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon in favor of incorporating the county of Walla Walla, in the Territory of Washington, in the State of Oregon, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and pay the claim of John R. Beckley, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 806) more effectually to preserve the neutral relations of the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Joaquin De Palma, vice consul of Portugal at Savannah, praying for compensation for property taken from his family by the United States troops under the command of General Sherman on the 21st day of February, 1865, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred sundry memorials remonstrating against the renewal of the so-called reciprocity treaty, and the memorial of the American Free Trade League, praying for a continuance of that treaty, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the following subjects were referred, asked to be discharged from their further consideration:

Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, in favor of the employment of a portion of the Navy in ascertaining by proper soundings the facilities afforded by the bed of the Atlantic ocean for laying lines of telegraph cable directly connecting our Atlantic coast with the western coast of France and of southern Europe;

Resolutions of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of a reciprocity treaty between the United States and the Hawaiian Governments;

Memorial of the Board of Trade of Detroit, Michigan, praying for the improvement of the St. Clair flats and the enlargement of the Canadian canals by means of a treaty with Great Britain for that object; and Resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of St. Paul, Minnesota, in favor of a continuance of the existing arrangements for the navigation of the Welland canal by American vessels, and of Lake Michigan by Canadian vessels.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on discharging the Committee on Foreign Relations from the further consideration of the subjects indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not know why the Committee on Foreign Relations should be discharged from such a subject as the resolutions of the Legislature of Oregon touching the question of reciprocity between the Sandwich Islands and the United States, without making a report thereon. It appears to me that that is a subject of sufficient consequence to demand more serious attention, more of the time of that committee, than to merely ask, after keeping it during the session, to be discharged from its further consideration. That is a very easy report to make from a committee. I represent here in part a people who are deeply interested in that question, and who are petitioning and memorializing that the Government may establish such reciprocal commercial relations; and I am not willing that that question shall be bundled with a hundred others and disposed of by merely having the committee discharged from their further consideration. If the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body are not prepared to give more of their time and attention to a question of that character, then I think they should have made this request of the Senate at an earlier period of the session than this, so that it might be referred to other committees of this body who were not above giving it that consideration that its importance demands. I hope, sir, that that report will be excepted at least from this general request of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on discharging the Committee on Foreign Relations from the subjects named by the Senator from Massachusetts, saving the subject named by the Senator from California.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. Now, I should like to hear from the honorable chairman of that committee why this report is made at this time.

Mr. SUMNER. The answer is very easy. In the multiplicity of concerns before the committee, and also before the Senate, it was thought that there was no time in these late hours for acting definitively upon the question. We are about to enter upon another session of Congress, when we shall be less embarrassed by this pressure of business. There will be then time, it may be next week, to proceed with the consideration of the subject which justly interests the Senator from California. The Senator himself must see that now in these hurried moments at the close of the session, when all our business is running like the rapids of Niagara, it will be impossible to secure attention to a question of that character.

Mr. CONNESS. If the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations will pardon the expression, I must say that that is a "lame and impotent conclusion" to be told at this period of the session, when a bushel of questions, of inconsiderable consequence perhaps, or it may be of great consequence, are reported, and this grave subject is thus reported and we are told in support of the report that it is because there is no time. Then, Mr. President, it becomes proper for this great body to constitute committees so that subjects of this importance shall have time and consideration. I am not willing to sit here and have a question of this kind shuffled off in this manner. There are other committees of this body, as the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on Finance, who would have considered this proposition, and have at least ventured upon an intelligent and able report upon it. I must say in conclusion that I feel very much disappointed at this mode of treating so great a question.

Mr. SUMNER. I will simply content myself with remarking that the subject is one which, in different forms, has been before the committee ever since the first year that I entered the Senate, and thus far no practical conclusion has been reached. Let the Senator from California give to it his vigorous support, and let him give the Committee on Foreign Relations the benefit of that. Should I continue on that committee, I shall welcome his association, that we may have his direct influence on that and all other questions.

Mr. CONNESS. I shall not detain the Senate much longer on this question; but I cannot help remarking that within one day's reach of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations the whole material upon which to base an important report or presentation of this question has always been, namely, the State Department. When called upon to report on the subject of releasing the Pacific Mail Steamship Company from touching at the Hawaiian Islands, at the last session of Congress, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of this body called upon that Department and obtained from it sufficient data and material for the intelligent presentation of this entire subject; and now we are told by the honorable chairman that he wants the vigorous support of a member of this body who is not a member of his committee. I must again express my surprise that a question of this magnitude is thus treated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from the further consideration of this subject.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that the report will be laid upon the table.

Mr. SUMNER. I am perfectly willing that it should be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that this report be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred resolutions of the Pennsylvania Peace Society, in favor of the establishment of an international tribunal for the settlement of all national disputes; the memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin in favor of an appropriation to aid in defraying the expenses of forwarding articles to the Paris Exposition; the memorial of Frances McCanley; and sundry petitions praying for the adoption of an international copyright law, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I am also directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report a joint resolution responsive to a resolution adopted by the Parliament of Brazil, and to ask the action of the Senate upon it now.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 183) thanking the Chambers of Senators and Deputies of Brazil for their resolutions of sorrow and sympathy on the death of President Lincoln, was read a first time by its title, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask for the present consideration of this joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider it the day it is reported.

Mr. CONNESS. I think that resolution may as well lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it lies over under the rule.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senator will bear in mind that it is a resolution in reply to the resolutions of a friendly Power.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable. Objection being made, it lies over under the rule.

Mr. CONNESS. I do bear that in mind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was addressing the Senator from Massachusetts and not the Senator from California. The Senator from Massachusetts is debating the resolution.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Chair will pardon me, I was addressing the Senator, not the Chair.

Mr. SUMNER. Do I understand that objection is made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California objects to the present consideration of the resolution, and it lies over under the rule.

Mr. SUMNER. Then I wish to have the resolution read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been read once. That is all it requires under the rules.

Mr. SUMNER. I think if it were read there would be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The Chair can only repeat the rule.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 610) in relation to a certain tract of land in Burlington, Iowa, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 127) in relation to the American Atlantic Cable Telegraph Company of New York, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred sundry memorials of citizens of Louisiana, praying for aid to repair and reconstruct the broken and dilapidated levees on the banks of the Mississippi and other rivers in that State, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred two petitions of citizens of Washington, District of Columbia, praying that a company may be chartered for the purpose of building a railroad from Washington city, through Virginia, to Cincinnati, Ohio, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred a memorial of the merchants of the city of New York, praying for an increase of the salaries of deputy collectors of customs, deputy naval officers, deputy surveyors, and assistant appraisers at the port, and a petition of gaugers employed at the New York customhouse, praying for an increase of compensation, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 632) to authorize the building of a military and postal railroad from Washington, District of Columbia, to New York, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the petition of Theodore J. Park, the petition of Thomas Neill, and the petition of Thomas L. Morgan, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred a memorial of the citizens of Michigan, and a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, remonstrating against granting American registers to foreign-built vessels, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 588) for the relief of William H. Webb, reported it with amendments.

PAY OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House bill No. 450, to reduce and establish the pay of officers and to regulate the pay of soldiers of the Army of the United States, to report it back and ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration. This bill passed the House at the last session, and has been before the committee for several months. It professes to reduce the pay of the Army at a time when the officers of the Army are asking for an increase of pay. It is entitled "An act to reduce the pay of officers of the Army," when it puts it in the power of the Secretary of War to largely increase the pay of those officers. It increases the longevity ration from one additional ration, valued at $108 annually, for every five years of service, to ten per cent. on the pay every five years, so that at the end of forty years the pay would be increased eighty per cent. It authorizes the Secretary of War at his discretion to furnish quarters to officers; and if he should do so—and no doubt he would do so for this city and other large cities—he could not furnish such quarters for less than the present commutation prices allowed for quarters. The officers are allowed nearly three thousand servants, and are allowed commutation for them if they are actually kept. The enactment of this bill in its present form would be a strong temptation to officers not to keep servants, but to use soldiers for that purpose, or, at any rate, to impose duties upon soldiers which should be performed by servants. This table shows the pay of officers at different periods of service under the present system and this proposed system:

Grade.	System.	Compensation, without considering quarters and fuel.									Total annual compensation, with cost of quarters at present rates.
		Before five years.	After five years.	After ten years.	After fifteen years.	After twenty years.	After twenty-five years.	After thirty years.	After thirty-five years.	After forty years.	Annual commutation of quarters.	Total.	Increase.

REPORT ON INTER-OCEANIC CANALS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print additional copies of the report of the Secretary of the Navy in relation to inter-oceanic canals and railroads, to report it with an amendment, and to ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was in line one, to strike out "two" and to insert "five," and in line three to strike out "one thousand five hundred" and to insert "four thousand five hundred;" so that the resolution will read:

Resolved, That five thousand additional copies of the report of the Secretary of the Navy on inter-oceanic canals and railroads, with an additional chart, be printed and bound, of which four thousand five hundred copies shall be for the use of the Senate and five hundred copies shall be for the use of the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory.

Mr. ANTHONY. This additional number has been reported at the earnest request of the Senators from the Pacific coast, who regard it as of very great importance, in which the committee fully concur.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

RUSSIAN PRESENTS TO AMERICAN OFFICERS.

Mr. SUMNER. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the subject was referred, to report a joint resolution (S. R. No. 184) authorizing Gustavus V. Fox, late Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and the officers of the iron-clad Miantonomah and gunboat Augusta, to accept presents tendered them by the Emperor of Russia; and if there is no objection I ask for the action of the Senate upon it now.

By unanimous consent the joint resolution was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JOHNSON. The committee, I believe, were unanimous in recommending the passage of this resolution, and my impression was that the resolution of itself would save the necessity the Government are under, under the law as it stands, of exacting duties upon the articles we consent shall be received by these officers; but I understand that the Secretary of the Treasury is of the opinion that unless it is stated in the resolution that they are to be received free of duties the duties must be exacted. Among other articles that were presented to Mr. Fox particularly was a snuff-box surmounted by diamonds, and I understand the duties upon that box will be upward of four thousand dollars; and the books, which are, I believe, all of a statistical character, containing very valuable information to the country when they come to be translated, are also subject to a very high duty. It is the purpose of Mr. Fox, as he announced in the letter which was laid before the committee, as the chairman will state to the Senate, to distribute those books among the different literary institutes or colleges to be found in the United States, not to retain them himself. I therefore suggest to my friend, the chairman, that perhaps he had better amend the resolution so as to provide that these presents shall be received free of duty.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no objection to that myself, but I had supposed that question belonged to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think there will be any difficulty about it.

Mr. SUMNER. I should gladly accept the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to amend the resolution by adding to it the following:

And that the presents hereby authorized to be received may be admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what is the character of the presents indicated by the resolution?

Mr. SUMNER. There is a large number of books, which Mr. Fox proposes to distribute among different institutions. There is also a very valuable snuff-box, which was a present from the Emperor to Mr. Fox, and which the Senator from Maryland states has been subjected to a very onerous duty at the custom-house. Of that I know nothing, however.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand that Mr. Fox has accumulated a large amount of books, mostly professional books relating to the Naval profession, not only in Russia, but elsewhere—in Denmark, Italy, and France. They are now deposited, I understand, at the Naval Lyceum at the Charlestown navy-yard. They are of no use to him. He proposes, as I understand, or as the Senator has said, to distribute them at points along the coast where there are libraries connected with our Navy-yards. The resolution as it stands would hardly cover the books that were collected, except those received from the Government of Russia.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senate will understand that the resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations is confined strictly to the matter that seemed to belong to that committee. We did not enter into the question which seemed properly to belong to another committee, that on Finance. We have simply followed the precedents of the body with reference to presents. I had supposed that the exemption from duty might be attached to an appropriation bill. At any rate, it would come properly from another committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know how these gentlemen stand in so much better condition than men who go abroad and purchase libraries, and not only have to pay for them themselves, but pay the duties on them when imported. Here it seems that large numbers of books have been presented to these gentlemen, and presented to them because they happened to be the favored officers sent out on this very delightful cruise, in which they have been enjoying all sorts of hospitalities on account of their nation, and very properly, and I am very glad of it. They have had valuable presents made to them of books and other things. They have not been obliged, as others have been for similar purposes, to spend their money for the purchase of these books. I do not know what is to become of them. We hear some talk about what is proposed to be done with them, but we have no legal assurance on that subject. We know nothing about it. I submit to the Senate whether a distinction should be made in favor of gentlemen abroad, who have had valuable presents made to them of books and other articles and not been obliged to pay anything for them, and we should remit the duties on them because they cost them nothing, when other persons abroad who buy those articles and import them are obliged to pay the duties? That is the simple question presented to the Senate, and it is one for the Senate to determine.

Mr. SUMNER. If the resolution is confined to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That involves the same question. It authorizes them to receive presents, &c. The question is whether the presents ought to be received free of duty.

Mr. GRIMES. It seems to me that this is a very different case from that put by the Senator from Maine. He undertakes to illustrate it by the case of a gentleman who goes to Europe and buys a private library. Here is an individual who goes to Europe by authority of the Government, and while there there is presented to him a large quantity of professional books, a snuff-box, a scimitar, and a quantity of very valuable ores and mineral specimens. Those ores came in free of duty. He immediately transferred them to the Smithsonian Institution; and in an interview that I had with Professor Henry he spoke of the great value of those specimens, and how much he was indebted to the Government and to Mr. Fox for them. On those he was not compelled to pay duty. The books, because he did not feel disposed to pay the duties on them, have been deposited, as I understand, in the library known as the Lyceum at the Charlestown navy-yard, subject to such action as may be taken in the future by the Government, and there they are to remain, or else they will be sold by the Government and purchased by whosoever chooses to purchase them under the custom-house regulations. He does not want them. He has no use for them. They all, I understand, or nearly all relate either to nautical subjects or to something in regard to the development and resources and history of Russia.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will say to the Senator that if that was reduced to a certainty I should not object to it; but there is no certainty that they are to go into a Government library. If they are, there would be every reason why the duty should not be exacted, because it would be exacting duty on our own. If that is the case, I do not object.

Mr. GRIMES. It is only reduced to this certainty, that Mr. Fox does not want them; they are of no service to him; they are nearly all on professional subjects, nautical subjects, or the history of Russia.

Mr. SUMNER. I have a communication here from Mr. Fox on the subject. This is the letter communicated to the committee by the Department of State, which was the basis of our action. He says:

"I have a large number of books received from institutions, individuals, and societies, which are now in the Boston navy-yard. They are mostly statistical, and although personal gifts, I propose to distribute them where the information they contain will be made useful by translation and publication. There are many books, and other articles sent to me for distribution, which have been forwarded as the donors have requested."

It will be observed that this was all the committee had before them, and there is nothing said here about duties, and there is no prayer for exemption from duties. In reporting the resolution, therefore, the committee followed precisely the precedents of this body and what seemed to be the exigency. There is nothing here about exemption from duties.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is true, because at that time we were under the impression that the consent given by Congress to the acceptance of articles of that description would of itself exempt them from duty. It was thought the Secretary of the Treasury had that power, but he has not, I understand. He says so himself. He has no objection at all, but on the contrary, I am told he prefers that this shall be done.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the amendment will be adopted. I trust that the Government will never do such a shabby thing as to make money out of a present of the Emperor of Russia to an officer accredited by us to bear our congratulations to him on his escape from assassination. We want money very much, but we are not so poor as that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. POMEROY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 632) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri river at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 633) in relation to certain public buildings in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A. D. TROTTER.

Mr. HOWARD submitted the following resolution: which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General inform the Senate whether any, and what, mail contracts, if any, have been made with A. D. Trotter, of Staunton, Virginia, and whether any, and what, moneys, if any, have been paid by the Government to the said Trotter on said contracts, without his taking the oath of office prescribed therefor by act of Congress; whether the oath filed upon which the said A. D. Trotter has drawn his pay as mail contractor is in the form prescribed by law; and whether the said Trotter ever actually subscribed and took the oath so filed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1228) for the relief of Samuel Silver was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

PAY OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate No. 592, to provide for a temporary increase of the pay of officers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The action of the House will be read.

Mr. WILSON. I have examined those amendments, and although there are one or two I would have preferred otherwise, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will first be read.

The Secretary read the amendments, as follows:

Strike out section three, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the joint resolution approved July 25, 1866, entitled "A joint resolution in regard to the rations of Union soldiers held as prisoners of war," shall be extended so as to allow commutation of rations at cost prices in the settlement of the accounts of all enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine corps, who died while held as prisoners of war in the rebel States, or who, having been so held as prisoners of war, have died, or may die subsequent to release, to be paid, however, only to the widow of such deceased person, if such widow remain unmarried, or in case there be no such widow then to the surviving children of the deceased, or if there be no such widow or children, then to the parent or parents of the deceased, or if there be no such widow, children, parent or parents, then to the brothers and sisters of the deceased.

Strike out the fourth section:

In section eight, strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including the word "infantry" in line four and insert the following: "That (excepting the ordnance storekeeper and paymaster at the Springfield armory, who has the rank, pay, and allowances of a major of cavalry) all storekeepers of the Army shall hereafter have the rank, pay, and allowances of captains of cavalry."

Add the following as an additional section:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That in any case where a person entitled to receive payment of bounty under the provisions of any law shall make application therefor, or where such application shall be made by the proper representatives of such person, being deceased, and the discharge of such person has been lost, it shall be competent for the accounting officers to receive, in lieu of the actual production of such discharge, proof of the actual loss of the same, and secondary proof of its issue and contents, together with proof of the identity of the claimant or person deceased, under such rules defining the character and form of the evidence as the Paymaster General shall prescribe.

Add the following as an additional section at the end of the bill:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That section fifteen of the act to increase the present military establishment of the United States, and for other purposes, approved July 5, 1838, be amended so that general officers shall not hereafter be excluded from receiving the additional ration for every five years' service; and it is hereby further provided that officers on the retired list of the Army shall have the same allowance of additional rations for every five years' service as officers in active service.

The amendments were concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, and upon its amendment to the forty-sixth amendment of the Senate to the said bill, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. F. FARNSWORTH of Illinois,

Mr. F. E. WOODBRIDGE of Vermont, and Mr. C. A. ELDRIDGE of Wisconsin, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1039, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, and had agreed to other amendments of the Senate to the said bill with amendments, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. A. KASSON of Iowa, Mr. W. WINDOM of Minnesota, and Mr. W. E. NIBLACK of Indiana, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 534) to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; and that it had also passed a bill (H. R. No. 1225) for the relief of Lieutenant John H. Osler, of Guernsey county, Ohio, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 878) to quiet titles to land in the towns of Santa Clara and Petaluma, in the State of California;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain claims out of the balance of an appropriation for the payment of necessary expenditures in the service of the United States for Indian affairs in the Territory of Utah;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 175) to audit and pay the claim of Tuller & Fisher, of Missouri; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 182) for printing additional copies of the Appendix to the Diplomatic Correspondence of 1865.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1868, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate to the said bill; and,

On motion of Mr. POMEROY, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; disagree to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate thereto, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. SHERMAN.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is House bill No. 1173.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. WILSON to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance. The amendment of the committee was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to such assistant assessors as were actually employed in the collection of internal revenue in the rebel States prior to the 1st day of August, 1866, compensation at the rate prescribed by law; and an amount sufficient for that purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WILSON proposed to amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "that" in the first line, and inserting:

In employing persons who could not take the oath required by law as assistant assessors in the rebel States in the collection of internal revenue, the Secretary of the Treasury acted in violation of law, but the persons so employed, being guilty of no offense, are entitled in equity to be paid for services performed; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to such assistant assessors as were actually employed in the collection of internal revenue in the rebel States prior to the 1st day of August, 1866, compensation at the rate prescribed by law; and an amount sufficient for that purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment, in order to allow the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to move an amendment which he has prepared, and which I shall vote for most cheerfully.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is withdrawn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I observe in reading the morning papers that the debate of last night is stated in such a way as to do injustice, I think, both to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] and myself. As I always desire to cultivate the most kindly relations with my fellow-Senators, I desire to state that this report will undoubtedly give an erroneous opinion to persons reading it who did not hear the debate. I did feel very much hurt last night by a remark of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the Senator from Ohio sought to conceal a crime. I looked upon it as a personal reflection, to which I could not submit, and therefore I replied substantially in the language stated; but the subsequent disclaimer of the Senator from Massachusetts of all intention to apply the remark to me personally, or to the members of the Committee on Finance, relieved me from all trouble in regard to it. I certainly, therefore, did not feel like pressing the matter or saying anything more about it. I regarded the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, that he did not apply the remark to me personally, as ample and sufficient, and therefore with great pleasure withdrew the remark that I made. I never have in any case to my knowledge made a remark to wound the feelings of the most sensitive Senator, unless I was pressed to it by some personally offensive remark made to me; and as the Senator, in the subsequent debate, which is not reported in the morning papers, disclaimed all such intention, I certainly would not wish to keep such a remark upon the record.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Ohio only does me simple justice. I surely had no intention nor the most remote idea of throwing any such personal imputation on him or his associates of the committee as he imagined. My purpose was to develop as strongly as I could what seemed to me the natural effect and consequence of the pending provision. With this explanation I gladly let it pass. I have always entertained for the Senator, as he well knows, sentiments of friendship, and I should regret very much that any language should fall either from myself or from him which could interfere in any way with the relations between us. I do not believe in personalities, although I do believe in stating the truth on important questions strongly.

Now, Mr. President, as I am on the floor, allow me to say that it seems to me this discussion has reached such a stage that we are in a condition to act perhaps a little more positively upon the question than we were yesterday. It is seen, and I believe admitted all around, that there has been a certain service rendered without sanction of law or even in direct violation of law. Of course, therefore, there can be no payment here under existing law; and I now present to the Chair a question of order to this effect: that the pending proposition, being to pay certain persons for services rendered without any sanction of law, is in the nature of a private claim, and cannot be appended to an appropriation bill. The clause of our rules to which I call attention is as follows:

"And no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation."

I submit that under that rule of the Senate, the pending proposition being to pay for services rendered without sanction of law, and on that there is no question by the admission I think of both sides, it cannot be moved on an appropriation bill. I present that as a question of order, and ask for the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the objection cannot be sustained under the rules. The amendment moved by the committee, in the opinion of the Chair, is in order.

Mr. SUMNER. Do I understand the Chair to decide that this is to carry out the provisions of an existing law?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not specify the reason of its decision, thinking it not necessary. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out all after the word "that" in the first line, and inserting the following:

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to report to Congress as soon as may be the names of all persons employed in assessing or collecting the revenue from customs or from internal taxation, who did not, before entering upon the duties of their appointments, take and subscribe the oaths required by law, together with the nature, place, and amount of service rendered by each of such persons, and the sums paid to or retained by such persons respectively on account thereof, and the sums, if any, now claimed by such persons for such services.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to occupy time upon it. I hope that the committee will assent to it. I believe myself that there are many of these persons who ought to be paid, and I should be willing to pay them. I believe there are some, from what I have heard, who ought not to be. Now, I think if we could all agree to get the precise information as to each one of these claims individually we should have no difficulty at the next session in doing what is just. That is all I have to say.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I made some remarks last night in relation to the Secretary of the Treasury which seem to have given offense to some of his particular friends, and I wish to say a word in explanation.

It is an old saying that it is the last straw that breaks the camel's back, and yesterday I had the last straw placed upon mine. Now, sir, I gave the Senator from Maine [Mr. Fessenden] my views of the honorable Secretary of the Treasury a year ago last December, in a private conversation; and not only have I had no occasion to change those views, but they have been strengthened day by day from that time until the present. Sir, in my own city, the city of Detroit, where I live, we had some most efficient revenue officers. We had a most excellent assessor of internal revenue. It is a district that pays $3,000,000 into the Treasury of internal revenue tax. The Secretary of the Treasury removed this most efficient officer, and appointed a man who would not be trusted in that whole congressional district for a suit of clothes; a man so utterly unfit that no man of any party would recommend him or recommend his confirmation. True, the Senate rejected him; but he was kept in office month after month, after the Secretary of the Treasury knew of his unfitness; and after his rejection, the Secretary, without consulting the delegation, appointed a man no better.

I do not know how it may be in other States; but, sir, so far as the internal revenue department in the State of Michigan is concerned, the appointees are recommended by men who are utterly devoid of character, reputation, or position. The delegates from Michigan are not consulted, nor are respectable men in the State of Michigan consulted, as to who these appointees shall be. The Treasury is suffering by millions and by tens of millions through the inefficiency and the unfitness of these appointees, known to be unfit by the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not know how it may be in other States; but, sir, this very man that we rejected for his unfitness is to-day in the city of Washington controlling the appointment of his successor and of the other Treasury appointees in the State, and boasts that he controls the Treasury appointments.

Well, sir, I heard another thing yesterday, and I am perfectly willing to give my authority, and that is, that a man by the name of Voorhees, generally known as Dan. Voorhees, has been a secret traveling agent of the Secretary of the Treasury for months, traveling through the rebel States.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator has been informed of that he has been informed of what is not true.

Mr. CHANDLER. Hon. William A. Howard, late member of Congress from my district, is my informant.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is not true. Mr. Voorhees has had no official connection with the Department at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will state to the Senator, as I happen to know, exactly what was Mr. Voorhees' business in visiting Washington this winter. The western distilleries feel an interest in the honest execution of the revenue law. Some of them live in the State of Indiana. They did distill very large amounts of liquor, and rendered a fair and honest account of it; but they could not compete when liquor was being sold at $1 60 a gallon in New Orleans, and at almost the same price in New York. Their trade was important in New Orleans. There were such evasions of the law in some way or other that they could not find a market equal to the tax that they paid upon the liquors that they distilled. Some of them employed Mr. Voorhees as an attorney to represent that interest, and to visit Washington in relation to it. When Mr. Voorhees came here to press upon the Secretary important measures to secure an honest execution of the revenue law to protect the distillers of Indiana, he found it necessary to visit New Orleans to prosecute an investigation, not under the Treasury Department at all, but in the employment of distillers in Indiana, who were interested in having every man taxed who distilled any liquor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very happy to be corrected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Now, I will ask the Senator what was his authority for making his statements?

Mr. CHANDLER. I gave my authority, Hon. William A. Howard.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What did he know about it?

Mr. CHANDLER. That I cannot tell you.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope my friend from Michigan will allow me to appeal to him not to bring collateral matters into this debate. I will say to him that this miscellaneous appropriation bill will occupy some time yet—I hope not more than an hour or two—and then there are other appropriation bills and the tax bill to be taken up; and it is absolutely necessary that we should sit probably twelve hours to-day.

Mr. CHANDLER. I recognize the importance of time at present. I have said all I care to say. I will drop the matter there. I care nothing about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope we may have a vote and take the sense of the Senate on this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope that that amendment will not be adopted. This whole subject was discussed at the last session; much time was consumed; and now very much precious time has been consumed in the discussion of this question. Every Senator, I presume, is prepared to decide at this time as to whether these persons ought or ought not to be paid. This amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont only protracts the controversy, extends the discussion, and will lead to the consumption of more time. I hope that the Senate will now dispose of this question, either vote for the report of the committee or against it, and make a final determination of this matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As I said before, I am in favor of paying every one of these persons who, on examination, shall turn out to be justly entitled, independent of the technical considerations, to compensation; but I cannot vote for the section as it is reported by the committee. It treats these persons as lawful officers. It styles them "assistant assessors." It does not put any period, as the bill that was under discussion last year did, to their being mustered out of service, if we are to use such an expression; and it has various other informalities which I think will set a bad example for such a manifest violation of law as this was, although I concur with the committee in believing that it was violated with good intention on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, I do not want to go into debate about this at all. I simply want to say in justification of myself that while I believe that some, many, and possibly all, of these persons, when we see what their claims are, ought to be paid, I cannot vote for it in the form in which it is offered; and with that view I desire to get this information. If the Senate prefer the section as it stands I have no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. These men have faithfully discharged their duty. They have collected about four millions of internal tax, and we have received the amount. They have collected about eleven millions of cotton tax, and we have received the amount. Without their aid that amount would not have been received, and the question is whether we shall not pay them the value of that service.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to obviate the point made by the Senator from Vermont, and to make this amendment, if possible, satisfactory to him, I move to strike out the words "assistant assessors" and insert the word "persons;" and after the word "employed" to insert "as assistant assessors," so as to read, "That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to such persons as were actually employed as assistant assessors," &c. That will avoid all implication that they were legal officers.

Mr. FOWLER. I should like to know from the Senator from Ohio whether the same persons are still employed in the collection of the revenue?

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand not. At any rate, the amendment provides that they shall not be paid after the 1st of August of last year.

Mr. JOHNSON. They are not now employed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SUMNER. Now, Mr. President, I rise again to a question of order under the rules of the Senate. I say we have arrived at this point in this discussion: it is proposed to pay certain persons who, it is admitted, held no legal office under the Constitution or laws, who were not bound by the oaths required by act of Congress, and who were therefore essentially private individuals, for certain alleged services; and that is proposed by way of amendment to an appropriation bill. That is the very case which is contemplated by the rules of the Senate when they distinctly declare that no appropriation for such services shall find a place on an appropriation bill.

I say we have arrived at such a stage of the debate that we all see that no Senator on this floor now insists that this service was rendered under any existing law or under any treaty stipulation. It was rendered, then, in defiance of law. By admission here, these parties did not qualify themselves under the laws of the United States. They were in no respect legal officers. It is so admitted. Because they were not legal officers you are obliged to come forward with some proposition for their payment. In the argument it has been insisted that the service was rendered, and that therefore the Government is in equity bound to pay them. Very well, if it be so let them take the fortunes of other claimants on the Government, and let their case be dealt with by a special bill; do not crowd it into an appropriation act. You cannot do it, I submit, except by violating a rule of the Senate; and now I call particular attention to that rule. The first part is as follows:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments."

That part of the rule is not applicable to this case. The amendment is moved by one of the standing committees of this body. In that respect, therefore, the requirements of the rule is satisfied. I mention this in order to set aside that part of the rule; and now I come to the next clause, which is applicable. It is as follows:

"And no amendment"—

The language is broad—

"no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation."

Now, I say this amendment is to provide for a private claim. It is such by the admission of this whole debate. There is no Senator that I am aware of who has ever argued that there is now any legal liability on the part of the Government. All that has been said by those who are most earnest for the proposition is that the service has been rendered, and that the Government is equitably responsible to compensate the service. That is all. It is therefore, I say, essentially a private claim. It then should share the fortunes of the private claims; it must not be tacked to an appropriation bill, and in that way enjoy adventitious support. Let it be brought in by a special bill, and amply considered, with proper provisions for its payment.

I ask the ruling of the Chair on the question of order that I raise; and I raise it now because since the amendment which has been made to the amendment all doubt on the question seems to be removed, could there have been any doubt; and that the Chair decided as he did of course satisfies me that there was doubt. Could there have been doubt before, I submit that that doubt is removed now by the amendment which drops the official designation of these persons and calls them simply "persons." I submit the point of order for the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels no difficulty in deciding, as before, that this amendment is in order. The change made in the amendment does not, in the opinion of the Chair, vary the question as it was before presented.

Mr. SUMNER. Then I must take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. TRUMBULL. If this is not a private claim I do not know what it is. If it is a private claim, it cannot be offered to an appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not offered; it is reported by a committee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It cannot be reported by a committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rule does not say that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, the rule does say that. The rule is distinct, "no amendment shall be received," no matter who offers it, "whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation." Amendments may be received from a committee increasing appropriations; but a committee cannot report or cannot offer an amendment to pay a private claim on any general appropriation bill. The rule is not that no amendment proposing a private claim shall be offered; but the language is express that it shall not be received. The first part of the rule reads:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments."

There is the end of that branch. Now comes the other clause:

"And no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation."

It will not be pretended that there is any treaty stipulation to be carried out by this amendment; it will not be pretended that there is any existing law carried out by it; and if it is not a private claim, to pay persons for services rendered to the Government when there was no law for it, what is it? There has been a claim before the Government here for work done upon the Patent Office. Will the Senator from Ohio say, and with all due deference to the President of the Senate, will the President of the Senate say, that the chairman of the Committee on Claims has a right to propose an amendment to pay the workmen on the Patent Office for services done? Can any committee propose such an amendment?

It seems to me that this is purely a private claim; and if it is a private claim, then the rule is positive, if the three last lines of the rule have any meaning, that under no circumstances shall a private claim be received unless there is a law for it or a treaty stipulation providing for it. There is no law for this; there is no treaty for it. The fact that a committee recommends it does not alter the case. Now, is it a private claim? It seems to me that it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It seems to me to be equally clear (as it does to my friend from Illinois that this is a private claim) that the decision of the Chair is correct, nevertheless. The language of that part of the rule is that "no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim." How does this amendment get before us? Is the question on the reception of this amendment or on agreeing to it when it comes before us with the bill? If the bill is before us from this committee, then the amendment is before us as part of the bill, and the question substantially is whether it shall stand. Therefore it is not in violation of the rule; and I believe such has been the practice all the time, for a committee to report any amendment to a bill, no matter what, if they report it with the bill and as a part of the final proposition which they submit to the Senate. When the amendment comes in with the bill it is then received and it is before the body, and we must vote yea or nay upon it. The question seems to my mind to be perfectly clear.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Allow me to reply to this last suggestion. This is an amendment that is to be acted upon as an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; acted upon.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Just the same as any other; and now when we come to it, the question is, is the amendment in order? Do I understand the Senator from Vermont to say that it would be competent for the committee having charge of a general appropriation bill to put to it any private claims it pleased?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I say so.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then the rule amounts to nothing. If that committee can do it, any other committee can do it. The fact that they ask the amendment to be made when they report back the bill does not make it any more binding than if they proposed it afterward.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That depends on the rule.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is not the rule. And then, let me answer the Senator further, this amendment has been changed; the Senator from Ohio in the Senate has changed the amendment. Now, suppose you strike out one of the sections of this bill that is clearly for a public purpose and clearly proper at the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio; suppose you amend the clause, "for compensation of laborer to take charge of the heating apparatus of the Library of Congress, $600," by adding to it "and to pay said laborer for services last year, $400;" suppose the chairman of the Committee on Finance moves that amendment in the Senate, can I not object to it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very likely you can.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Ohio has moved to amend this proposition in the Senate. It is not what the committee reported. That is one answer, and the other answer, it seems to me, is also a good one.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate on this question, but I entertain no doubt that this comes within the prohibition of the rule. The language of the rule is very plain, expressed in the most general terms, that "no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim." This is confessedly a private claim. No one can doubt it. The rule prohibits any amendment providing for its payment to be received in the Senate. It is a rule of the Senate that we will not receive any such amendment, come from whatever source it may.

Now, sir, the Senator from Vermont says that we have already received it because we have received the bill with this amendment from the Committee on Finance. Is it in the power of the committee to overrule one of the standing orders of the Senate? Can it be said with any consistency and correctness that because a committee of the Senate have seen fit to tack on upon a bill that they report back to the Senate an amendment for the payment of a private claim, we have already received this amendment and agreed to act upon it? If so, then the Senate itself is no longer the master of its own rules and actions; but that is entirely referred to the committee, and they can alter and change the rules of the Senate as they may see fit in their committee-room, and it is out of the power of the Senate to correct their action, because it is not in order when a committee comes in the Senate and makes a report to refuse to receive the report, at least it is contrary to our uniform action, and we, not knowing what the amendment is when it is offered by the committee, receive the bill with the amendment as a matter of course without question and without knowing anything of the character of the amendment. That is a mere technical, formal reception of the amendment for the purpose of reading the bill, and nothing else. On reading the bill, however, we discover that the committee have violated one of the standing rules of the Senate in recommending an amendment for the payment of a private claim. That is the moment to take advantage of the objection that it is out of order, and that moment is seized upon by my friend from Massachusetts. It seems to me that if we yield this point, we authorize any standing committee of the Senate or any special committee to bring in, in the form of amendments, a string of acts for the payment of innumerable private claims, and therefore divest ourselves of the power of guarding ourselves against what may be in some cases direct imposition upon us. I can entertain no doubt that this amendment is out of order.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand that this question of order turns upon the fact whether or not these appointees were selected under a law of the United States. Now, I undertake to say that they were. It is true that the Secretary of the Treasury may have selected men who were unqualified under the law to act; but they were de facto officers, and they collected in our behalf and paid into our Treasury $4,000,000. The law merely requires that these officers, after they have been selected and appointed, shall take a certain oath.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And shall not enter on their duties unless they do take it.

Mr. GRIMES. That does not make any difference. They were de facto officers, and we have recognized them as officers. We have received the fruits of their labors, and the laborer is worthy of his hire. The question is, whether or not these men have been of service to us? Has their service been of value to the Government? The Secretary of the Treasury may have been wrong in making the appointment. He has been sufficiently rebuked for that. Should we visit our indignation upon these men who could not conscientiously take the oath because the Secretary was unfortunate in the selection which he made, or because he believed that he could not carry into execution the laws of the country for the reason that he could not find men who could take the oath?

Mr. President, this discussion, I believe, involves the sum of $10,000. I do not know that there is any very great principle involved in it. I think that we could safely, after the rebuke that has been administered to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Michigan, and from the fact that we have declared in this law that in the future we will pay no salaries in like cases—I think we could safely pay this $10,000, and let these men have the salary to which they are justly entitled.

Mr. POMEROY. In reply to the Senator from Iowa, I beg leave to suggest if these men are officers and are recognized by the law, why do they come here and ask for any special appropriation? They can be paid under the existing law if what the Senator from Iowa says is true, and you do not need any additional appropriation.

Mr. GRIMES. It is simply because a year ago we passed a law under the inspiration of the moment, under the inspiration of passion, I think, that they should not be paid.

Mr. POMEROY. I think not. I think no such thing was done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The original oath-law provided that nobody should receive pay who did not take the oath. It is merely an irregularity.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The precise question I understand is upon the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Chair declines ruling this amendment out of order. The rule upon which the objection is based is one upon the reception of an amendment. In the first place, this amendment is reported by the Committee on Finance, and it has been under consideration by the Senate during two days' sessions. The objection is, therefore, too late in point of time upon its reception. Besides that, the Senate itself has not only considered this amendment, but has proceeded to amend it. It is a proposition which the Senate has not only received, but which it has acted upon, and in its modified and amended form it is now before the Senate for its final decision. It would be impossible for the Chair now to rule that this amendment should not be received, against the plain and palpable fact of its having been under consideration at two sessions, and of the Senate having not only received it, but having modified it, so that it is now pending before us in its changed and modified form. This is the plain action of the Senate, and it is certainly beyond the power of the Chair to rule the amendment out of order, and declare it not before the body. That would be not only to act under the rule suggested, but it would be to undo a vote of the Senate itself. However the case might stand as an original question, therefore, as the point now stands before the Senate, the decision of the Chair is most indisputable. It would be impossible for the Chair to make any other decision.

One additional remark. I do not look upon this amendment as a private claim. I look upon it as in the nature of a public measure. Observe, we are not passing upon an application made by an individual or by several individuals before us by petition, followed by a bill, which is the form in which private claims come up. It would not be proper for a member to rise in his place and propose that a claim preferred by an individual or by several individuals should be paid upon a bill of this kind. If the objection in such case were made in due time, of course the rule of the Senate would exclude it; but here is a report from a committee upon a general subject, with reference to the public policy of the Government in one third of the Union in the collection of its internal revenue. It is a provision of general law, applying indiscriminately, not to any individual by name, but to a large mass of persons in connection with our general policy upon the revenue question. It is, therefore, in the nature of a public measure. This is not the claim of an individual or several individuals preferred before us and coming up for consideration in the usual and ordinary manner; it is in the nature of a question of public policy, and therefore, in my opinion, not obnoxious, not objectionable to the rule that has been cited.

However that may be, sir, at present unquestionably the Senate must vote to sustain the decision of the Chair, as it is perfectly conformable to the action of the Senate itself, this amendment having been received, and having been amended by the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. I apprehend that the Senator from Pennsylvania does not state precisely the usage of the Senate. An amendment is received. It is received from a committee on an individual moving it, as a matter of course, by unanimous consent; but it is always competent to raise a point of order upon its reception at any time before action is had upon it, before the amendment is adopted. In receiving it the Chair is to understand that it is the unanimous consent that it shall be received, and by unanimous consent any private claim may be put upon an appropriation bill; but if the point is raised, if objection is made to it, then the Chair understands that it is not by unanimous consent, and the decision of the Chair must then be made. The point taken by the Senator from Pennsylvania has no bearing upon this question, because it is our usage always to receive any amendment and consider it; and if it occurs to the Senate or to any individual member that it is a private claim, then the point of order is made and decided. I think this point of order at least is made in time, according to the usage of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. This service was rendered under the authority of law, and the Committee on Finance simply report an amendment to this bill to pay men for having rendered service by authority of and in conformity to law. The position that this is a claim which is not authorized by an existing law is so unsound and so untrue that to my mind it is only necessary to state the facts of the case for its refutation.

Mr. SUMNER. I am sorry to protract this discussion for one moment; but there was a remark that fell from the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] to which I wish to reply. If I understood him, he argued that this was not a private claim, because these persons as officers had entered upon the discharge of their duties. Now, allow me to remind the Senator that nothing, perhaps, for many years has been of more constant occurrence than the claims of persons who have rendered service in foreign countries as officers of the Government, but not precisely in conformity with existing laws.

I have more than once presented such claims from the committee which I represent on this floor. I have moved them under the direction of that committee on appropriation bills, and they have been set aside as not in order. The precise ground taken was that they were essentially private claims. I may remind the Senator, for instance, of the claims of persons who had served as marshal of the consular court in Canton. There were other similar claims which I do not precisely recall; but they have always been treated as private claims, and on that account, although having the sanction of a committee of this body, ruled out of order.

Now, I humbly submit that these precedents are precisely applicable to the present proposition. These parties entered upon the discharge of certain duties, but they failed to comply with any existing law. They did not come within the requirements of the law. They were, therefore, in no just sense officers of the United States. They may have de facto performed certain duties, but they had not brought themselves within the requirements of the law. The law was positive that no man could enter upon the duties of office, or touch any salary or compensation therefor, until he had first taken a certain oath. But these persons, without taking that oath, entered upon their duties. What then, I ask you, was their predicament? They were private persons rendering service to the United States under the guise of office; but they were in no just sense officers of the United States, for the Congress of the United States had in advance declared that no such persons could be officers of the United States. How, then, can you, sir, in defiance of a statute recognize them as such? No, sir, they were not officers; they were simply private citizens discharging certain duties. Let their case, then, be presented on that ground; let them appear, if you please, as petitioners, like other private claimants on this Government, and let us consider their claims in a bill carefully matured, with proper safeguards and provisions.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to make a single remark with reference to the main subject in hand as I understand it. These officers, as I shall call them, were appointed contrary to law, and they accepted their positions contrary to law. And for what purpose? It was not from the consideration that there were not loyal men in every one of these States sufficient to hold these offices and qualified to perform their duties; but it was because a policy had been adopted at that time to unite the southern rebel element with its friends in the northern States for the purpose of precipitating the canvass for the next presidential election. It was thought that it would not do to appeal to the down-trodden Union men of the South. I know personally that there were enough of those men all over the South to have discharged the duties of these offices. If they had received the patronage of the Government they would have held in their hands by this time almost every rebel State and given it to the cause of the Union. They are now to be thrown aside, and the Congress of the United States appears to be willing at one session to trample under foot what it has done at a preceding session. I am not prepared to vote for any such measure, nor am I prepared to place these individuals in a situation in which they will be enabled to wield these States against the policy of Congress. For one I wish to see in power in the southern States men who will represent the policy of Congress at this time. I will not say now precisely whether Congress is right or wrong in the contest which it is waging, has waged, with the executive department, and it is unnecessary to discuss that question; but the fact is that that contest exists. Placed as I have been on the side of this body, I expect to maintain the policy that Congress has assumed, although but half developed and half presented to the country as yet. I expect, of course, that this body will, as far as it can, see that it is represented, and stand by the solemn declarations it has made. I make no charge upon any officer or any department whatever; but I think it is due to the dignity of this body to maintain at least the policy that they have set forth on this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. SUMNER. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 37, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Ross, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, Willey, and Williams—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Creswell, Fowler, Howard, Howe, Nye, Pomeroy, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Yates—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Foster, Guthrie, Henderson, and Wilson—5.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to say a word or two in reply to the equitable ground which is assumed by the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from West Virginia and some other Senators as to the basis for the payment of this claim, and the assumption which they make, that good morals require us to pay this money. I think the Senator from Iowa repeated the same thing, that we have got the money, that these men collected money, we have received it, and now we ought to pay them. That argument, let me say to the Senator from Maryland, will justify a band of ruffians to-day going into the custom-house in New York, driving out the officers of the Government, and collecting your customs, and then when they have done it you must not receive the money, or you must pay them for doing it. Here, in defiance of law, men have collected the money of the Government, and it is said if you take the money, the sum which is due on the goods imported into the country, you are bound to pay the men, who, knowingly and without authority of law, usurped this authority. It is put upon moral grounds, and that is the morality taught in the Senate of the United States by the Senator from Maryland and others to the people of this country. They do not pretend to justify the act, but they say no matter if a man did act in violation of law, no matter if the law said he should not exercise the duties of the office without taking an oath, what of that? He did exercise the duties and collected the money, and you cannot receive the revenue due the Government unless you pay him. That is the kind of morals proclaimed in the Senate of the United States; and we are told that we will put it in the law that we will not pay again. Will that help it? Have you not put it in the law already that you will not pay?

Sir, so far from there being any consideration of morals requiring this payment, it is demoralizing to the legislation of the country. It is teaching men to disobey the law. It is saying to executive officers whose duties are prescribed by law, "You may violate the law, and yet you have the moral right to be paid for whatever you do for the Government, even in violation of law; it makes no difference that we have prescribed your duties; it is true, we have directed you in the discharge of your duties to discharge them in a particular way, but it is immaterial whether you do it or not; discharge them any way you please, and if we have the benefit of them we must pay you." Suppose you appoint an architect to construct this Capitol, and you direct him how he is to do it. He does not follow the law; he disobeys your directions, the very authority under which he holds office, and you must either go without a Capitol and not occupy it, or you must sanction what is done, because you receive the benefit of his labor. And this is called good morals.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I have never supposed that I could compete with the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee either in a question of morals or a question of law of any description. I never in my life knew him when he was not always right upon both questions, and I sometimes doubt whether I am. He has the advantage of me, therefore. But in reading to me a lecture—for it was delivered in such a tone that it amounted to a lecture—the honorable member should recollect that he is lecturing three fourths of the Senate of the United States; and however he may doubt whether my sense of morals is as keen as his, it would have been at least, perhaps, if he will permit me to say so, decorous to admit that it was barely possible that the large majority of the Senate of the United States had as nice a sense of morals and honor as the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Maryland, with all his self-complacency, cannot, I am sure, have forgotten that he himself rose in this Senate and made the point of morals. He was the Senator who said that we had received ten millions of money from these persons, and ought to pay them because we had received the money. He put it upon that ground; and when he is replied to he chooses to call the reply to this assault upon our morals who were not inclined to make this payment, a lecture. I suppose, sir, we are permitted to reply to this assault upon our morals by saying that the course advocated by him is demoralizing in the extreme, and teaching the people of this country to disregard the law.

But, sir, with all the Senator's modesty, he assumes that three fourths of the Senate are with him. I have not canvassed the Senate to know whether three fourths of the Senate are with him or with me. I am not satisfied that this measure will pass; and allow me, with all due deference to the Senator's better opinion, to give it as my humble opinion that it will never pass the Congress of the United States. I do not believe the Congress of the United States will pass this measure. It is possible this body may. The Senator may have canvassed the Senate and ascertained how they will vote.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me say to the honorable member that that is what I never do. What his practice is I know nothing about.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know by what authority the Senator assumed that three fourths of the Senate would vote with him, then.

Mr. JOHNSON. By the vote just taken.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The vote just taken was on a question of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It was on the question whether the decision of the Chair should stand as the judgment of the Senate; and because the Senate voted to sustain the Chair in that decision the astute Senator from Maryland assumes that that is a judgment upon the merits of the question. I am unable to meet an argument of that kind. I did not suppose that that had anything to do with the merits of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask that that amendment be read before the vote is taken.

The Secretary read the amendment to the amendment, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to report to Congress as soon as may be the names of all persons employed in assessing or collecting the revenue from customs and from internal taxation, who did not, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, take and subscribe to the oaths required by law; together with the nature, place, and amount of service rendered by each of such persons, and the sums paid to and retained by such persons, respectively, on account thereof, and the sums, if any, now claimed by such persons for such service.

Mr. HOWARD. I understand that this is offered as a substitute for the amendment suggested by the Committee on Finance. This requires no appropriation at all.

Mr. BUCKALEW. We have already had a report such as is contemplated by this amendment. The names of these officers were reported to us by the Secretary of the Treasury, and he stated that he had not paid them. Certainly there can be no motive in adopting such an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is not a single fact which the Secretary can give which has not already been given on this subject; and therefore I do not see the use of renewing the controversy at the next session. Let us take a vote of the Senate pro or con. I do not care one particle which way the Senate decides; but the proposition is before us, and I think we had better dispose of it now.

Mr. HOWARD. I have not heard, and the gentlemen around me have not heard, a single word that the Senator from Ohio has said. We are anxious to know what he is stating.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say there is not a single fact which the Secretary can communicate to us that we have not now. We have the names of the assistant assessors and all the facts connected with their services. I would rather the Senate would dispose of the question now; and I would not turn my hands, except as a matter of justice and equity, for a decision either way. I hope the Senate will take the question and pass its judgment upon the proposition of the Committee on Finance. If the Senate decide that these men ought not to be paid under the circumstances, well and good; that is a plain proposition. But there is no use in calling on the Secretary of the Treasury or anybody else for further information. We have it all in his official reports.

Mr. HOWE. Let me suggest to the Senator that I think he is mistaken in saying that the Senate has that information.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Illinois read here last night from an official document giving the names of the assistant assessors who had been appointed and could not take the oath of office. We have the amounts charged for their services. We have several cases on our tables. There are probably fifty or sixty of them; perhaps a hundred; I do not know how many.

Mr. HOWE. The paper from which the Senator from Illinois read last night contained only the names of certain assistant assessors who had been appointed in defiance of law up to the date that report was sent to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. None were appointed after that.

Mr. HOWE. We have no authentic information that I know of whether others have been appointed since or not. We do not know how long these men were continued in office. We do not know whether they are continued in office to-day or not. We do not know what the amounts claimed by these parties are. I do not understand what one fact the Senate has in its possession which would authorize it to pass upon the question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What I desire is information. The committee only reported an authority, with an appropriation in support of it, to the Secretary of the Treasury to settle these accounts according to his discretion; that is, to pay all the persons employed the same sum to which they would have been entitled had they been entitled by law to perform the duties to which these salaries and emoluments would then attach. The committee have not favored the Senate with any information which they possess as to the amount of service rendered by any one of these persons, the nature of it, except a mere general statement—we all know the general nature—where it was performed, how much is now claimed to be due to these persons, whether there is any distinction in the rightfulness, in the natural equity between one person and another, as frequently there is in such cases. We have no information at all of that description. But it is proposed to leave to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury the power of paying these persons without regard to any difference or distinction that exists between them. It leaves him the power to pay a person who may have been appointed—I do not say that he was, because I do not know—in a State and a place where there were dozens of men who were ready and willing to take the oath, and who could take it with a good conscience, and who were perfectly capable of performing these duties.

My proposition is to get this information rather than to go forward, and not knowing now whether these persons are holding these what they call offices or not, still authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay them, and then next year have another appropriation possibly for further services; because, when this subject was under examination by the Committee on Commerce last summer, down in the last days of July, we then had reason to believe from the information we received that some of these persons—we could not readily ascertain how many—were still engaged in this service notwithstanding that many months had passed since the attention of Congress and the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury was drawn to it. It may be that the Secretary of the Treasury had good reason for continuing these persons in this illegal employment after Congress had shown its dissatisfaction with it. I hope he had good reason, if he did so; and I do not mean to say that he had not; but I do mean to say that if in any other case, when a post office contractor is to have anything in addition to what the law gives him, if any claim, however small, of loyal citizens against the Government is to be settled, we know the detail of each individual case, and the nature and extent of the service. If in such cases, I say, we must have information of this description before we act, then we ought to have it now, and decide justly when it is before us. Therefore I think there is reason for the amendment which I offer.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, so many collateral questions have been drawn into this discussion that it is exceedingly difficult for a Senator to know, unless he has been able to form his opinion from other sources, how to vote upon the main question in this case as to whether these claims or accounts shall be paid or not. My objection to the form of amendment now presented by the honorable Senator from Vermont is that it is simply a call for information upon a departmental officer, which may be made by a resolution of the Senate, and seems hardly the thing to append to an appropriation bill. We can get all the information contemplated in this amendment if it be put in the shape of a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury to report; and for that reason I do not see the importance of sustaining this amendment, which in itself is well enough however, but is rather out of place here, as I think.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance as amended.

Mr. BROWN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 33, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Ross, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Williams—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Edmunds, Fowler, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Nye, Pomeroy, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cowan, Creswell, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, and Stewart—6.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to add as an additional section:

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to sell at public auction the following property belonging to the United States, namely: the buildings and grounds known as the old custom-house at Alexandria, Virginia; the building and grounds known as the old custom-house at New Haven, Connecticut; the building and grounds known as the old custom-house at Portsmouth, New Hampshire; the parcel of ground known as the old custom-house lot at Norfolk, Virginia; the parcel or lot of ground purchased in the city of Perth Amboy, New Jersey, for the erection of a custom-house; and the custom-house and grounds at Sackett's Harbor, New York; and he is hereby authorized to make, execute, and deliver all needful conveyances to the purchaser or purchasers thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Finance are now disposed of.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have two or three other amendments to propose from the Committee on Finance. I move to strike out in lines two hundred and sixty-eight, two hundred and sixty-nine, and two hundred and seventy of section one the words:

"For repairs of the building used as the custom-house and post office at Middletown, Connecticut, $6,000; and," so as to leave the clause read:

For the erection, under the direction of the Light-House Board, of an iron spindle on Success rock, Long Island sound, $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now I move to strike out lines two hundred and seventy-four and two hundred and seventy-five, in these words:

For the payment of fixtures and furniture furnished to said post office, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line two hundred and eighty-two I move to strike out "repairs" and insert "miscellaneous expenses," so as to read:

For furniture, carpets, and miscellaneous expenses of Treasury buildings, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am further authorized by the committee to move to insert after line two hundred and eighty-nine "for continuation of the Treasury extension, $50,000."

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to have the Senate accept an amendment to that amendment—I believe we adopted it here once—restoring the building to its original design, and getting rid of those deformities that are stuck on the side next to the President's House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would rather not have that added; I am not sufficiently acquainted with the subject.

Mr. ANTHONY. I can move it afterward.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. After line two hundred and sixty-one I move to insert:

For the purchase of a site and the erection of a building for a custom-house and post office at Machias, Maine, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am authorized by the Committee on Finance to move this amendment, to come in after line two hundred and sixty-one of section one:

For the purchase of a site, and the erection of a custom-house and post office at Astoria, Oregon, $25,000: Provided, That vessels may load and unload at the city of Portland, in said State, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know that I shall oppose this amendment; there was one just like it adopted a moment ago; but I wish to apprise the Senate that we shall claim the erection of post offices and custom-houses in other States if they are to be put on for such places as Machias, in Maine, and the point in Oregon now proposed. I recollect that some years ago the policy was adopted of erecting court-houses and post offices in various places in the United States, and we had considerable discussion about it in the Senate; and now I see that a motion is made to erect a custom-house and post office at some place in Oregon; I do not remember the name of the place.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Astoria.

Mr. TRUMBULL. A moment ago an amendment was adopted to purchase a site for and erect a custom-house and post office at Machias, in Maine. I should like to move a similar amendment for Quincy, in my State. I have no authority from a committee to do it, and of course therefore cannot make the motion; but Quincy is a place of fifteen thousand inhabitants, and we have many applications for an appropriation for the erection of a custom-house and post office there. I do not know what amount of rent the Government pays for its buildings there, but it is considerable. Then I think we ought to have a similar appropriation for Alton if these appropriations are to be made generally to erect post offices and custom-houses at places where we have surveyors and post offices and the cities are of any considerable importance. There are two or three such places in the State of Illinois, and I presume there are others in other States. If we are to adopt this policy I should like to know how far it is to go. I hope the Committee on Finance will allow me to move an appropriation for a similar building at Quincy, in the State of Illinois. A motion was made in the House of Representatives to insert Quincy; but it was made, I believe, at a time when it did not receive fair consideration or it would have been put on the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In regard to the motion I made, I can say to the Senator that Machias is a port of entry in the State of Maine, where considerable business is done, and the only accommodation they have now is an old wooden building, which is not at all fit for the purpose, and is not safe in any degree.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Can the Senator from Maine inform the Senate how much revenue is collected there?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot from recollection. I know it is not very much, but still a considerable business is done there. A citizen of that place has offered for a very small sum to have a custom-house erected. When I was in the Treasury Department I was consulted about the matter, and I recommended to Congress the erection of a custom-house at Machias. I was perfectly satisfied that one ought to be erected there; and of course, if a building were erected in that place it might as well be used for a post office. I supposed the lower part would do for the post office and the upper part for the custom-house.

Mr. TRUMBULL. How much of a place is Machias?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Some seven or eight thousand inhabitants. The question of a custom-house does not depend so much on the number of inhabitants, but the section of country where it is, whether there is a large population around it, &c.

Mr. TRUMBULL. So far as the post office is concerned, that would be a test.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Government now has to hire, I believe, a building for a post office and a building for a custom-house, and neither is fit for the purpose. A wealthy citizen of that place, who owns some valuable lots there, has offered for a very trifling sum in proportion to its real value to sell to the Government a lot for this purpose. Undoubtedly, of course, it will be to the advantage of the rest of his property. On the strength of that offer and the recommendation which was made by myself two years ago, the Secretary of the Treasury has again investigated the matter and sent us a communication requesting decidedly that this appropriation may be made. If the Senator from Illinois, with regard to Quincy or any other town where business of that sort is done, will go through the same process, and get the same recommendations on an examination of the whole subject-matter from the proper authorities it will undoubtedly be provided for. It was not moved at the instance of the Committee on Finance; I knew nothing about it until the papers were sent to me from the Department, and the committee on investigation were so well satisfied about it that they authorized the thing to be done as proper and as a real saving to the Government.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was not particularly objecting to that appropriation or to the one moved by the Senator from Oregon, because I am not particularly advised in regard to either of them. My colleague in the House, who represents the Quincy district, made a motion to have an appropriation for the erection of a custom-house and post office at Quincy. I have not been furnished with any facts in regard to it; and I am not in a condition to move the amendment if I had the facts at this time. I wished merely to call the attention of the Senate to this policy. If we are to inaugurate it again, of course each State will take steps to have public buildings erected in its important cities for the accommodation of the custom-house and post office. I am not certain but that is the best policy. That I suppose could be determined by ascertaining what amount the Government pays in rent. If it is cheaper to put up a building and own it than to rent accommodations in these large places it is probably good policy to erect a building at once. The post office accommodations cost the Government a very considerable amount I know in my own State; I cannot state the precise amount, but as much as $1,000 rent is paid in some places, and probably considerably more in others. What is paid for custom-house accommodations I do not know. I imagine that the amount of customs collected at these places is small, unless it is at a time when railroads are being built in the vicinity, and then considerable amount of iron have been entered and the duties has been paid on it. Quite a considerable sum has been collected in that way; but in an ordinary year I suppose the amount of customs collected at Quincy would be small. I do not know what it is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator gets a recommendation from the Department, of course it will be done in his place as readily as another.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I imagine that it would; but it is a question of general policy whether it should be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I presume the Senator from Illinois is not familiar with the history of this subject, or he would not interpose any objection to the amendment. Astoria is located at the mouth of the Columbia river, and is the port of entry for the collection district of Oregon, and there has been a custom-house there for a great many years.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is the building owned by the Government?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir; the building is an old frame building, in which the records of the United States are kept, and are exposed to destruction at any time by fire.

Mr. CRESWELL. What amount of duties is collected there?

Mr. WILLIAMS. A very large amount of duties, and it is constantly increasing. I do not know the exact amount. This subject has been investigated by the Treasury Department, and a plan and specifications have been prepared by the chief architect. I have here the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury recommending the construction of this custom-house for the sake of safety, so that the Treasury and the records of the United States can be preserved, and it is certainly usual to have one custom-house in a collection district. This custom-house will collect duties for the whole State of Oregon. There is a very large foreign commerce now between the towns on the Columbia river and British America and other foreign ports; and that business is rapidly increasing, and the revenues are rapidly becoming important, and in the judgment of the Treasury Department it is necessary that there should be a fire-proof building there, so that the treasury and the records will be safe. In 1852 $40,000 were appropriated for the erection of a custom-house at Astoria, and yet the money was suffered to go back to the Treasury without being expended, for some reason or other. There is no doubt of the necessity of such a building there.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the bill by adding at the end of the first section the following clause:

To enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to erect a Department of Agriculture on reservation No. 2 in the city of Washington, according to the plan proposed by him, to be constructed under the general provisions of law relating to the construction of public buildings, $100,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As that amendment will probably take some little time, I desire, with the indulgence of the Senator from Massachusetts, to submit at this point a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. WILSON. Very well.

PAYMENTS TO LOYAL PERSONS.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution of the House (H. R. No. 222) prohibiting payments by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the joint resolution of the House (H. R. No. 222) prohibiting payments by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its first amendment, disagreed to by the House, and agree to the bill as passed by this House with the Senate's other amendment.

LYMAN TRUMBULL,
GEORGE G. FOGG,
J. W. NESMITH,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. DELANO,
JOHN B. ALLEY,
A. THORNTON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am inquired of by a Senator behind me the effect of this report. Really I do not think it changes the joint resolution at all. The Senate struck out the words which forbade payment, not only to a person who had aided the rebellion, but also to any person who was not known to be in favor of its suppression, and inserted in lieu of those words other words on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE.] The other words inserted in lieu of them were that no payment should be made to a person who should not prove to the proper accounting officers that he was opposed to the rebellion. I think the two expressions amount to about the same thing, and the committee agreed to abide by the resolution as it was before those words were stricken out.

The report was concurred in.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. WILSON, to appropriate $100,000 for the erection of a building for the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have some explanation of this matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will explain what I know about this proposition. Under the act creating the Department of Agriculture certain rooms were assigned to it in the building of the Department of the Interior. Ever since that time there has been a constant struggle by the Department of the Interior to get the Department of Agriculture removed to other buildings beyond its limits, on the ground that all the room in that building was needed for the Department of the Interior. Every Secretary of the Interior for the last four years, and I believe there have been three of them in that time, has, in official communications addressed to Congress, and also in letters to the Committee on Agriculture, asked that some arrangement of this kind be made. About three years ago Congress by law authorized the Commissioner of Agriculture to hire a building outside of the Department of the Interior for the accommodation of some of the officers of his Department. Rooms were hired, and the duties of some of the branches of the Agricultural Department were discharged outside of the Department of the Interior. By the terms of that law the arrangement continued but for three years, and the term expires on the 1st of July next. The Commissioner of Agriculture has been for years beseeching Congress to provide some suitable building for the Department of Agriculture, and so has the Secretary of the Interior. The Committee on Agriculture have been considering the matter very thoroughly for three years. The trouble was, first, to get a site; and second, to agree upon a plan, so as to get a style of building that would be suitable for the purpose. Finally we have agreed upon the ground; we have agreed upon the form of the building, not a very expensive one, and on the whole have concluded to recommend that provision be now made for the erection of this building. The plan contemplated is on your table, and may be readily seen. It contemplates the erection of a comparatively plain brick structure about one hundred and fifty feet long and some sixty feet wide, upon a very neat plan, that will look very well.

It was first proposed to erect this building on Judiciary square; but the Secretary of the Interior was very much opposed to that, because he said that that ground was reserved for a Department building for the Department of the Interior, to be erected at some future time, and he objected to the use of that ground for this purpose. It was then proposed to put it upon reservation No. 2, which lies to the west of Smithsonian Institute, where the United States have some twenty or thirty acres of ground now in possession of the Agricultural Department. It is proposed to erect this building in that place; and after a careful examination of the plan proposed and the site selected we thought it was better to erect the building now as a matter of economy. The architect has prepared the plan and estimates, I think correctly, that the building can be constructed for $100,000.

We now pay for rent of buildings for the use of the Department of Agriculture $3,500 a year, besides occupying a considerable portion of the basement or lower story of the Department of the Interior; and the Department of the Interior in the mean time for want of room have been compelled to hire a house outside for some of their officers. The result is that we are now paying in rent nearly the interest on the money it will cost to erect a suitable building for the Department of Agriculture.

I will state also that the collections which Congress have authorized the Commissioner to buy, and the collections of agricultural productions which are constantly increasing, have become so great that the Agricultural Department want additional room for them. The plan of the new building appropriates a very handsome room for the exhibition of agricultural products. On the whole, the Committee on Agriculture thought it wise to propose this measure, and I can state to the Senate that it has been very fully considered, and has not been reported without a careful examination, perhaps more than is usually given to most propositions of this kind, and it is sanctioned by the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Agriculture, and I believe by every one who has had anything to do with it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know that it will be of any service for me to say a word about this proposition; and I do not know but that it is all right. That depends upon what Congress intends to do. I wish, however, to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to the progress of things. In the first place, if I had the book before me, I should like to call their attention to a debate that took place in this body when the Department of Agriculture was established, which was only about four or five years ago. Before that time we had been in the habit of expending about seventy thousand dollars a year for agricultural purposes, and that had grown up by degrees from the first appropriation of $1,000, which was very strongly opposed on the ground that this Government was not instituted for the purpose of having departments of agriculture or of taking care of agricultural matters in the country particularly. After a very strenuous opposition, however, the original appropriation of $1,000 was made; and I believe it was then foretold that the result would be that the thing would grow up into a Department, a notion which struck everybody with surprise at the time.

When this Department was established it was on the express statement that all which was designed by it was to give character to the agricultural interests as connected with the Government. It was said that the name of a Department was wanted. It was not to cost any more than the usual appropriations then made; $70,000 a year was to cover the whole expense. That assurance was given very decidedly by gentlemen who were in favor of the proposition. I believe I prophesied then that it would grow regularly every year until it got to be one of the great institutions of the nation; perhaps it ought to be. That is for Congress to decide. I think the very next year after the Department was established the amount asked for under the direction of the present able and learned head of that institution was $150,000; and it has stood at that, or something about that sum, since that time. It has grown up to have a chemical department and several learned professors connected with it, some in the investigation of one branch of agricultural science and some in the investigation of another. The last proposition, I believe, was to make four or five new professorships in connection with it. Congress, however, did not quite indulge that idea at the time.

Now, it is found, and it is unquestionably true, that this Department is encroaching very much upon the Department of the Interior, and more room must be provided for it. We have hired some buildings for that purpose; and we have at last come to this point, that a Department building is to be erected costing us, it is said, $100,000; but I take it that is merely a beginning. Senators do not know that that is going to cover the cost, and it has never been found that the first appropriation covered, or began to cover the expenses of a public building here.

Mr. WILSON. I am told the building can be completed by the 1st of December for that sum.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Undoubtedly the Senator is told so. Perhaps it will grow up like a fairy palace, in the night, under the direction of Sir Isaac and others connected with the matter. Now, I have simply to say that if this were to be considered the beginning of the end it would be something; but the result must inevitably be that we shall have a vast mass of buildings, and the Government will be committed irrevocably—because there is no backward step in this progress—to a large Agricultural Department of the Government, involving very great expense.

Sir, I should not regret this if I were satisfied that it was to do much good; but I have never yet been able to believe that any good was to be accomplished by making a Department here to attend to matters which are a great deal better taken care of at home. We are about to establish a department of education. I believe it will do no good. I believe it will do harm. I believe it will simply stand in the way of the efforts which have hitherto been made by the States to conduct educational matters; and that by degrees those efforts will slack; the burden will be attempted to be thrown upon the General Government of making large appropriations for educational purposes; that they will not be half as well conducted as they are now when the persons immediately interested have the control of them under the systems adopted in the different States. It will not be five years before we have a proposition to erect a building on some reservation or other to accommodate the department of education, and we shall have a large establishment, I suppose, in the shape of a normal school for the education of teachers, &c.

I deem it my duty to state these things to the Senate. Experience has shown me that it is almost, if not quite, impossible to resist with any effect the current that seems to be setting in the direction of absorbing all powers into the hands of the General Government. I am not much of a State rights man, and I never was, but I think our country differs very much from other countries in the fact that it is made up of States, a congregation of States, which have been in the habit of considering that they had some duties to perform under our system, which distinguishes us pretty much from all other nations. I dread this course of legislation; but all I can do is to express my fear of it and my dissent from its wisdom. The Senate of course will do as they please.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that the building to be erected according to the plan is to be a plain brick building, and it is believed it can be built for the amount of this appropriation between now and the close of the year. The intention is to have it ready by December next. It will be a beautiful building.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On paper.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, on paper; the plan is here. I hope we shall come to a vote.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to offer this amendment, to come in in line four hundred and ten of section one:

For the removal of the foot-bridge on Maine avenue, now of no further use at that point, to Third street west, which the Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby directed to have done, $300.

To complete the culvert through the Botanic Garden, $15,000.

I will state—

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. I offer the following amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $75,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the completion of public buildings in the Territory of New Mexico; said sum to be expended by the Governor of that Territory, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a large sum.

Mr. WADE. Not larger than they generally have. Buildings have been commenced there, but they are in such a condition that they seem to be going to decay, as it is represented to us, and it is absolutely necessary either to give them up or complete them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to know from the Senator where the estimate of the cost of these buildings comes from?

Mr. WADE. There has never been an estimate of the cost that I know of. There never has been any in such cases that I know of.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think we have not been in the habit of appropriating over $20,000 for territorial buildings.

Mr. WADE. Yes we have. This is to complete the buildings, and they have already had several thousand.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They must cost more than the public buildings in the States, then.

Mr. WADE. This is to complete the public buildings in New Mexico, and I presume this amount will not be more than enough for that purpose. That is the information the Committee on Territories had. There was no information from the Department, and there never is any that I am aware of in regard to these buildings.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There always should be.

Mr. WADE. I think the Departments are not in the habit of estimating for these things.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Invariably.

Mr. WADE. The amount appropriated in the different Territories for public buildings, jails, State houses, &c., has been in some cases $40,000, and in some cases $50,000, and in others $60,000. I suppose these buildings are necessary in all the Territories. The committee came to that conclusion, but if the Senate think differently, be it so. I have discharged my duty in bringing the proposition forward.

Mr. JOHNSON. Permit me to ask the honorable member how he got at the amount named in his amendment?

Mr. WADE. We got the amount from the resolutions from the Legislative Assembly and from various other sources, not very authentic or official, I agree, but such information as we could pick up. I have never known a case where there has been an estimate from a Department as to the cost of public buildings in a Territory before we made an appropriation for them. Different sums have been appropriated in different Territories. This is rather larger than most of the Territories have expended; but it seems they have begun a very large building there, and left it in an unfinished and dilapidated state. They have no State house for the Legislative Assembly to meet in. They have, as they represent, one of the oldest buildings on the continent which they use, built originally for a temple or a cathedral, or something of that kind. It is represented as being in a very dilapidated state, and it will cost a large sum to repair it and to make it comfortable for the transaction of business. This sum is to finish up that building and to complete their prison. It was represented to the Committee on Territories in such a shape that we could not doubt the propriety of the appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. GRIMES. Permit me to inquire of the Senator whether it is the usual practice for the Government of the United States to build jails for the Territories.

Mr. WADE. Yes, sir; prisons are always built in the Territories.

Mr. GRIMES. Penitentiaries.

Mr. WADE. I call it a jail; you may call it a penitentiary if you please. It is a place to put prisoners in.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Ten years ago this summer I was at Santa Fé and saw the buildings there used as public buildings. The building which is used mainly is older I presume than any building in the city of Philadelphia, called the palace of justice, built at a very early day by the Spaniards, built in the manner in which buildings in that country are built, of adobe bricks. It is a pretty large building, and is occupied by the various territorial officers, and the Senate and the Legislative Assembly of the Territory meet there. It is not such a building as would be regarded as very desirable in modern times. Besides that, there are standing outside some considerable distance from this the walls of a building which was intended to be erected for the Territory by the Government of the United States. I understand an appropriation was once made for it, and the walls of the building were erected; but it stands in that condition unfinished, as it has stood I suppose for ten years. For some reason or other, I think, because somebody connected with the affair misappropriated the money, the building was not completed; and the thing is in such a condition that I think the honorable Senator from Ohio would desire to have some detailed estimates before he could form a judgment as to what would be necessary to be appropriated to finish that building. The amount is altogether uncertain unless there be some estimates from competent authority.

Mr. WADE. I do not know where we could get any estimates on such a subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. From the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WADE. The amendment provides that the money is to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. I suppose he could take means of doing it which would satisfy him that the money was properly expended. I have no objection to putting any proper restriction on him that the Senator may propose; but I think this proposition is in the form of the appropriations usually made for these purposes. The provision is copied from other territorial bills, that the Governor of the Territory shall expend the money under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. I have followed the ordinary precedents, supposing that this Territory was like other Territories in this matter. It is an old Spanish settlement, and it is proposed to repair some of their old buildings. I looked to find the last appropriation, and I think it was made in 1856, and the amount was $50,000 to complete the penitentiary. I presumed from that language that there had been a previous appropriation for that purpose, but on looking at the laws I have never been able to find any such appropriation.

We have been informed by various resolutions of the Legislative Assembly, and by the Delegate from the Territory, and from various sources, that it is very desirable to have this building completed. I think we have obtained all the light that is usual in such cases. Possibly an engineer might be sent out there to examine the building and make an estimate, but I think we have done all that is usual in cases like this. If gentlemen think proper to provide that the Secretary of the Interior shall cause an estimate to be made, and report at the next session, let them do so; but it will be an unusual provision.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am now drawing an amendment to that effect.

Mr. WADE. If that is the pleasure of the Senate I shall not object.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It strikes me that this appropriation is large; and I suppose of course the territorial authorities will expend all the money we vote. I think the appropriation ought to be reduced to $50,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio:

That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to procure an examination to be made of the condition of the public buildings in the Territory of New Mexico, and report to the next Congress an estimate of what amount is necessary to complete the same.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. WADE. I have another amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $40,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of public buildings in the Territory of Dakota, said sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

This appropriation is some ten thousand dollars less than almost any modern Territory has had for public buildings. There have been no public buildings provided for the Territory of Dakota, and I suppose it would cost the Government much less to erect these buildings at once than to leave them to a later period. The condition of things in that Territory, as I am informed and believe, is such that when they convict a man of any crime they have got to transport him to Detroit, and in that way, if things go on as they are, we shall have to incur more expenses than we would to erect a penitentiary.

Mr. GRIMES. What do they send them to Detroit for?

Mr. WADE. There is no prison nearer.

Mr. GRIMES. There is one at Omaha.

Mr. WADE. Perhaps they might find one at Omaha, but I am told they send prisoners to Detroit.

Mr. GRIMES. The real capital of Dakota, that is to say the place where most of the business of the Territory is done, is Sioux City, in the State of Iowa.

Mr. WADE. That is two or three hundred miles off.

Mr. GRIMES. Yankton, the capital of the Territory, is northwest of that. I do not remember the distance, but they have to go to Sioux City, and through Sioux City across the State of Iowa, and then across the State of Illinois, and then across the State of Michigan to get to Detroit, rather a long journey to carry a prisoner to prison.

Mr. WADE. The Territory is a very large one, and the population is scattered over a large extent of it, not very continuous in villages or towns. It is very difficult for them to get along without a prison in any of these Territories. The Committee on Territories has been beset very much with applications for appropriations from Montana and from Idaho and the other Territories, and it seems to me that their request is reasonable and just. For fear, however, that it should be thought the Committee on Territories were extravagant, I have withheld, even against my better judgment, bringing in applications for these appropriations. There the same complaint is made. Half the prisoners they convict run at large because they have no place to put them.

Mr. GRIMES. What is the number of convictions that have taken place in Dakota?

Mr. WADE. I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the population?

Mr. WADE. I do not know certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. About six hundred, I believe.

Mr. WADE. I imagine it is much more than that. There are a good many Indians there, you have brought your Indian population down into that Territory. A jail is wanted there, and a jail is wanted in all these Territories. Gentlemen here may think lightly of it, but the honest inhabitants there do not think lightly of it. There is a great trouble in all these rambling Territories for want of a place to put prisoners when they are convicted; and if I continue upon the Committee on Territories I shall have very soon to propose appropriations for public buildings in all these other Territories, and unless the Senate mean to adopt a new rule they will grant this request. Such applications never have been refused heretofore that I know of. No Territory once organized has asked for money to erect public buildings that I know of which has been refused. There seems to be a kind of a rule under which it is expected that the Government shall provide public buildings for them in the commencement. They have always done it, and I suppose they will have to continue to do it as long as they organize Territories. I ask in this case a sum more moderate than any appropriation that I know of for public buildings in any Territory. The amount here asked is $40,000, and I know of none others where the appropriation has been less than $50,000. The judgment of the Committee on Territories was that we ought to grant this reasonable sum; but I leave the matter to the decision of the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose we shall have to put up these buildings in accordance with what has been the modern practice; but the Senate will perceive that the system on which we go is a very wasteful and extravagant one. We appropriate a gross sum of money to be expended in the erection of buildings. We do not know anything about the plans and specifications. There is nobody to approve them, and nobody under whose direction the buildings are to be put up. All that is wrong. It ought to be under the direction of some public officer. I move to amend the amendment by adding after the words "Secretary of the Interior" the words "and upon plans and specifications approved by him."

Mr. WADE. I have no objection to that. I supposed the language of the amendment already would embrace that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think I shall propose another amendment. It is very evident that they cannot spend so much money as is proposed to be appropriated this year. I move to cut down the amount to $20,000. That will be as much as can possibly be expended in this year, and then next year we shall have the plan before us, and we shall know something more about it. We shall by that time be able to ascertain some facts in relation to it. I have no objection to making an approprition to begin with, of all that is necessary for the year.

Mr. WADE. I am pretty well satisfied now that the amendment which has been added requiring the work to be upon plans and specifications approved by the Secretary of the Interior will involve a great additional expense to the Government. The Secretary will probably make the building on a much more extravagant plan than the people there would if it was left to them. They might be satisfied with a kind of temporary building; and I am afraid that if we leave him to pass upon the plans and specifications he will get up a building infinitely more expensive than the people there would get up if we left the matter to them alone. They do not build such buildings as master-builders here when you submit the job to them to get up. They are less expensive as a general thing. It seems proper enough that there should be specifications; and yet under the circumstances my opinion is that the effect of that provision will be what I have stated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will say to the Senator that if the people of the Territory were to erect the buildings out of their money I have no doubt what he says would be correct; but when we pay for them they will get as large buildings as they can, and as expensive ones.

Mr. POMEROY. I have always been in favor of a liberal policy toward the Territories; but I think our legislation in regard to questions of this character should be governed somewhat by the population of the Territory and the necessity for these buildings. If an amendment were put on here that this amount might be expended when the population reached twenty thousand there would be some reason why we should make the appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the population?

Mr. POMEROY. I have found from some experience that these public buildings are never, or hardly ever, built in the beginning where the people, when they come to be a State, want them located. There was a large appropriation made for the Territory of Kansas, but there never was any building erected with it.

Mr. JOHNSON. What became of it?

Mr. POMEROY. A building was commenced, the money was expended, and the stone that was quarried and prepared was afterward sold. Why? Because the capital of the Territory was located at LeCompton, a place the people of the State did not want for a capital; and the Government lost about seventy-five thousand dollars. In other Territories the organic acts sometimes prescribe the place where the capital shall be, or else allow the Governor to select a capital. The organic acts have differed in that respect; but neither Congress nor the Governor has any right to make a permanent capital, and we ought not to erect public buildings until the permanent capital is established. We may put up temporary buildings that will answer the purposes of the territorial legislation, but when we appropriate large sums for public buildings the capital should be well defined and well established, because the buildings are not for a day, they are not for this year; and the appropriations are of a sufficient character to erect buildings to last years and years.

I have seen something of Dakota, and I think that in such a Territory we ought to require the population to be at least twenty thousand before public buildings are erected. I would vote for an appropriation for that purpose, to be expended when the population reaches twenty thousand; but if the population is not now five thousand, and if they do not add a thousand a year, as they do not, I cannot see why we should make appropriations of this character. There are some Territories—Montana, for instance—where the population is increasing enormously. If the capital was well established there, so that we could with prudence and discretion say that the amount of $75,000 might be used for public buildings, if it would answer the purpose of public buildings when they became a State, I would vote for it.

Mr. GRIMES. Permit me to make an inquiry of the Senator from Kansas. He lives in the vicinity, and I should like to know what his estimate is of the population of Dakota, and what is the number of votes that were polled at the last election.

Mr. POMEROY. The population must be very small, or else the people are so scattered that they could not get to the polls to vote. I noticed that the vote was very small.

Mr. SPRAGUE. What was the vote?

Mr. POMEROY. Less than a thousand.

Mr. GRIMES. Was it not less than five hundred?

Mr. POMEROY. The Territory is very large and the people are very much scattered, so that they did not all get to the polls to vote. But I believe there was only one ticket running; and in a Territory or in a State when there are not two parties, you never get out a full vote. You cannot tell by the voting whether there is any population or not in a Territory or State where there is only one ticket running; because if there is no contest hardly anybody will take the trouble to go to the polls and vote. Judging by the last vote, the population of Dakota is very small, indeed; but I think they have more population than that vote would indicate.

But, sir, I close what I have to say by saying that an expenditure of this character should not be made, in my opinion, unless the capital of the Territory is well settled, and unless the population is at least twenty thousand.

Mr. WADE. I do not wish to introduce any new principle in regard to these appropriations. The precedents have been that when you have organized a people into a territorial government, when you have given them a Governor and a Legislature, and all the paraphernalia of self-government, when you have set them up as a quasi independent organization in that form, you have always given them an outfit of public buildings. I believe that has been the invariable rule.

Mr. NYE. Not in our case.

Mr. WADE. But you were erected into a State before you were hardly born. [Laughter.] It has been the rule in all other cases that I know of, when we erect a people into a Territory, when we provide for their choosing a Legislature, we do not provide that they shall meet at certain times to transact legislative business without providing a place in which they shall meet. It is supposed that to carry on civil government they will want offices for the transaction of the business of the Territory. Then, in the administration of justice they will want a jail or a prison, unless nobody goes there but angels, and that has not always been found to be the case. It has always been considered that there was a kind of propriety in giving an outfit in this form to a new Territory just starting in the work of organization. When you authorize them to make laws you provide a place in which their Legislature shall meet to enact laws. I suppose that is the reason upon which, in every Territory so far as I know, appropriations for these purposes have been made.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas that it would be exceedingly well if the proper site for a permanent seat of government could be ascertained at an early period of the Territory when we make the appropriation; but if you were to take the vote of the people of Dakota on that question to-day they could not tell where they would ultimately want their capital to be, and I think the permanent capital has rarely been fixed upon in an early period of the Territory. Nobody can tell then where the settlements will predominate, where the population will be thickest, where the convenience of roads will indicate the proper point to be. Nobody can now foresee what may happen in the next ten years. Consequently, fix it where you may at first, you will find that the people after a while will have a pretty violent contest over it, and they will finally fix it to suit themselves without regard to the location you may name. It is impossible to permanently locate the capital when a Territory is first organized. You cannot do it unless the geography of the country is so marked that the place where the capital should be is at once indicated by great rivers or great roads, or something showing where the center of population and business will be.

But, sir, I have said all that I care to say on this subject. If the Senate do not see fit to deal with this Territory as we have dealt with other Territories, be it so. I have done my duty.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On the statement of the Senator from Ohio, it appears to me to be exceedingly unwise to make any appropriation just now for this purpose. It seems that there are very few people there, and it is impossible to tell where these buildings should be put up. If we spend $40,000 or $20,000 now it may be wasted; it may be used up in buildings at a place which will be nothing more than a county seat. I think they can wait until we know something more definite in regard to it, and even risk the consequences the Senator apprehends in regard to criminals. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. This is too early a day altogether to put up public buildings in this Territory.

Mr. WADE. If you mean to make no appropriation for this Territory I hope you will resolve it back into its original form and take it under the protection of the General Government again. It seems to me very singular that you should provide a territorial government for these people, create a Legislature, and require them to meet and manage their local affairs, and deny them a place to meet in.

Mr. NYE. I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator from Maine. I understood his amendment to be that this money should be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was adopted.

Mr. NYE. I think that should be reconsidered. It will lead to a great deal of trouble. You have local officers there, and if they are fit for their places they know better how to expend the money than the Secretary here. You are now building a mint in Nevada of course under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury who receives monthly reports from there, and there are no payments until the reports are received. It takes a report a month to come here and a month to go back, so that the Government is in debt two months all the time to those who are doing the work. I suggest as a matter of convenience and as a matter of economy that the money could better be expended by the officers of the Territory.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The original proposition of the Senator from Ohio was to have the money expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. What was added on my suggestion was a provision that the buildings should be constructed on plans and specifications approved by him. But I think the appropriation ought not to be made at all, or at any rate not more than $10,000, because it is evident that it is impossible to ascertain anything about it at the present time. I agree with the Senator from Kansas that we ought not to make any appropriation for this purpose to the Territory. There are so few people in it.

Mr. POMEROY. I would put in a proviso at the end of the amendment that the money should not be expended until the population reaches ten or twenty thousand.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That will not be for some time, and we can provide for it just as well next year.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not think there is really any occasion for making this provision now. The difficulty I have found about these appropriations is that the territorial officers, the men who first go into a new Territory will buy a town site and become largely interested in it, and they are very clamorous to have buildings erected there, so that it becomes more a matter of speculation and of necessity to them than of public interest. I am clear that in a Territory like Dakota there should be a population sufficient to warrant an expenditure of this character, and the location of the public building should be well stated and defined. This amendment appropriates for "public buildings." I do not know what is contemplated by that. If it means a jail or a penitentiary, $10,000 is enough for that purpose. If it means a Capitol for the Legislature, $40,000 is not too much. I really do not know from this amendment what kind of buildings are contemplated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have lived in two Territories, and know something of the manner in which money appropriated for such purposes is expended in the Territories, and I doubt very much whether the expenditure has ever been of any particular advantage to the people, though it has been very often to individuals. I rise, however, simply to suggest that unless money enough is appropriated to construct a State-house and penitentiary in a Territory, none ought to be appropriated. If $10,000 will not build either a State-house or a penitentiary in a Territory, the appropriation of that amount would be simply so much money thrown away for no good purpose. The legislative officers of the Territory can hire the necessary buildings for the meetings of the Legislative Assembly, and they can temporarily construct a jail or penitentiary for the use of the Territory. But if this money is appropriated in this manner it will not, I presume, be applied to the construction of a penitentiary, but will more probably be applied to the construction of a State-house or a place for the meetings of the Legislative Assembly, and for the transaction of the business of the territorial officers. If the object be to appropriate money to this Territory for the purpose of providing it with a penitentiary, the law ought to declare that so much money is appropriated for that purpose; for when you pay this money into the hands of the territorial officers a contest arises between the different localities that aspire to be the capital of the Territory as to which place shall have the public buildings, and a contest arises as to the location of the penitentiary; and I undertake to say, without positive knowledge, except as to two or three Territories, that in three fourths of the Territories where money has been expended in this way a great proportion of the amount has been lost in these local controversies between town sites and places contending for the capitol and penitentiary. According to the information I have received here, and without any personal knowledge on the subject, it does seem to me that it would be advisable to wait a little while before this expenditure is made, although I am always favorable to every sort of friendly legislation for the Territories. As I have been so identified with them, I feel an interest in them always, and any legislation that looks to their advantage would certainly receive my support; but if the population of this Territory is but five or six hundred or a thousand people scattered all over a large extent of country, the expenditure of this amount of money for the purpose of constructing public buildings there would be about so much money thrown away, as it seems to me. I think it advisable to wait a little while and see what the Territory will become.

Mr. CRAGIN. I apprehend from this discussion that some Senators are not aware of the fact that a bill was passed by the Senate a few weeks ago appropriating to each Territory $40,000 for the purpose of building a penitentiary. Such a bill was passed by the House of Representatives at the last session, and was reported by the Senate Committee on Territories and passed by the Senate a few weeks ago. I reported it during the morning hour, and it went through without any objection, appropriating $40,000 to each of the Territories for the purpose of building a penitentiary, the money to be taken from the internal revenue collected in each of the Territories for the years 1866, 1867, 1868, and 1869.

Mr. POMEROY. I would inquire of the Senator whether that bill has become a law.

Mr. CRAGIN. I suppose it is a law. I am not aware that the President has vetoed it or kept it back.

Mr. POMEROY. It had escaped my recollection entirely.

Mr. CONNESS. I remember it.

Mr. POMEROY. Then why do we have this appropriation of $40,000 in addition?

Mr. WADE. I think that bill was confined to Montana and Idaho.

Mr. CRAGIN. No, it applied to the Territories of the United States, and appropriated $40,000 to each, except to Washington Territory, and to that we appropriated $20,000, it having already received $20,000 for the same purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on amending the amendment by striking out $40,000 and inserting $20,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I withdraw that amendment to the amendment, and I think it is evident that the whole proposition should be rejected on the information we have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADE. I offer this amendment as additional sections:

And be it further enacted, That all advertisements, notices, and proposals for contracts for all the Executive Departments of the Government, and the laws passed by Congress and executive proclamations and treaties, shall hereafter be advertised by publication in the two daily papers published in the District of Columbia now selected under the act of the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1867, and for other purposes, until otherwise ordered by Congress, and in no other District of Columbia papers: Provided, That the charges for such publications shall not be higher than such as are paid by individuals for advertising in said papers: And provided also, That the same publications shall be made in each of said papers equally as to frequency.

And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws conflicting with the above provision with respect to official advertising in the District of Columbia be, and are hereby, repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON. What are the two papers referred to?

Mr. WADE. The Chronicle and the Star. They were selected under the law of last session, which required the advertisements to be published in those papers having the largest circulation, which was ascertained in the way prescribed by that law. But I understand that law has been very much evaded, and this is an attempt to correct that evasion. I believe the law spoke of newspapers published in the city of Washington, and I have been told that some papers here—one, at all events—purported on its face to be published at Georgetown, and thus evaded the law and obtained the publication of Government advertisements, although it had not the largest amount of circulation. This is an attempt to correct that abuse, and to require the publication to be made in those papers that were selected because they did have the largest circulation.

Mr. JOHNSON. The circulation of the Star is quite large locally, but it cannot be extensively circulated out of the city. The effect of this amendment, as I understand, is to confine the publication to the Chronicle, which I suppose is circulated generally, and to the Star which has a mere local circulation, and to prevent the publication in any other papers. I doubt whether the publication in the Star will answer the purpose throughout the country. I do not think it is a paper which has any circulation out of the city. The honorable member says the law is the same now, that the Departments are obliged to give these publications to the Chronicle and the Star. If that be the law I do not know that it has been violated.

Mr. CONNESS. It cannot be given to any other papers than those now without a violation of the law by evasion, and as I understand it this is to prevent that.

Mr. WADE. That is all there is of it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I believe the law of last session provides that the publication shall be made in the newspapers having the largest circulation. This is an abandonment of that law in this respect. This will make the papers which are now publishing the advertisements the organs for that purpose by act of Congress; and should they cease at any time to have the largest circulation the Departments could not transfer the publication, according to the law of last session, to any other paper, unless Congress should order it to be done. I think it is small business for Congress to be saying what papers shall publish the laws. They should be published in papers of general circulation. To say that any two papers shall continue to publish the laws is to say arbitrarily that they shall have the benefit of this patronage without regard to their circulation. The effect of this amendment is simply to take away from the Departments the control of it under the act of last session. That act allowed the publication to be given to the papers of largest circulation.

Mr. WADE. And this provides for the publication in those papers selected under that law by the methods provided for in that law.

Mr. JOHNSON. But suppose they have lost that circulation now?

Mr. WADE. Their relation to the other papers in point of circulation, no doubt, is now just about what it was then. As the Senator from Maryland well remarked, one of those papers, as I understand, has a very large local circulation in the District of Columbia, and it was therefore thought proper not to confine it to that one. The Chronicle undoubtedly has a much wider circulation outside the District of Columbia than the Star; but these two papers are the leading papers here, having a much larger circulation than any other two papers in the District. They were selected under the law of last session for that reason, and this provision continues the publication in these same papers, and it prevents the practice of running off with papers, inferior in circulation, to Georgetown and setting them up there, and thus evading what was intended by the law. This speaks of papers published in the District of Columbia instead of in the city of Washington.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If I understand the purpose of the Senator, it would be accomplished properly by providing that the laws and other advertisements shall be published in the two papers in the District of Columbia having the largest circulation, instead of the city of Washington, as he says the law of last year provided. He wants now to insert "District of Columbia" instead of "city of Washington." But this amendment goes much further, and says the publication shall be continued in two particular papers until Congress shall otherwise order. That has no defense upon any ground. They may now have the largest circulation, and next year may not.

Must Congress legislate on this subject and investigate every year what papers in the District of Columbia have the largest circulation? That certainly cannot be right. I am willing to legislate offices from one man to another if the Senate thinks that important for party ends; but to say that Congress shall commence naming the newspapers that shall do the publication for the Government, is I think rather small business. Certainly this matter ought to stand on the general principle that the papers who have the largest circulation at the time the advertisement is to be made should be selected.

Mr. WADE. There is no doubt that is the case now; and as for Congress taking the power over the subject I am perfectly willing that they should. Indeed, I would rather Congress should settle the question than to leave it to any other power to ascertain it. That is just how I feel.

Mr. YATES. I understand the fact to be that the papers in this District were required to furnish a statement under oath of the number of their copies in circulation, and that these two papers, the Star and the Chronicle, were ascertained to have the largest circulation. I think therefore this order which continues it to them with the further action of Congress is entirely correct. I cannot see any objection to it. The question has been settled by the returns made under oath.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRESWELL. I am directed by the Committee on the Library to propose this amendment, to come in after line three hundred and eighty-five of section one:

For the construction of a new green-house, with central dome and a wing, to correspond in size with the present green-house in the Botanic Garden, to be built of iron and glass, according to the plan prepared by the architect of the Capitol extension and approved by the joint Committee on the Library, $35,000, the same to be expended under the direction of the joint Committee on the Library of Congress.

The Botanic Garden, as I gather from the appropriations heretofore made for it, was established somewhere between the years 1850 and 1855. Appropriations have been made continuously from that time down, as well as for the support of the employes necessary to conduct it as for the construction of the buildings and for procuring necessary manures, shrubs, plants, &c. The building which is now used for that purpose has in the course of time become entirely too small. In fact it was only a part of the original plan as proposed by the architect. At the time that it was constructed, it was thought that that would suffice for the protection of the shrubs and plants which were then in the possession of the Government; but the time has arrived when it is necessary, by reason of the accumulation of plants on our hands, that that building shall be greatly enlarged, and a necessity exists that a new building shall be constructed of an entirely different material, as appears from the present condition of the building now in the Botanic Garden. The building there is in such a condition from decay that in a very few years it will be necessary entirely to replenish it.

The amendment that I have proposed requires that the original plan of the architect, a copy of which I have, shall be executed, and executed in iron. It has been found from experience it is by far the most economical. The Library Committee, after a careful consideration of this subject—and upon that committee are associated with me the honorable chairman of the Finance Committee and the honorable chairman of the Committee on Claims, two I think of the most lynx-eyed gentlemen in this body with regard to the appropriation of public money—agreed that it was far better that we should appropriate a sufficient sum to construct a building of iron at once and thereby make it permanent. As the garden now is, I would not recommend the appropriation of another dollar to maintain the building there unless this appropriation that I now suggest were made. I think it is essential with a view to the credit of the Government and to a proper ornamentation of the grounds connected with the Capitol. In the interest, therefore, of science as well as of economy, I have moved the amendment, and I hope it will be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. WADE. It seems to me, when we are on economy, we could as well dispense perhaps with the Botanic Garden in this city as a Territory can dispense with buildings to legislate in. The one seems to me to be a necessity, and the other a mere matter of fancy. If the Government is not able to give the people of a Territory, who are always poor and not very well calculated to take care of themselves in the first place, a building to legislate in when we require legislation at their hands, it strikes me we can just as well dispense with this Botanic Garden and its arrangements as the people out there can dispense with a place to legislate in. If the Government cannot do the one, I think it ought not to do the other.

Mr. CRESWELL. Why, Mr. President, the only objection made to the appropriation that the gentleman asked for in the Territory of Dakota was that there were not people enough there to fill the building, excepting the Indians, who perhaps would not congregate in it. When the time comes that such a building as that will be useful in Dakota the Senator will find that every member of the committee to which I am attached will cheerfully vote for it, but not before. But, sir, there is a necessity for the construction of this building in the Botanic Garden, unless Congress in its wisdom shall determine to destroy everything like an improvement in the interest of the Botanic Garden.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, at his discretion, to increase the pay of the clerks of the United States armory at Springfield, Massachusetts, to $1,200 per annum, instead of $800, as now fixed by law.

I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer this amendment. I have also explained it to the Senator from Ohio, who has charge of this bill, [Mr. SHERMAN,] and have his approval to the offering of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to offer an amendment, to come in on page 13, after the amendment of the committee in relation to the extension of the Treasury building. This building, which I have regarded with a great deal of interest, as I suppose all of us have, one of the most superb buildings on the face of the earth, has had the misfortune to have had a series of architects, each of whom thought it necessary to put on some little alteration, which generally has been a departure from the plan of the building, to signalize his own administration. You will recollect, Mr. President, that a year or two ago we interfered to prevent an alteration that was to fill up the recess fronting on the Potomac, so as to make two or three more rooms there. The original plan of the building, I understand—indeed every one must see that it must have been the original plan—was to have a balustrade go across the roof of the building what is called the eave; but that has been departed from, and there is a row of galvanized iron leaves stuck up there. Any person on looking at it will see that it is a great deformity. The architect, I know, desires to restore the original plan; and we passed an amendment to this effect in the appropriation bill last year; but it was lost in the House, I suppose from some misunderstanding. The amendment which I propose now to offer is so carefully guarded that the change cannot be made if it requires any additional expense or is not deemed proper. It is to insert the following:

Provided, That the supervising architect of the Treasury building, in accordance with the recommendation in his annual report, with the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby directed to remove the galvanized iron ornaments on the west front, and to complete the building in harmony with the original design.

It cannot be done without the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then the architect should be "authorized," not "directed," to make this change.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir; that would be better, and I will modify the amendment in that way.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think it very likely that that alteration ought to be made at some time, but I doubt very much whether it is advisable to undertake it now, because it cannot be done without considerable expense, and we are appropriating $100,000 for that building for this year to complete it. It can stand well enough for two or three years and be done afterward as well. The history of this matter is a very disagreeable one. A former architect, not the present one, had all the stone cut to make this balustrade conform to the balustrade in front and on the other parts of the building. The material was all prepared, or very nearly prepared, at an expense, I think, of twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars. It would cost now probably not less than $30,000. The late architect, it seems, got an idea, whether it was from some contract that he wanted to make or whether he thought it would make a lighter and prettier appearance, to put up this iron balustrade or these iron leaves; and one day, as I understood it, he had the Secretary of the Treasury out there and suggested some little alteration he wanted to make on the other corner, and explained it so that the Secretary did not understand, as many Secretaries do not such explanations, and the Secretary assented to it verbally. Before anything further was known all this stuff was put there at an expense of ten or twelve thousand dollars, this iron balustrade, and there it is.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is not a balustrade. If it was it would not be so unsightly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What do you call it?

Mr. ANTHONY. They are leaves, an irregular surface making an irregular skylight.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Whatever you please to call it—I am not very well acquainted with the terms properly applicable—it was put around on the top of the building to give it an appearance, and all the stone that was cut out was used for another purpose, put down below there, and you can see it at any time around the building.

Mr. ANTHONY. Can it not be put on there now?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know whether it can or not. It cannot without under this arrangement costing a great deal of money, besides throwing away this iron, which must have cost $15,000. You have no other place to put it. Certainly it would cost $30,000 to do the other thing. Now, although it may be, when we have money, very proper to do it after we get the building finished, in order to complete it, I doubt the wisdom of going to the expense now. It will really occasion an expense, I think, to the Government more than it ought to pay at the present time when that part of the building is doing well enough, although that is unsightly. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be withdrawn at present. The reason probably why it did not pass at the last session was that it was not thought worth while to tear to pieces what was finished, although badly finished, when we are expending so much money in continuing the extension. By and by I think perhaps it ought to be done when we can afford to do it; but at present it would take, besides having time devoted to it that ought to be devoted entirely to the extension, which is very much needed, a very large portion of the appropriation we have here made. I hope, therefore, the Senator will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand that the plan of this building was fixed by act of Congress, and that neither the architect nor the Secretary had a right to change it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Suppose it was; is it worth while for us to expend a large amount of money on its embellishment now?

Mr. ANTHONY. We are spending money on the embellishment of the building continually, and I suppose it is at least fair to presume that the new extension will be embellished in the same hideous manner as the other portions of the building.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not at all, because that architect has gone out; and the Secretary and Assistant Secretary both saw the mistake that was made, and also the present architect.

Mr. ANTHONY. But if this architect is turned out and another one appointed he may have some new monstrosity of his own.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The present architect is a man of taste and ability.

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe he is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And although he wants this done, I think it had better be postponed to some future time.

Mr. ANTHONY. He recommends it in his report.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; but as it answers the purpose we can bear the unsightliness of it a little longer, until we have completed the extension, which is absolutely necessary, and not spend this money upon it at the present time. I trust, therefore, that the amendment will not be adopted. I hope my friend will withdraw it.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is no use to withdraw it. If the Senator from Maine is against it, of course the Senate will vote it down; but we will take a vote upon it.

The amendment was rejected—ayes four, noes not counted.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I offer the following amendment, to come in as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That so much of section twenty-four of an act approved February 24, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1863, as provides that the Secretary of War should appoint a commission in each of the slave States then represented in Congress, charged to award to each loyal person to whom a colored volunteer might owe service a just compensation, not exceeding $300 for such colored volunteer, be suspended until otherwise provided by law, and that the duties and compensation of the commissioners heretofore appointed under said section shall cease from the date of the passage of this resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON obtained the floor.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If my friend from Maryland will allow me, I wish to appeal to my friend from Illinois to withdraw that amendment. This bill has now been under consideration for two days, and as soon as it is disposed of I must ask the Senate to take up the bill to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue; but if these matters of general legislation in regard to other things, and which will excite debate and controversy, are to go on this bill, it is impossible for us to get through. I really hope my friend will withdraw the amendment and offer it as a separate proposition. If he attempts to put it on here, it will make a long debate, and it will be absolutely impossible for us to get through with the necessary business of the session if the debate on this bill is to be protracted. The Senator from Maryland already rises to contest it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As we are voting away so much money in this bill, I thought it would be the very best place to put on a provision which is intended to keep money in the Treasury. If I could only get time to have this proposition considered, I would just as soon consider it here as anywhere else; but if I move to take this up in the morning, my friend from Maine will come in with another appropriation bill, and tell us that we must have that considered, and I shall not be able to get the consideration of this measure. If he will promise me that he will suffer it to be considered in the morning, and will not take up an appropriation bill to get it out of the way, if I can possibly get the floor and get it up, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot say that to the Senator. I will say to him, however, that as soon as the necessary bills of the session are disposed of I will not only withdraw all objection, but will help him to pass the measure; but now it will give rise to so much debate and interfere with so much business that we must do, that I really hope the Senator will withdraw it. It is general legislation on another subject; it has nothing in the world to do with this bill, and it only makes a difficulty.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It has this much to do with it: this is a bill appropriating a great deal of money, and if the proposition which I have submitted passes, it will stay the drain on the Treasury to some extent. However, I will withdraw it; but I wish to give notice that I shall try to get it up to-morrow as a separate measure. It is a House bill and only needs our action here to become a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ROSS. I wish to offer an amendment which will have the effect the Senator from Illinois desires of keeping some money in the Treasury. It is on page 27, section seven, line sixteen, after the word "exceeding" to insert "two dollars per page for the publication of treaties and laws, and not exceeding;" and in line seventeen, after the word "space" to insert "for the publication of advertisements;" so that the clause will read:

The compensation for which, and other terms of publication, shall be fixed by said Clerk at a rate not exceeding two dollars per page for the publication of treaties and laws, and not exceeding one dollar per square of eight lines of space for the publication of advertisements, the accounts for which shall be adjusted, &c.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I now move to add as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted. That the rates fixed in section seven of this act to be paid for the publication of the treaties and laws of the United States in the States designated in said section shall also be paid for the same publications of all laws in all the States not therein designated.

Mr. JOHNSON. How is that?

Mr. ROSS. The effect of the bill as it now stands, without the amendment that has just been made, is to pay to each newspaper selected in the ten States named the sum of about four thousand dollars for the publication of the treaties and laws; but with that amendment it will cost the Government but one fourth of that, or $1,000. In order to make the prices paid by the Government to the papers in the ten States named and the other States uniform, I have offered this last amendment, which increases the price paid by the Government from one dollar to two dollars, the price now fixed being actually less than the proprietors of the newspapers pay for the setting of the type. This increases it so that, on the whole, taking the laws of the last session as the basis for an estimate, these amendments will save to the Government from sixty to seventy thousand dollars for one session of Congress.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did not distinctly hear the Senator from Kansas; but I suppose he stated that this just doubles the expense of publishing the laws and treaties in all the other States. From what I have heard, I do not suppose the pay is anything of any consequence, but the papers in the different States are not only very willing, but there is competition among them for the publication of these laws and treaties, not so much because they are paid for it according to ordinary rates as because the fact of the publication of the laws, &c., in their columns increases their circulation, and is found advantageous in that way. If the Senate choose to double the amount paid in the other States, of course they will adopt the amendment. I believe we now pay a dollar a page.

Mr. ROSS. It is true that this amendment increases the price for this service over the price now paid; but if the Senator's argument is good for anything it would conclude us from paying anything for the publication of these laws in the southern States. As I explained while up before, as this bill stood originally, it paid to papers selected in these ten States from eight to ten dollars a page, while at the same time we are paying in the northern States but one dollar a page. Now, I propose to equalize this, to make it uniform, to pay the papers in the North just what we pay the papers in the South. I think that is fair. As the bill stood originally, it certainly made a very unjust discrimination against papers in the North, the papers to which we owe so much, in my judgment, for the support of the Government in the late war.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to inquire if any arrangement has been made in regard to a recess to-day? ["No."] I move, then, that the Senate at half past four o'clock take a recess—

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the time for a recess will not be fixed now, because I want to get through with this bill if I can before a recess is taken.

Mr. RAMSEY. Very well; I shall not press the motion now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "in the States designated."

Mr. ROSS. I should object to that elimination, as in my judgment it would detract from the sense of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As a part of the same amendment, I will move also to strike out the words "in all the States not therein designated" and insert the word "elsewhere;" so that, if amended, the amendment will read:

That the rates fixed in section seven of this act to be paid for the publication of the treaties and laws of the United States in said section shall also be paid for the same publications elsewhere.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was not agreed to—ayes five, noes not counted.

Mr. WILSON. I offer an amendment, as an additional section, by instruction of the Committee on Military Affairs and also of the Committee on Naval Affairs:

And be it further enacted. That the laws enacted by the Thirty-Ninth Congress relating to the Army, Navy, and the Militia, and the Marine corps of the United States be published officially in the United States Army and Navy Journal at such rates as are fixed by the Secretary of State for the publication of the laws of the United States.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the bill on page 27, section seven, line nine, by inserting after the word "as" the words "are or;" so that it will read:

In which such treaties and laws of the United States as are or may be ordered for publication in newspapers according to law, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question, and declared the amendment agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator if the effect of that will not be to pay a dollar per square for eight lines for all this advertising in all the States?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not at all. It is simply intended to provide that the treaties and laws that are now ordered to be published shall be published, as well as those that may hereafter be ordered to be printed. That is all the effect that it has.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Would it not have the same effect to have them published, whether or no, in these southern States that have not been published there heretofore?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not understand that that will be the effect.

Mr. FESSENDEN. To have published in the southern States all that have not been, as a sort of a job. My friend does not understand it so, but I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not my understanding.

Mr. HENDERSON. It would very likely have that construction.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It might have that construction. I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think it has or could have that construction.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the question will be put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has put the question and declared the vote.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask that the question be put again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will consider the matter as reconsidered, if there be no objection, and put the question again.

The question being again put, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the eleventh line of the same section I move to strike out the word "such" before the word "advertisements," and after the word "advertisements" to strike out the words "as may be;" so that it will read:

And in some one or more of which so selected all advertisements ordered for publication, &c., shall be published.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The same objection exists to that. I hope these amendments will not be made.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following amendment from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to come in as an additional section:

And be it further enacted. That for the extension and completion of the City Hall in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, there be appropriated $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior upon such plan as he may adopt; said work to be advertised by him for at least thirty days before the letting in the principal newspapers of New York city, Boston, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Baltimore, and Washington. And for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for part of the cost of said extension and completion it shall be the duty of the proper authorities of the city of Washington, and they are hereby required to raise, by tax or otherwise, and pay into the Treasury of the United States, at or before the completion of said work, the sum of $40,000. And it shall be the like duty of the proper authorities of the city of Georgetown, and they are hereby required to raise, by tax or otherwise, and pay into the Treasury of the United States, at or before the completion of said work, the sum of $5,000. And it shall be the like duty of the proper authorities of the county of Washington, and they are hereby required to raise, by tax or otherwise, and pay into the Treasury of the United States, at or before the completion of said work, the sum of $5,000; which several sums shall be deemed the fair proportion of the cost of said work of each of said cities and the county of Washington. And said cities and county are hereby authorized and required to assess and levy upon the taxable property of said cities and said county of Washington a tax sufficient to raise the amount so by each city and said county required to be paid as aforesaid.

I will state the facts in this case. This City Hall, according to the original plan, is but half completed. The proposition is now to complete it, not exactly according to the old plan, but finish it according to the plan which I hold in my hand. The Committee on the District of Columbia are moved to recommend this, first upon a petition presented by the judges of the District who represent that the accommodations there are very inadequate, and upon an inspection of the premises the committee came to that conclusion themselves. Their communication is sent to us by the Secretary of the Interior, who recommends it, and that was accompanied by the plan which I hold in my hand.

Mr. FESSENDEN. A very pretty plan.

Mr. MORRILL. It is an excellent plan. This extension is undoubtedly necessary for the accommodation of the courts of this District. It has been said to me, "What have we to do with it? Why do not the people of the District of Columbia do this work for themselves?" That is a very pertinent inquiry; but in all these matters the reply is, that the Congress of the United States has borne pretty much the expense of justice in this District out of the Treasury. This building was erected at the expense of the Government in part, and is maintained at the expense of the Government in part. It is a thing undoubtedly proper in itself to be done. Whether the Committee on Finance think it proper altogether to go upon this particular bill is another question. It is one of the things that we ought to do. That building as it stands is incomplete, and the accommodations there are inadequate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us have a vote upon the proposition. My colleague has made a good argument against it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. After all of the white people and all the Territories and all the court-houses have been taken care of last of all comes the poor Indian.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We took care of him on the Indian bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I offer the following amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make up to the Chippewa Indians of the Mississippi river and Lake Superior the difference in the value of coin and currency in 1863 and 1864, in which latter funds the annuities of said Indians were paid to them instead of coin, as per treaty stipulations, $32,812.50.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That same matter was before the Committee on Finance, and carefully examined and deliberately rejected. There is no more reason why we should pay them that than there is that we should make a similar payment to every other creditor of the United States.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I shall make no speech on this subject. I will simply say that in my opinion when we make a treaty with the Indian tribes to pay them in coin we are as much bound to pay them in coin as we would be to pay the Government of Great Britain or France, if we had such a treaty stipulation with them.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, and the Chair will take the question on the amendments collectively unless some Senator asks for a separate vote on a particular amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment, on page 12, respecting the custom-house at Newport, Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be excepted.

Mr. HOWE. I ask for a separate vote on the adoption of the eighth section in regard to paying rebel officers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be excepted. If no other amendments be excepted, the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the one named by the Senator from Vermont and the one named by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendments were concurred in.

The first excepted amendment was on page 12, after line two hundred and fifty-nine to strike out the following clause:

For a custom-house in Newport, Vermont, $10,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Since the debate took place yesterday I have been informed, as a matter of fact, from the chairman of the House committee, and I hold in my hand a letter from the Commissioner of Customs stating the same thing, that this item was recommended from the Treasury Department. The chairman has lost the original letter; but I stated the circumstances to the honorable Senator from Ohio who had charge of the bill, and he was satisfied, and I trust the committee will be, and allow it to stand.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no objection if it is recommended. It was stricken out simply because we could not find any recommendation for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This appropriation being stricken out in Committee of the Whole, the question now is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, to strike out the appropriation.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was to insert as section eight the following:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to such persons as were actually employed as assistant assessors in the collection of internal revenue in the rebel States prior to the 1st day of August, 1866, compensation at the rate prescribed by law, and an amount sufficient for that purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOWE. Now, Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate longer than to remind them of the effect of adopting this section. It is nothing less than to sanction the employment of officers in direct contravention of a positive statute still remaining on the books. It was said that there was a necessity for their employment. If there ever was any such necessity that necessity still exists, and your statute should be repealed if it stands in the way of the collection of the revenue. The proof of that necessity is utterly wanting; at least I have not seen it. I no more believe in the existence of that necessity than I believe in the most improbable statement that could be devised. But one of two things we should do, repeal that law or stand upon it.

It is said that the Secretary of the Treasury had to conform his action to an exigency, and that he employed these men in the supposition that Congress would approve the measure. Why, sir, those officers were continued in the employ of the Treasury Department during the whole of the last session of Congress, notwithstanding he had notice from time to time that Congress did not acquiesce in it. It was not a formal vote of the two Houses; but he heard those protests going out repeatedly from individual members in and out of these Halls; but still those persons were continued in the employ of the Treasury Department up to the close of the last session of Congress; and now almost at the close of this session of Congress we have no notice that they are not all in the employ of the Treasury Department to-day.

In view of this state of facts I have felt called upon to ask another vote on this proposition. Mr. President, I do think it a sad thing when a minister of state directly defies a law of the land; but I do not think that so sad a thing as when the makers of the law themselves acquiesce in and sanction that defiance. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of this section.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. I am glad that the Senator from Wisconsin has given the Senate another opportunity of recovering what seems to me to be the true position on a very important question. Of all the questions that have arisen on this bill this is by far the most important, dwarfing absolutely everything else. If this proposition prevails it is a premium offered by the Congress of the United States to an open violation of law; it is a premium offered to rebellion; it is a discouragement to loyal men, to whom you ought to extend a helping hand. I cannot express my feelings with sufficient strength when I think of the evil consequences of this proposition. Perhaps no one thing in the recent history of our country has been more productive of bad results than this act of the Secretary of the Treasury which you now propose, if I may so say, to sanction. Out of that act of disobedience sprang that malignant policy which has already cost this Government millions of money and postponed the day of peace and tranquillity. I entreat Senators to take the first opportunity and to take every opportunity to set themselves against that unhappy policy.

Mr. CRAGIN. If the Senator from Massachusetts will give way, I will make a motion that the Senate take a recess at five o'clock until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us finish this bill first. We shall dispose of it in a short time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It does not look like it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I must take up another bill in the evening.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We cannot stay here all the time. We must take a recess.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We can stay a little while longer, I suppose. I hope Senators are not going to argue this whole matter over again after it has been argued for two days.

Mr. SUMNER. I am not going to argue it, but I deem it my duty not to allow this vote to be taken without again making my protest against it. Let it go for what it is worth. I know the Senator from Maine will value it very little. I do not expect to please him by it. I discharge a conscientious duty to my country.

Mr. FESSENDEN. None of the rest of us, I suppose, have any conscience in regard to our duty.

Mr. SUMNER. I recognize the conscience of the Senator. I make no question with regard to the conscience of any Senator on this floor. Each one judges for himself. I remember when, more than a year ago, I felt it my duty first to arraign the Secretary of the Treasury for this open violation of law, I was then encountered by the Senator from Maine, who vindicated the Secretary of the Treasury and held him up almost to approbation. The Senator from Maine started—

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Maine will inform his friend that he can vindicate himself.

Mr. SUMNER. Why, of course he can. The Senator from Maine always vindicates himself. I only covet some of his ability in developing what I think the better cause. I wish that I could have in favor of what I think the true policy on this occasion the great powers that the Senator from Maine can so easily display. I know he can vindicate his side. I am only sorry that his side is not that which it seems to me at this moment the Senate ought to adopt. If we had his powerful support the Senate would not commit itself to a proposition which to my mind can have but disastrous influences.

I do not wish to be a prophet; I am not; but I see full well that this proposition, should it be adopted, will carry into the rebel States a distrust of your legislation. It will say to them, "We put laws on our statute-book against rebels, but we will not enforce them; we will allow a Secretary of the Treasury or other Cabinet officer deliberately to set them at defiance, and then we will give him a letter of license." Sir, I deplore that any Senator can consent to such a course. I wish that now by your votes you would discard this proposition so that it may not pass into our statutes and become a source of evil.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not hope, sir, to see the time when we shall escape these lectures, particularly those of us who assume only to perform a simple duty here. It would have been ungracious enough in the honorable Senator who has just spoken if he had left out one part of his speech; but that seemed the unkindest cut of all. As a soothing application to the honorable Senator from Maine, which he presumed that Senator required, we are told that if he, the Senator from Maine, should join the Senator from Massachusetts, then all would be well. Now, Mr. President, I have great respect for the capacity and ability of the Senator from Maine; I have great faith in his power; but just for the sake of the experiment, I should like to see the two Senators some time undertake to impose just what is their judgment upon the Senate on a proposition that the Senate have so clearly understood, and so decidedly expressed their opinion upon as the one that is now pending. I incline to think, if I should be pardoned the words, that whoever shall undertake it will have less of a certain quality after the experiment shall have been made.

Mr. President, this thing of advertising to the country, (as I have before undertaken to say here,) that there are but a few in this Chamber, perhaps but a single one, who can perform a duty, and perform that duty fearlessly, is a very ungracious presentation of a case. Sir, the highest test of courage is not in the Senate Chamber. I hope that we shall be allowed hereafter to express our opinions and to vote upon public questions here, and that Senators will feel that they have performed their full duty when they shall have spoken and given their opinions for what they are worth, and that they shall not be subjected or subject others to these continuous strictures.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to ask my friend if he includes me in any part of his lecture?

Mr. CONNESS. No, Mr. President; I do not understand that the Senator is otherwise responsible than that he has been sought to be drawn into it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the lecturing is over I hope we may be permitted to vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question as soon as the debate ceases. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Patterson, Ramsey, Ross, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stewart, Willey, and Williams—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Creswell, Edmunds, Fowler, Howe,

Kirkwood, Nye, Pomeroy, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Cowan, Grimes, Guthrie, Howard, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Poland, Riddle, Sherman, and Van Winkle—13.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is a little amendment of phraseology necessary that escaped. It is on page 19, lines four hundred and forty-five, four hundred and forty-six, and four hundred and forty-seven. It now reads:

To enable the register of deeds of the District of Columbia to pay for books of record furnished, and fitting necessary shelving in his office, $600.

I think that should be changed. I move to strike out the words "register of deeds of the District of Columbia," and to insert "Secretary of the Interior;" in line four hundred and forty-six I move to insert the word "heretofore" before the word "furnished," and after the same word to insert "in the office of the register of deeds in the District of Columbia;" and in line four hundred and forty-seven I move to strike out the word "his" and to insert the word "said;" so that the clause will read:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay for books of record heretofore furnished in the office of the register of deeds in the District of Columbia, and fitting necessary shelving in said office, $600.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is it a deficiency? The word "heretofore" confines it to something already done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand that this has already been done, and this is an appropriation to pay for it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I wish now to renew the amendment that I offered in Committee of the Whole. As I now offer it, it is to come in as a proviso at the end of the seventh section:

Provided, That the rates fixed in this section to be paid for the publication of the treaties and laws of the United States in the States therein designated shall also be paid for the same publications in all the States not therein designated.

The purpose of this amendment is simply to equalize the payment for this class of service by the newspaper press of the country, and I hope the Senate will not permit the bill to go out with the unfair distinction which it now contains between the northern and southern press. I simply ask that the northern press may be paid the same amount that this section provides shall be paid to the papers in the ten States enumerated in it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGIN. I wish to suggest an amendment to the one that was adopted last evening to the second section relating to the Commissioner of Public Buildings. I suppose it is not strictly in order; but I wish to suggest that instead of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the Clerk of the House be authorized to appoint the police officers of the Capitol.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That section has been already adopted in the Senate, and it cannot be amended.

Mr. CRAGIN. I am aware that it cannot be amended except by general consent. It will be perfectly apparent to every Senator that nearly one half the time the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House are absent, and no one will have any charge and direction of the police during the vacation. It is necessary that this change should be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on ordering the amendments to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the second section was adopted, so as to get at the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope it will not be reconsidered. The matter has been well considered in the Senate. It is only taking the power of appointment from the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House and putting it into the hands of the Sergeant-at-Arms. If it is necessary that the Sergeant-at-Arms should control the men, that can be done by an order of the Senate at any time, if they think it best that he should have the control of them after they are appointed; but this is only a question as to the appointment, and the appointment is well enough vested in the Presiding Officers of the two Houses. It is a question of considerable patronage, and there is no sort of objection to its being done in that way.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know nothing about it. The Senator says it was considered. It was not considered at all in the Senate. I was here, and I did not hear the matter suggested at all.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That particular matter was.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It was done on motion in the Senate, and was not considered at all.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There was a long debate about it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Not one word of debate. The Senator from Ohio proposed that the Presiding Officers of the two Houses should appoint the Capitol police, and everybody agreed to it. Now, the suggestion is this: I do not know whether there is force in it; I have heard it, and it struck me there was force in it—the Presiding Officers of the two Houses are not here except during the session; during the recess of Congress they are not here at all; these police officers ought to be responsible to somebody; the Clerk of the House has charge of the House wing, and he ought certainly to have some control over the police about the House of Representatives; our Sergeant-at-Arms has the control of this wing of the building, and they are the proper persons to select these officers, as it struck me. That matter was not considered in the Senate at all, and the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire was that by unanimous consent the change be made. That was objected to, and I made the motion to reconsider in order that the Senate might reconsider it. It seemed to me that there was force in the suggestion that these persons who have charge of the building during the recess should be responsible to the officers who have the charge of the building, who I understand are the Clerk of the House and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The President of the Senate has charge of the Senate portion of the building, and always has had, and the Speaker of the House of the other wing. That is the rule with regard to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the law now. They have the charge of the building, and this section simply places in the power of these two officers the appointment of the custodians of the property. The amendment was moved by me upon the suggestion of the present Commissioner of Public Buildings, who saw he was about to be disposed of, and said that while he had that patronage it gave him a great deal of trouble, and yet it was really invested in the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, who by law had the custody of the whole, and he was bound by law to obey their orders, and he thought it was better to give them the appointment directly of the custodians of this building, the police. That is all there is of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the motion to reconsider?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall not press the motion to reconsider if the suggestion does not strike the Senate as it struck me. My object was to get at it. I supposed from what I had heard stated in regard to it that there was a manifest propriety in the control of the building being under somebody who is here. I was not aware that the law provided that the Presiding Officers had control of the building. I supposed this building was under the control of the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Presiding Officer no doubt can state the law. I have seen the law, though, making those two officers responsible for the building; but I am not sufficiently familiar with its details to state it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not wish to take up any time with it. I supposed it would meet with general concurrence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Illinois to withdraw his motion?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

ALLOTMENT OF JUDGES.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 534) to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment, but was interrupted by Mr. TRUMBULL. I think the Senate will understand what that amendment is by a single word. The Senate passed a bill authorizing the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States to allot themselves among the circuits, and a section of the bill also authorizes them to appoint a marshal for the Supreme Court of the United States. The House of Representatives have returned the bill with an amendment, authorizing the supreme court of the District of Columbia to appoint a marshal for the District of Columbia. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue. I merely wish to get it up. We must go on with it at once this evening if we expect to pass it.

Mr. HOWE. I told the Senate yesterday that I should ask them this evening to give me about an hour to dispose of some bills reported from the Committee on Claims. We are almost at the end of the session, but I do not think it will take over an hour to consider them. The bill which the Senator from Maine has in charge of course will be passed any way.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know about that. That is the very reason why I want to take it up at once.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Committee on Claims ought to have some time.

Mr. HOWE. We have not occupied the time of the Senate but very little during the session.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They can be passed after we pass this bill. They are bills, I suppose, from the House, to which there will be no objection. I must get this bill forward, because we must have probably a committee of conference on it, and I cannot possibly yield under such circumstances. If the Senate intend to pass it at all they must proceed with it at once. These matters of private claims are certainly not of that public importance which this is.

Mr. HOWE. They are not of that public importance, but they touch individuals very closely.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This bill touches the whole community.

Mr. HOWE. None of my cousins are provided for in any of these bills, but other members are interested in them, and I leave it to the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us have a recess.

Mr. FESSENDEN. After this bill is taken up we can take a recess.

The motion of Mr. FESSENDEN was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I now move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Half past seven. It is a quarter after five now. I move to substitute half past seven o'clock.

Mr. WILSON. Well, I will say half past seven.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. No. 490) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Idaho," approved March 3, 1863.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 501) amendatory of an act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Montana, approved May 26, 1864, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 950) to amend the organic acts of Arizona and New Mexico;

A bill (H. R. No. 1068) to regulate and fix the salary of the consul at Hamburg;

A bill (H. R. No. 1121) amendatory of the organic act of Colorado Territory;

A bill (H. R. No. 1230) for the relief of the widow of Andrew Cunningham; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 300) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue of the third collection district of California.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 222) prohibiting payments by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to take up House joint resolution No. 174. It is a little resolution which will not occupy more than five minutes, I think.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that I have been appealed to by friends on this side of the House to give way to allow them to call up various measures, and I have told them uniformly that I could not do it; and they said they would be satisfied unless I gave way to somebody else. I must, therefore, insist upon going on with the regular order of business.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall not interpose against the wish of the honorable Senator.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would yield with pleasure, but I am notified that if I yield to one I must to others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDWARDS in the chair.) The bill regularly before the Senate is the bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue. This bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and it will be read at length. To facilitate business, unless objection be made, the amendments recommended by the Committee on Finance will be considered as they are reached in their order as the reading of the bill proceeds. The Chair hears no objection, and that course will be taken.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was in section nine before the word "amended" in line five to insert "subsequently," and after "amended" to strike out "by the act approved July 13, 1866;" so as to read:

That the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, as subsequently amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line twenty-nine of section nine to insert:

That section forty be amended by striking out the following words: "that in case a collector shall die, resign, or be removed," and inserting in lieu the following: "that in case of a vacancy occurring in the office of collector by reason of death or any other cause."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "fine" in line forty-three of section nine to insert "or penalty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines forty-eight to sixty-four of section nine in these words:

That if any collector, assistant collector, assessor, assistant assessor, inspector, district attorney, marshal, or other officer, agent, or person charged with the execution or supervision of the execution of any of the provisions of this act, or of the act to which this is amendatory, shall demand, or accept, or attempt to collect, directly or indirectly, as payment or gift or otherwise, any sum of money or other property of value for the compromise, adjustment, or settlement of any charge or complaint for any violation or alleged violation of any of the provisions of this act, except as expressly authorized by law so to do, he shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for every such offense be liable to indictment and trial in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in double the sum or value of the money or property received or demanded, and be imprisoned in a penitentiary for a period of not less than one year nor more than ten years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section nine, line seventy-two, to strike out "and" and insert "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines eighty to eighty-six of section nine in these words:

Also in the second proviso, after the words "that manufactured tobacco" insert "or," and after the word "snuff," immediately following, strike out the words "or cigars, whether of domestic manufacture or imported." Also in the latter part of said proviso, after the word "tobacco" wherever it occurs, insert the word "or," and strike out the words "or cigars" wherever they occur.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines eighty-eight, eighty-nine, and ninety of section nine in these words:

By striking out the paragraph commencing "on oil, naphtha, benzine, benzole" down to the words "ten cents per gallon," inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line ninety-one of section nine to strike out "also" and insert "by striking out."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line ninety-seven of section nine to strike out "two" and insert "one and one half;" so as to read:

On refined sugars, and on the products of sugar refineries, not including syrup or molasses, a tax of one and one half per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out in line one hundred and one and in line one hundred and six of section nine the words "upon which a tax or duty has been paid."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines one hundred and fourteen, one hundred and fifteen, one hundred and sixteen, and one hundred and seventeen of section nine in these words:

Also, in the paragraph relating to "copper and brass tubes" by striking out the words "five per cent. ad valorem" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one fourth of one cent per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line one hundred and forty of section nine:

On manufactures exclusively of glass, three per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines one hundred and forty-six and one hundred and forty-seven of section nine in these words:

On saddles, bridges, and harness, two per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line one hundred and forty-seven of section nine:

That section ninety-four be amended by adding to the end of said section the following words: "but no tax shall be imposed upon the dyeing or redyeing or reprinting of cloths or other articles, except the process of their manufacture."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "dyeing or" before "redyeing" and then to strike out "except the process of their manufacture;" so as to read:

No tax shall be imposed upon the redyeing or reprinting of cloths or other articles.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted, and the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and fifty-nine of section nine to strike out "words 'ferry' where they occur twice" and insert "word 'three' where it occurs," and after "proviso" to insert "and inserting the words 'two and a half;'" so as to make the clause read:

That section one hundred and three be amended by striking out the word three where it occurs in the second proviso, and inserting the words two and a half, and by striking out the words until the 30th day of April, 1867.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and seventy-three of section nine to strike out after "affidavits" the words "and receipts for the payment of money;" so as to make the proviso read:

And provided further, That all affidavits shall be exempt from stamp duty.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance whether this operates to repeal the law which requires a stamp upon writs issuing from the State courts?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Affidavits and writs.

Mr. HENDRICKS. And all proceedings in the State courts?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of section nine:

The reduction of taxes provided in this section shall take effect on and after March 1, 1867.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section ten of the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to insert after the word "spirits" in line nine of section ten the words "mineral oil."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to add to section ten:

That section forty-three [of the act of July 13, 1866] be amended by striking out the last two sentences.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section eleven, containing the free list.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert after line nine of section eleven:

Bar, rod, hoop, band, sheet, and plate iron of all descriptions, and iron prepared for the manufacture of steel: Provided, That the exemption aforesaid shall be confined exclusively to said articles in the state and condition specified in the foregoing enumeration, and shall not be construed as exempting spikes, nails, or any other manufactures of iron from the taxes now imposed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "meats" in line eighteen of section eleven to strike out "not including" and insert "and;" so as to make the clause read:

Canned and preserved meats and shell-fish.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line thirty of section eleven to strike out the word "on."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out after "apple-paring machines" in line forty-five of section eleven the following words:

Grinders of coffee with hand-mills only, by retail dealers for their own use, and for retailing where the amount so ground does not exceed the value of $500 in any one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line fifty-three of section nine to strike out "iron" after

"wood" and insert "or;" so as to read: "drain, gas, and water-pipe made of wood or cement;" and after "cement" to strike out "sheet lead, lead pipe, and shot."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines fifty-nine and sixty of section eleven in these words:

Horse-rakes, horse-powers, tedders, hames, scythesnaths, hay-forks, hoes, and portable grinding mills.

Mr. HOWARD. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance why he proposes to strike these articles out of the free list? These are articles in very common use, and ought to be furnished as cheaply as possible to those who use them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The reason of it was that if we put these in the free list we found that we should have to exempt everything that is an agricultural implement; and axes and scythes are in just as common use as these articles. It is found by experience that putting such things on the free list does not lessen the price. We had a debate here on the last bill over mowing-machines, which were then put on the free list, and people now say that they do not pay a less price for them in consequence of it. It is only so much more in the pockets of the manufacturer. We had letters complaining of this discrimination, and so we proposed to strike out the difficulties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line sixty-two of section eleven "legs of pianofortes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines sixty-four and sixty-five of section eleven in these words:

Leather of all descriptions, and goat, deer, calf, kid, sheep, horse, hog, and dog skins, tanned or partially tanned, curried, finished, or in the rough.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to ask why that amendment is made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The committee were satisfied that we could not afford to part with a revenue of between five and six million dollars on these articles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section eleven, line seventy-two, to strike out "fifty-nine" and insert "seventy;" so as to make the clause read:

Oil, naphtha, benzine, benzole, or gasoline, marking more than seventy degrees Baumé's hydrometer, the product of the distillation or redistillation or refining of crude petroleum, or of crude oil produced by a single distillation of coal, shale, peat, asphaltum, or other bituminous substances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "substances" in line seventy-five of section eleven to strike out the following clause:

But if any person shall mix for sale naphtha and illuminating oils, or shall knowingly sell or keep for sale or offer for sale such mixture, or shall sell or offer for sale oil made from petroleum for illuminating purposes, inflammable at less temperature or fire test than one hundred and ten degrees Fahrenheit, such person shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof by indictment or presentment in any court of the United States, having competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, and by imprisonment for a term of not less than six months nor more than three years.

Mr. HOWARD. I should like to have some explanation of this amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The provision is put in a wrong place here. The penalty is transferred to another part of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out line ninety of section eleven in these words:

Potato-hooks, manure, and spading forks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and two of section eleven to strike out "costing" and insert "sold for;" so as to read:

Soap, common brown, in bars, sold for less than seven cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and twelve of section eleven to strike out "buck-saws, stump-machines, potato-diggers."

Mr. TRUMBULL. I see that the committee have recommended the striking out of all agricultural implements nearly from the free list. I think we may as well make the question and see whether it is the intention of the Senate to disagree with the House of Representatives in regard to agricultural implements. I supposed the object of this bill was to reduce the revenue and relieve the people to some extent by reducing the amount of revenue collected. That, at least, I understood was one object. Now, it seems the Senate Committee on Finance are taking a different view, and are striking out articles which the other House has agreed to put on the free list. I have not been able to look through this bill, have not read it through; but I see on these pages covering the free list agricultural implements to a great extent, which were put on by the House of Representatives, are stricken out.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The present law exempts plows, cultivators, harrows, straw and hay cutters, planters, seed-drills, horse-rakes, hand-rakes, cotton-gins, grain-cradles, winnowing-mills, reapers, mowers, threshing-machines and separators, corn-shellers, and wooden ware, cotton and hay presses, and fertilizers of all kinds. We cannot go any further without introducing all agricultural implements, on some of which there is considerable revenue. We thought that we ought not to carry the exemption any further. We struck out these articles in committee on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] who is considered the representative of the agricultural interest as much as anybody.

Mr. HOWARD. I am in favor of taking off the internal tax entirely from agricultural implements. I do not know, to be sure, what amount of revenue is derived from that source; but as there seems to be a general tendency of public feeling to reduce the internal revenue in some degree, I know of no articles on which that reduction can be applied more beneficially.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is plausible; but taking off the tax does not affect the price, as we are informed. The assessors in the State of Ohio have represented to us that it does not affect the price at all; it is only putting so much money in the pockets of the manufacturers, and they hope the exemption will not be carried any further. This question does to make a little capital upon. This exemption was not reported by the House committee, but was put in there by gentlemen who wanted to manufacture a little personal capital, and these exemptions really lead to confusion and difficulty.

Mr. HOWARD. I have to say that I am not influenced by any such motive.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not impute it to the Senator; but I say the exemptions were put on in the other House in that way.

Mr. HOWARD. I was going to say that I fear the committee have been misled by somebody as to the non-increase of the price of these articles in consequence of the tax. It is a very curious state of things indeed, if the manufacturer does not increase the price of his article at least, in proportion to the amount of tax imposed on him. I think he will find that to be a practice so general that it may be fairly called universal. It arises from the interest of the manufacturer, and he cannot well conduct his business without increasing his price.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This is not putting on taxes, but simply leaving them as they are now.

Mr. HOWARD. I am replying to the remark of the Senator that a small tax imposed upon agricultural implements does not increase the price of the implements.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I only say that the assessors of the West tell us that putting these other things on the free list has not diminished the price a particle, but has only put so much more into the pockets of the manufacturers.

Mr. HOWARD. Then that is one reason why the tax should be taken entirely off all classes of these articles, and I am in favor of it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is only for the benefit of the manufacturer instead of the agriculturist. That is the effect of it.

Mr. HOWARD. Not at all.

Mr. TRUMBULL. These articles which were put upon the free list by the House of Representatives are those entering into general consumption. They are used everywhere. Pitchforks, spading-forks, buck-saws, shovels, and articles of that kind are used in all parts of the country. The reason given by the Senator from Maine for taxing these articles is that the tax makes no difference in the price. Can that be possible?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I only say that it is so represented by western people.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is not so represented by my constituents.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, it is.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have had no such representation from any of them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have had such representations from the very city of Chicago.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There may be an individual who has so informed the Senator; but the information I have is right the reverse. I have letters from Illinois asking that these articles which are used by the agriculturists of the State be put upon the free list.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose those letters come from manufacturers.

Mr. TRUMBULL. From different parties.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Do they not come from the manufacturers?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have had letters from manufacturers asking to have these articles put upon the free list. The reason given by the Senator from Maine has with me no sort of force when he says the House committee did not put them on the free list, but the House did it. I rather rely upon the action of the House than of one of its committees. Then there is another reason. I want to say to the people of the country that they are to be relieved to some extent of their burdens. We imposed most exorbitant taxes in order to raise money to carry on the war. The war is over, and we are raising money by the million more than there is any necessity for.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We shall not this year. The Senator need not be alarmed about it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There is complaint on this subject among my constituents. They complain that times are hard, that the taxes are high. We have more than one hundred and forty millions of money in the Treasury, and the Senator tells us we shall not raise more than is necessary this year. How does he know?

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is my reasoning.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is the Senator's reasoning, and he is holding now in the Treasury $140,000,000, and no provision is being made to get it out; and now, when we have a revenue bill in which the House of Representatives has put on the free list these agricultural implements, implements that are used all over the country, we are told that the tax on them does not increase the price, somebody has so informed the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to know of the Senator whether these articles are of more common use than the shirt every man wears. We keep the tax on shirts. Why not strike it off everything of that kind. Is there anything in more common use?

Mr. TRUMBULL. We must begin to reduce somewhere. We must have some revenue; but because we must have some revenue are we to tax everything? When the desire of the whole country is to have the burdens of taxation reduced, I do hope that the Senate will not agree to tax these articles. It is as well to begin upon these as upon any others. There is nothing sectional in it. The Senator's constituents use as many hoes, axes, and shovels as mine. It will benefit all portions of the country; and when we want to reduce taxes and relieve the burdens that are on the people why should we not relieve them by putting on the free list those articles which are used by the masses of the people in all portions of the country? Sir, I cannot give my assent to the proposition of the Senator from Maine, that taxing an article does not increase its price. I do not believe in that doctrine.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did not lay down that doctrine. I said that the experiment we had tried of taking taxes off agricultural implements had resulted in not reducing their price, and in only putting money into the pockets of the manufacturers, so far as we have information on the subject, and it is very general and very extensive. I supposed that would be the case at the time the great effort was made here, and we had so much talk about reapers and mowing-machines and everything of that description. I think that we have gone far enough in this direction. Now, is the Senator willing to lose all the taxes that we get from these large manufactures, of axes for example? It is not proposed to put axes on the free list; it is not proposed to put shovels on. We cannot afford to lose the revenue from them; but there is just as much reason for exempting the ax and the shovel and the scythe as there is the articles mentioned here, and yet they are a large manufacture, and the House of Representatives has not proposed to take off the tax, although the reasoning applies precisely as well to them.

I do not care anything about this little amendment. I am only speaking of the principle. I know it is considered popular to take off taxes on agricultural implements, and it is a very pretty thing to make a speech about, and to talk about everybody using them; but after all the question is whether it is advisable.

Mr. POMEROY. I was surprised that the committee of the Senate should have taken agricultural implements out of this section, when the House had put them on the free list.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Allow me to suggest that we have done one thing that is much more beneficial and more operative than taking off the tax on these implements. We have taken off all from ordinary bar and hoop iron, of which these articles are made. We have already put in an amendment to that effect. Now to take the tax off the material of which they are made, and then off the thing themselves, is more than can be afforded.

Mr. POMEROY. I was equally surprised that the House did not put the ax and the scythe and the shovel on the free list, the most common implements used by the poorest classes, and the rudest form in which an agricultural implement can be made. I find that even the House propose to continue the tax upon them. If we are to take the tax off any of our agricultural implements, we should begin with the simplest, the rudest. As to those that are complicated, and require a great deal of labor, there may be reason why they should bear some tax. My opinion differs entirely from that of the Senator from Maine in regard to the effect on the price of these articles of putting them on the free list. I know that manufacturers who had a stock lying over from the year previous marked down their implements the whole amount of the internal revenue tax taken off, and sold them for that much less. In the western States mowers especially have been lower than we have ever had them—a great article among all our farmers. There is hardly any farmer in the West so poor that he does not have a mower on the prairie and a reaper.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are exempt by the existing law. The thing is carried as far as it can be, especially when we take the tax off the iron from which these things are made.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not see why we cannot go at least as far as the House went. Even if we keep the ax and shovel and these other implements on the lists that pay taxes, I should be in favor of sustaining the House on this question.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator from Maine

remarks that the subject of agricultural implements is a very pretty subject on which to make a speech. I do not accept this sneer as a reply to the objection that I made to the exclusion of these articles from the free list; nor do I think it becomes that Senator to use that kind of argument in this body, considering the section from which he comes. He tells us that the price of these articles is not enhanced by the tax, and the exemption of them is only putting money into the hands of the manufacturer. Where is the manufacturer, and where is the mass of the purchasers of these articles and of those who use them? The manufacturer lives at the East, in the New England States and in New York and New Jersey chiefly. Almost all those articles are manufactured at the East. They are sold and used chiefly in the West. This description of commerce has become immense between the East and the West; and the eastern manufacturers supply our farmers a vast amount of agricultural implements for which they get their pay. It is the consumer here who pays the tax; it is the western farmer who uses the hoe, the ax, the reaping-machine, the hay-rake, &c., that finally pays these taxes for the benefit of the eastern manufacturer, whom the Senator, so far as his section is concerned, represents here.

Now, I submit to him with great respect that this kind of sneer is not to be accepted here as an argument. I wish the Senate to take this matter into consideration. We must begin somewhere to relieve the people from the weight of taxation under which they now labor. Why may we not as well begin in reference to these small articles of every day use which are indispensable in the primary affairs of life as to begin at any other point? I submit that it is the best point at which we can begin the work of reduction, the most convenient, the most palpable, and the most acceptable to the great mass of the laboring men in the country.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and thirteen to strike out "buck" and insert "muck."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDMUNDS.) This verbal correction will be made, no objection being interposed.

Mr. CRESWELL. I desire to call attention to an amendment on the 16th page; I was not present when it was acted on. It was in the fifty-fourth line of section eleven, striking out the words "sheet lead, lead pipe, and shot." Why did the Finance Committee propose to strike out those words?

Mr. FESSENDEN. We did not see any good reason for keeping them in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Maryland that it is not in order at this time to go back to that amendment.

Mr. CRESWELL. I will raise the objection when the bill shall be reported to the Senate.

The Secretary read the next amendment, which was to strike out lines one hundred and fifteen and one hundred and sixteen of section eleven, in these words:

Steam locomotives and marine engines, including boilers, and log, siding, and shingle machines.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope we shall not agree to this amendment.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I join in that hope.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the clause will be stricken out. The committee could not see any reason for inserting these articles in the free list. They are mostly used by corporations who can afford to pay for them. It cannot be said that this exemption is for the benefit of the poor.

Mr. HOWARD. It is true, they are mostly used by corporations, but they are the most useful description of corporations in the country; they are the steamboat corporations, the railroad corporations, corporations that do the carrying to market and from market of all the articles of trade and commerce of the country. This kind of business is very important. If a company is obliged to pay a very heavy price for the engine that drags its train or moves its steamboat, it increases the price of its freight in proportion, and that increase of the price of freight is so much increase of the price of the article itself when it falls into the hands of the consumer. Everybody knows this.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think the small tax paid on the manufacture of the machine itself, when we come to divide it around in its application to freight, will make a great deal on a bushel of corn. It requires a good deal of very nice mathematical calculation to make the tax on the freight of a bushel of corn appreciable. There is considerable of a revenue raised from the manufacture of steam-engines, and the committee could see no reason why they should be exempted any more than many other things that are taxed. Manufacturing corporations of different descriptions that manufacture the necessities of life have to pay a tax on their products, although they are used by everybody much more generally than these; and why should we legislate simply to relieve the railroad corporations and steamboat corporations?

Mr. SPRAGUE. The House of Representatives, it seems to me, decided this question properly when they decided to relieve this branch of the industry of the country. The section I represent has probably built all the railroads it will build, but we desire to open up the western country, and a tax of five per cent. on a locomotive is a very large tax, a thousand dollars nearly for every locomotive. Those who desire to develop the country, to build railroads, to open up the country should look to it that this great industry is not embarrassed by excessive taxation. You have relieved your railroad iron so far as you can of a considerable tax, and for the same reason you should relieve the engines that run upon the track.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have taken the tax off the raw material, the iron of which these articles are made, and placed it on the free list, which was not done by the House. I suppose Senators would not agree to that because the House did not do it. I do not know but that the House is very wise; it probably is; but it seems that in regard to every question the argument is "the House has done it." If that argument be good, there is no reason in referring a House bill to a committee of this body to act on it; all we have to do is to register the decrees of the House. I will say to the Senate that we have taken the tax off bar iron, the iron in the first shape in which it is sold, and castings. That begins at the beginning, at the foundation. Now, to relieve the manufactured article in addition is doing too much for these particular articles I think, when we leave the tax on others that are used much more extensively.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not know any branch of mechanical production that requires relief more than that comprehended in this paragraph. There is certainly more in this bill that relates to the country that I represent, which requires and demands relief more than this. We cannot take a step in our industries without the use of steam-engines. It costs us more to build railroads by at least from fifty to one hundred per cent. than it does any other people in the Union. We cannot begin to develop a mine; we cannot sink a shaft; we cannot extract the ore from the mine; we cannot take the water out of a mine; we cannot crush the ore; we can do nothing in our industries that is not subject to this tax; and I confess my disappointment at its being proposed by the Finance Committee of the Senate to tax this product. I think it should be left where the House of Representatives placed it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask the Senator if he thinks the other should be left, if we should keep the tax on iron, should not take it off?

Mr. CONNESS. If I had my choice I would sooner tax the iron—and I think the people I represent would agree with me—than to tax this. I do not understand the justice or the policy of relieving the iron, the raw material, from tax, and taxing these manufactured articles. And, sir, while I am up on this subject, I will say that I shall feel prepared to vote for a very considerable reduction of internal taxes, even at the risk of having less than eighty millions in excess of the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury for a year's revenue. We have, as I believe, nearly taxed many of the industries of the country to death; and it is time that we stopped. If we do not stop, they will stop. But, sir, I do not wish to occupy time. I know how valuable it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know anything that can bear taxation better than steam locomotives and marine engines. It is a tax probably as easily collected as any in the whole list of internal taxation. They are articles of manifest inspection, the value of which is fixed, made in a few shops in the United States where the tax can be readily assessed. We have removed all forms of taxation on the crude iron which is made in a great number of shops, produced in a great variety of forms. When it assumes the form of a locomotive or a marine engine it is an article of value and of use, the highest form of iron manufacture; and therefore it seems to me that when we are selecting objects to be relieved from taxation this is among the last to be selected. It is not because locomotives are not valuable, for they are of immense value; and so of marine engines, but because they are articles which can be most readily taxed, which can bear taxation. A tax on such articles is paid mainly by corporations; and therefore it is the cheapest form of taxation. When you come to small articles like buckets and common domestic ware, that are made all over the country, I think it is very proper to relieve them from taxation; but these heavy articles which can be easily reached, the tax on which can be easily levied, it seems to me ought to be the last to be relieved.

It is manifest that we cannot now extend the relief that we hoped for six months ago. Our internal taxation receipts are falling off rapidly; and unless Senators will remember when they are appropriating money that taxes are necessary to meet the appropriations, they will find that it will be necessary to keep up a very formidable tax list. We cannot expect to raise revenue enough from imported goods to pay the interest on the public debt; so that we have to depend on our internal revenue to pay our expenses and to meet the enormous appropriations made by the present Congress.

Mr. HOWARD. Do I understand the Senator from Ohio to say that our internal revenue is greatly falling off, becoming reduced in amount?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do say so.

Mr. HOWARD. I should like very much to hear some explanation why that result is now upon us; how it happens that our internal revenue is falling off; what are the causes of it?

Mr. SHERMAN. It happens simply because not as many things are made now as were made a year ago, and not as many things are sold as were sold a year ago, and the business of the country is not so prosperous as it was a year ago. That is the reason.

Mr. HOWARD. Is not this reduction the result in a very great degree of losses occurring in the collection of the internal revenue in consequence of the bad management of that revenue by the head of the proper department?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt the chief cause of the loss of revenue is because people will manufacture whisky without paying the tax on it. But so far as these articles are concerned we can reach them, and I do not know that there is any attempt to evade taxation upon them; nor can taxation be easily evaded on locomotives and marine engines. As to who is at fault in regard to collecting the revenue I imagine that many officers are at fault. If the Senator can find a way by which we can get only honest men to collect the revenue, I should think he would be a very valuable officer of the Government, and I should like to see him made Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator is not ignorant of the fact that there have been a great many revolutions and changes in the revenue department, and that hundreds and thousands of officers who were perfectly competent, honest, and prompt and regular, have been turned out of office within the last year, to make room for parvenues, adventurers, and incompetent men. What have been the effects upon the amount collected of this revolution in our force?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt the wholesale removal of revenue officers has been very injurious to the public revenue, and I think I have been as anxious to prevent that by rejecting political appointments as any one in the Senate.

Mr. HOWARD. No doubt about that.

Mr. SHERMAN. At the same time I do not think that is a matter which has anything to do with this. The gentleman at the head of the Internal Revenue Bureau is not only an honest and able man, but also politically right, so that we cannot very well find fault with him.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would state also that last year we relieved the freight business of tax; took away all tax from freight receipts, and now we are taking it off iron. It is impossible to take taxes off everything. If we do we cannot get revenue to support the Government.

Mr. CONNESS. I cannot admit the force of one of the arguments, and the principal one made by the Senator from Ohio, that we can certainly tax that which we can easiest catch, so to speak. Because a locomotive cannot be put out of the way, and we can certainly collect the tax on it, therefore he says we should impose a tax upon it. If that is to be the basis of taxation we shall find taxation very unequally applied. It is very true that a locomotive is easily caught, except when under a full head of steam, and that is given as a reason why we should tax it. I think that is the least of reasons.

In this connection let me say that I think there is additional reason from any that has been suggested here for the falling off in revenue. For some reason or other, I think, against the great majority of the opinion of the country and of the persons experienced in collecting revenue, the committees of the two Houses of Congress have determined continually to keep the tax upon manufactured spirits at two dollars per gallon; creating the highest possible reward for evasions of the law, for perjuries, for the commission of the highest crimes known to the law, and really spreading among the people a source of corruption such as has never before been furnished. My information on this subject is obtained exclusively from honest men engaged in the collection of the public revenue, and they uniformly and all testify that it is impossible to collect the revenue upon spirits at two dollars per gallon. But our committees, for whom I have great respect, having begun to collect it at two dollars per gallon, are determined to enforce its collection; and the manner in which they enforce the collection is such that they lose millions of dollars of revenue; that they enrich the worst men in the country; that they fail to get revenue; and I will say here that I am prepared for a reduction of the tax on spirits as a means of obtaining revenue and increasing it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before the Senator takes his seat, I wish to ask him if he has considered the effect of a large reduction of the tax upon the dealers who now hold whisky in quantities. I agree with what he has said with regard to an excessive tax upon whisky or upon any other article; it defeats revenue. But I have felt, and I suppose the committees have felt, an embarrassment in the way of a reduction, with a view to revenue. I have felt embarrassed because of the effect it would have in breaking up nearly all the men who are dealing in that article. I do not see how that is to be avoided.

Mr. CONNESS. There is force in the suggestion of the honorable Senator, and I have thought of it; but shall we be deterred from doing a great right lest some injury occur to some part of the country? Shall we remain attached to a system of taxation that keeps money out of the Treasury, that corrupts the people, simply because a change will bring injury to a part of the people? It is better that that injury should come. I think it is not impossible to devise means by which a large amount of that injury may be averted. But I am concluded upon one point, and that is that it is vain to attempt to collect revenue, that it is a crime to attempt to impose and collect the present tax on spirits, because it is a patronage of crime.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not see any reason why the tax should not be continued upon locomotives and marine engines. They are generally used in a very profitable business, purchased by companies of large means, who are able to pay the increased price occasioned by the tax that is imposed. I shall vote for this amendment unless some reason be given that I have not heard.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It has been stated by the Senator from Ohio, who of course has the facts or else he would not have made the statement, that the revenue is falling off greatly. I would be obliged to him if he would state what was the difference between the revenue collected in December, 1866, and January, 1867, and the revenue collected in December, 1865, and January, 1866. I should like to know what the falling off amounts to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not prepared on this sudden call to give the precise figures; but I know that the general fact is so, and I can furnish the precise amounts perhaps by tomorrow. I can to-morrow morning get a statement of the actual revenue and the falling off from the highest authority.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If we are to act on any such assumption, we ought to have definite information. I should like to know the extent of the falling off. I was not aware that there was any considerable falling off. I know that we collect much less revenue some months than others; but as compared with the revenue collected a year ago in the corresponding months I was not aware there was any considerable decline, anything that affected materially the revenue of the country. I shall be glad to see the tables, or see the amount so that we can know what it is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Commissioner states that the falling off recently from the corresponding months of last year is something like four or five millions per month, but we cannot tell yet exactly.

Mr. CONNESS. That would only be $48,000,000 a year, while the excess last year over the estimates of the Secretary was more than eighty millions. I do not think there need be any fear about that. Besides, there is another important consideration. Last year we paid off the Army. It is true, we owe the Army yet something in the way of bounties; but last year was a year of very heavy outlay and expenditure. It appears to me the Finance Committee ought to be prepared here, and able to state very closely and with great accuracy, the proper estimates for the present and the coming year, both the outlay and the income. I do not see how our taxes can be intelligently laid unless we have these figures before us.

Mr. FESSENDEN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane, Morgan, Poland, Saulsbury, Sherman, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Williams—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Davis, Howard, Nye, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ross, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, and Wade—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Doolittle, Fogg, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Ramsey, Riddle, Sumner, Wilson, and Yates—19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines one hundred and seventeen and one hundred and eighteen of section eleven to strike out "and straw wrapping-paper."

Mr. FESSENDEN. The committee think that amendment had better be rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope it will be.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and nineteen, to insert "made."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and twenty-seven of section eleven, to strike out "when" after "fabrics," and in line one hundred and twenty-eight to strike out "used" and insert "produced," so as to make the clause read:

Fabrics, the products of hand-looms, when not produced in penitentiaries or other penal establishments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The word "and" should be inserted after "bee-hives" in line one hundred and thirty-one of section eleven; and all the words after "bee-hives" to the end of the section should be stricken out, the same provision having been made in another place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made, no objection being interposed.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of section eleven "wire-cloth."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section eleven the following proviso:

Provided, That the exemptions aforesaid shall, in all cases, be confined exclusively to said articles in the state and condition specified in the foregoing enumeration, and shall not extend to articles in any other form, nor to manufactures from said articles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert (as an exception to the computation of income) after the word "whatever" in line forty-six of section twelve, the words "except the rental value of any homestead used or occupied by any person or by his family in his own right or in the right of his wife."

The next amendment was in lines ninety-five, ninety-six, and ninety-seven of section twelve to strike out the words "in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "return" in line one hundred and one of section twelve to insert "on or before the day prescribed by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "trustees," in line one hundred and six of section twelve, to insert "executors and administrators."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the words "guardian or trustee" in line one hundred and ten of section twelve, and insert "person acting in a fiduciary capacity."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "act," in line one hundred and twelve of section twelve, to strike out the words "as guardian or trustee."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and seventeen of section twelve, to insert "such" before "person," and after "person" to strike out "guardian or trustee."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line one hundred and seventy-nine of section twelve the following proviso:

Provided, That the tax on incomes for the year 1866 shall be levied on the day this act takes effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line one hundred and thirty-four the words "guardian or trustee" tee" should be struck out, and the words "such fiduciary" inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out in line two hundred and two of section twelve the words "several auditors," and insert "accounting officers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section twelve the following proviso:

And provided further, That in case it should become necessary for showing the true receipts of the Government under the operations of this section upon the books of the Treasury Department, the requisite amount may be carried from unappropriated moneys in the Treasury to the credit of said account; and the increase of the exemption from $600 to $1,000 provided in this amendment, as to salary and compensation, shall take effect for the month of March, 1867, and thereafter.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "the increase of the exemption from $600 to $1,000 provided in this amendment as to" and inserting "this section shall take effect upon," and also by striking out the words "and thereafter;" so as to make the latter branch of the amendment read:

And this section shall take effect upon salary and compensation for the month of March, 1867.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment was to strike out in line twenty-four of section fourteen the words "under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend the fifteenth section by inserting the word "or" after "alcohol" in the third line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Committee on Finance recommend that all the sections from section sixteen on page 3 to section thirty-eight, inclusive, on page 62, be stricken out; and then a new section, which is printed on page 62, is to be inserted as section sixteen. The reason why they are all stricken out (with the exception of one section, which is struck out here to be put into another part of the bill) is that they are merely redrafts of the existing law, with a change of phraseology simply. On examination of them the committee thought, with the advice of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who examined them more carefully, that it would be perfectly useless to insert the new draft. It is a mere change of phraseology, and perhaps not an improvement. The committee decided, therefore, to leave them all out and allow the present law to stand as it is in these respects. Unless the Senate wish to hear these sections read they may just as well be passed over without being read.

Mr. HOWARD. I suppose they are merely penal clauses.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Some are; and some are not. They are general provisions.

Mr. HOWARD. Are the old penal clauses saved in the present act?

Mr. FESSENDEN. All the penal clauses are left in.

Mr. HOWARD. But do I understand that the committee propose to strike out these penal clauses?

Mr. FESSENDEN. To strike them out of this bill; but they remain in the present law.

Mr. HOWARD. Is the Senator perfectly sure that those old penal clauses will for the future apply to this amended act?

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no reason why they should not. We repeat nothing except that which is inconsistent with this act.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator is aware that very often in criminal trials the question becomes a very delicate one whether an act performed under a subsequent law is punishable under an old penal act where the penalty is changed, or the mode of proceeding is changed. Where there is a change of penalty by a subsequent act, the old penal law is generally held to be repealed by its operation. I merely call the Senator's attention to this. He certainly does not desire to let any violation of this bill pass unpunished.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Of course not. The idea is to make it more simple.

Mr. HOWARD. Undoubtedly; but in your anxiety you may omit to do the very thing you desire to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the reading of the sections indicated, proposed by the Committee on Finance to be stricken out, shall be omitted.

Mr. HOWARD. We can before we come to a final vote on those clauses look at the matter more carefully and see whether there is any necessity for retaining these sections.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator will look at the new section twenty-four, on pages 69 and 70, he will see that the penalties there are revived. These sections can be passed over for the present, and the Senator can look at section twenty-four when we arrive at it, and see whether it is not sufficient.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question. I notice on page 46, lines nineteen and twenty, that the punishment of imprisonment for not less than two nor more than five years is provided in addition to a fine. I may be in error, but my impression is that the old law did not provide imprisonment as a punishment in any case, so that in this section a more severe penalty is imposed. I refer to section twenty-seven on page 46. Is it the intention of the committee to impose not only a fine, but imprisonment for the acts there specified?

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator will turn to section twenty-four on page 70 he will see that it covers all these penalties. I will read it, so that Senators may notice it:

That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any still, boiler, or other vessel used in the distillation of spirits, who shall neglect or refuse to make true and exact entry and report of the same, or to do or cause to be done any of the things by law required to be done in relation to the manufacture or sale of spirits, shall forfeit for every such neglect or refusal all the spirits made by or for him, and all the vessels used in making the same, and the stills, boilers, and other vessels used in distillation, and all materials fit for use in distillation found on the premises, together with the sum of $500 for each offense, to be recovered with costs of suits, and shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be subject to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That extends imprisonment to most of the offenses under the law.

Mr. FESSENDEN. "And be subject to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year."

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I did not understand. I thought that by striking out these sections the Committee on Finance were opposed to imprisonment for any offense.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The sections remain in the old law as they were before. They are not repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the reading of the sections named by him be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The reading of the sections is dispensed with; and the question is on the amendment reported by the committee, to strike out from section seventeen to section thirty-eight inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section sixteen:

And be it further enacted, That hereafter all distilled spirits, before being removed from the distillery, shall be inspected and gauged by a general inspector of spirits, who shall mark the barrels or packages in the manner required by law; and so much of the act approved July 13, 1866, as requires the appointment of an inspector for each distillery established according to law is hereby repealed; Provided, That such other duties as have heretofore been imposed upon inspectors of distilleries may be performed by such other duly appointed officers as may be designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section seventeen:

And be it further enacted, That whenever, in the judgment of the collector, there shall be a general bonded warehouse so located as to be conveniently accessible to a distillery, and in the same collection district, the said collector shall direct all spirits which may be stored in the bonded warehouse attached to such distillery to be transferred directly to a general bonded warehouse; and all spirits thereafter produced in such distillery shall be removed to a general bonded warehouse within the time and in the manner heretofore required for removal to the bonded warehouse attached to the distillery.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to add to section [forty-one] twenty "nor to sales made by judicial and executive officers under the order or decree of any court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [forty-three] twenty-two, line two, to strike out "transportation" before "bond," and after "bond" to insert "under which any distilled spirits shall have been withdrawn from a bonded warehouse."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eight of section [forty-three] twenty-two to insert "by" after "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section forty-four, as follows:

SEC. 44. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall falsely represent himself to be a revenue officer of the United States, and shall in such assumed character demand or receive any money or other article of value from any person for any duty or tax due to the United States, or for any violation or pretended violation of any revenue law of the United States, such person shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to a fine of $500, and to imprisonment not less than six months and not exceeding two years, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That provision is carried forward to another place.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section forty-five, in these words:

SEC. 45. And be it further enacted, That no distilled spirits which have been forfeited to the Government in accordance with law shall be sold for a price less than the amount of the tax required thereon by law at the time of such sale. And if the officer having such spirits in charge shall have been unable, for a period of ninety days, to sell the same for the price equal to the tax, such spirits shall be destroyed, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is carried forward also.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section forty-six, in these words:

SEC. 46. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed. And sections sixty and one hundred and fourteen of an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and so much of sections fourteen and one hundred and sixty-seven, as relate to turnpike roads are also hereby repealed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Senators will observe that the last section of the bill as reported by the Committee on Finance simply repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act; but this section which we propose to strike out not only does that, but it also specially repeals section one hundred and fourteen of the act of June 30, 1864. That section one hundred and fourteen is the section which imposes a tax upon advertisements in newspapers. The committee came to the conclusion that that ought to be struck out, that there was no reason why a tax should not be paid upon advertisements as well as other things. I call attention to the subject in order that, if any Senator desires to test the sense of the Senate upon it, he may do so by moving to add the repeal of that section to the last clause of the bill as reported by the committee, when we read it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section forty-seven, as follows:

SEC. 47. And be it further enacted, That inspectors of distilleries, appointed under the provisions of this act, shall be required to give bonds, with security, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, or as-essor of the district, in a sum not less than $5,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of such inspector.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That provision is carried forward.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section forty-eight, as follows:

SEC. 48. And be it further enacted, That no action or prosecution for the recovery of any claim of the United States, arising from alleged violations of, or frauds upon, the revenue laws, shall be compromised or discontinued without the assent of the district attorney of the United States for the district in which such proceeding is pending, or of the Attorney General of the United States, with the approval of the court in which the action is pending; and such assent shall, in all cases, assign the reasons for such compromise or discontinuance, and shall be indorsed upon the papers in the case, and shall be preserved in the files of the court.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is not carried forward; it is struck out.

Mr. HOWARD. Let me ask the honorable Senator why it is struck out?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was very much discussed in committee, and very deliberately considered. There is no compromise now upon the liquor clauses, but there are many small matters arising in the course of the collection of taxes that not to allow to be compromised would make a great deal of difficulty. Sometimes things are done by mistake and misapprehension, small matters owing to the different modes in which the various taxes are collected. It was the opinion of the Commissioner that it would make the law very onerous if there was no power to compromise such cases. It would be throwing embarrassments around it that would render it very difficult to execute the law. The committee came to the conclusion that it was best to leave the law as it is on that subject. It is a power that should exist somewhere.

Mr. HOWARD. So as to leave the power of compromising a prosecution in the hands of the district attorney?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; it is in the hands of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury and the assessor and collector. Those officers are all consulted.

Mr. NYE. Do they not compromise felonies?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No; they simply compromise the claims of the Government in these cases.

Mr. NYE. I think there is a bill pending in the other House now for some two or three hundred thousand dollars claimed by a Mr. Dorsheimer, growing out of the compromise of a case where seizures of whisky were made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Court of Claims decided against the claim.

Mr. NYE. No matter what the Court of Claims may have decided, the claim is presented.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Anybody can present a claim to Congress.

Mr. HOWARD. I ought to be sufficiently acquainted with the revenue laws to answer the question I am about to put to the honorable Senator, but I must confess my ignorance. It is this: is the district attorney in all cases necessitated to apply to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or to the Secretary of the Treasury or to any other officer in Washington to get his consent to enter into a compromise?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The district attorney has no power whatever to compromise.

Mr. HOWARD. Then there can be no compromise of such prosecutions without the consent of the Commissioner?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner and the assessor and the collector are consulted.

Mr. HOWARD. The reason I am so inquisitive about it is that I see great danger of the abuse of authority in various cases by the district attorneys; the temptation is very great.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The district attorney has no power over the subject. I objected to the section giving the power to compromise only with the assent of the district attorney or Attorney General of the United States, and indorsed by the judge. It has been found safe and proper, and has been the custom from the foundation of the Government, from time immemorial almost, to leave the power of compromising these matters under the customs revenue in the hands where they are now, with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOWARD. I am very glad the committee have taken that course. I think any other provision would make unhappy and unfortunate controversies.

Mr. JOHNSON. This, I believe, does not take away the power to compromise.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It leaves it where it is.

Mr. JOHNSON. So it can only be done with the consent of the Commissioner and Secretary.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have been informed that there have been very great abuses in these settlements; that advantage has been taken of violations of the law in the earlier stages, when it was not as well understood as it is now, and perhaps now to some extent, where parties have omitted to use a stamp, for instance, and the penalties go on multiplying so that the amount becomes very large; and then complaints have been made when the omission was a mere inadvertence; and then compromises made by which parties have been enriched. I am very much in the dark as to what the law is, as the Senator from Michigan is. I was under the impression that at one time the collector and the assessor, with the district attorney, effected compromises. But if they do not do it in form they do it substantially, because on their recommendation, knowing the facts, the officers are very likely to act. Now, I should like to know if it would be a hardship to prohibit any of these compromises except by consent of the court? What is the objection to requiring that the assent of the court should be had? And let it be done in open court, where it can be understood.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Sometimes the court is not present. The court may be away; and things must stand and everything be held up until the court can return. Again, the court may be sick.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is it any great hardship if things are required to remain in statu quo?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It may be a great injury, because the property is all held in the mean time. It might occasion a great deal of difficulty; but that matter was discussed also. The rule is better as it is now, as the law originally fixed it, than to have any of these alterations made.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There has been very great complaint in the city where I live of abuses under this law.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Abuses in compromising suits?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Abuses in the execution of the law and inflicting penalties, when perhaps they ought not to be collected, when the cases ought to have been compromised. Informers, it is said—I do not know with what truth—with a view of making money, have enforced the law very harshly sometimes; and the charge is made in different parts of the country that officers have paid more attention to making money by getting up suits and then compromising them, than to the discharge of their duties. I think we should guard against the abuse, if there be any.

Mr. DAVIS. There are very great abuses connected with that portion of the law to which reference is now being made in this conversation. I have in my possession copies from four records in the State of Kentucky. In one it was an action of debt for a violation of the law, and there is a declaration with seventeen counts; and in the four cases there are forty-nine counts. Each count charges an offense or a violation of the law that subjects the offender to a penalty of $500. The violation of law is this, and simply this: there is a provision which requires that the quantity of grain mashed every day shall be entered in a book, and that extracts from this book shall be furnished every seven days or every fourth of the month to the assessor. The violation of this law commenced by some country distillers in Harrison county, one of whom made but ninety barrels during the distilling season, immediately after the passage of the law, because of their utter ignorance of its provisions on that point. The collector had access to their distilleries. He had access to their books. He summoned the distillers before him. He made them yield to him an inspection of their books. He swore them and then examined them upon oath in his own office and made them disclose exactly the mode in which they were carrying on their distilleries and every entry that they made. He knew the law and they did not. Notwithstanding he knew the law, and it was his duty to inform them of its provisions, he carefully concealed their violations of the law from them, until in one case the violations had run up to such a number as authorized him to institute a suit with seventeen counts, each count running through one month, and each quarter of the month subjecting the distiller to a penalty of $500, making $2,000 a month.

These men reported the exact amount of liquor that they had distilled to the assessor by wine measure, and consequently having paid the tax upon all the liquors which they made by wine measure they paid upon a larger quantity of liquor than the law would have subjected them to pay tax upon. They paid up every cent of tax for every gallon of whisky that they manufactured; and after they had settled up and received receipts in full for the whole amount of whisky manufactured, this assessor became the informer, and had actions of debt and indictments brought against them, in which he charged against them in forty-nine counts a violation of the law for four times in each count, or every quarter of a month. The result was that they were fined at that rate. He discontinued his suits upon a few counts, and these distillers were fined at that rate, one of them upward of $8,000, when they did not owe one cent of tax to the Government, when they had paid for more, according to the rates of taxation, than they were bound to pay for, and when in utter ignorance of the law they had failed to enter the amount from day to day of the grain that they mashed.

The courts had no power to release them. The law of 1797, which I hold in my hand, provides that whenever persons have not been guilty of fraud or willful neglect or willful violation of the law they shall make out their case to the district attorney, and he shall certify it to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury may remit or mitigate the penalty according to his pleasure. I have brought four cases of that kind up, not as counsel, but as the friend of these oppressed men, to the Treasury Department for relief, and I applied a few days ago to the officer there to know what disposition had been made of the cases. He informed me that they had not yet acted on the subject, but they would write back to the assessor and the collector to know what to do with the cases. That reminds me of the folly of an attempt to reclaim from the throat of a hungry dog a pound of butter that he had licked up.

Now, sir, this law in its provisions in relation to distilling is exceedingly complicated. There is not a distiller of common intelligence in the land who can understand it. It requires the study of a lawyer, or of a skillful and experienced collector or comptroller of internal revenue to understand this law, after years almost, or at least months of the most careful reading, and after receiving legal counsel too as to its meaning. Well, sir, these unsophisticated innocent men were utterly ignorant of the provision of the law. This shark lay in wait for them that their innocent violations of the law might amount to a sum of penalties in the aggregate that would enrich him; and when this delay had taken place to his satisfaction as to the amount it would produce him, he instituted these oppressive suits and had these distillers fined at the rate of $2,000 a month. I went to the district judge. I had their cases certified. They were brought up to the Treasury Department. They were referred to the proper officer. I went to him for information as to what he had done or was doing in the cases, and he told me that he had referred them back for counsel and advice as to what he should do to these officers who have thus imposed upon these unsophisticated distillers.

I have here the act of 1797. It gives some remedy, but the remedy is exceedingly tedious. It requires the case upon its facts to be made out before the district judge, and that the district judge shall certify them to the Treasury Department, and they shall be taken into consideration by the head of the Treasury Department, and the officers there shall do what they please on the application for remission or mitigation. I will read a single clause of the law, and then in connection with it an amendment that I shall propose:

"And [the judge] shall cause the facts which shall appear upon such inquiry to be stated and annexed to the petition"—

That is the petition for relief—

"and direct their transmission to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, who shall thereupon have power to mitigate or remit such fine, forfeiture, or penalty, or remove such disability, or any part thereof, if, in his opinion, the same shall have been incurred without willful negligence, or any intention of fraud in the person or persons incurring the same."

I propose that this question of fraud or of willful negligence, instead of being referred to the Treasury Department through a most slow and tedious and circumlocutory process, shall be referred at once to the judge and to the jury. Here is the section which I intend to propose as an amendment to this bill:

And be it further enacted, That in any indictment, suit, or other proceeding in the name of the United States against any person or persons, who by law shall be subject to any fine, forfeiture, penalty, or disability whatever for non-compliance or violation thereof, no person shall be subject to such fine, forfeiture, penalty, or disability that was not incurred with intent to commit fraud or with willful negligence.

Instead of referring this point of inquiry upon which the relief is to be granted to the Treasury Department under this slow and dilatory proceeding, I propose at once to refer it to the court which tries the case and before which all the facts are proved by the witnesses to it. It is certainly the best mode. It is the mode of obtaining the justice of the case. The proof, according to my amendment, has to satisfy the judge that the party charged with the delinquency is guilty neither of fraud nor of gross neglect. If he is not guilty of either fraud or gross neglect the penalties or disabilities ought not to be imposed upon him. If he is guilty of fraud or gross neglect they ought to be imposed upon him; and the facts must relieve him both from fraud and gross neglect before he could be entitled to any exemption from those penalties under my amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Would that amendment, if passed, cover all the penalties under this law or any other law?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir; because this is a general law applying to all. I will read the clause.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know what it is. I only want to know if your amendment comprehends everything.

Mr. DAVIS. Everything. It is drawn just parallel with the act of 1797. Therefore, when it becomes proper for me to offer this amendment, I intend to offer it. I give this notice that gentlemen may understand what I contemplate. I think the internal revenue law in relation to distillers is the most complex, oppressive, and outrageous law that exists anywhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. With regard to this particular section it has nothing to do at all with the remarks made by Senators on either side. It is simply whether we shall leave the power to compromise in the hands of the Secretary and the Commissioner, where it is now. That is the only question. If there ought to be any other provisions with regard to it they can be added afterward; but the argument that has been made all along is that there should be this power to compromise. Therefore I hope this will be passed upon and that we may be suffered to go on, and then Senators who want to move amendments can do so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section forty-nine, as follows:

Sec. 49. And be it further enacted, That any informer, on furnishing satisfactory security to the court for the appearance of himself and his witnesses, and also for the costs and expenses of the proceedings, shall have the right to prosecute in the name of the United States, notwithstanding any refusal or neglect of any collector so to do; and, upon furnishing the security as aforesaid, the same proceedings shall be had as if the collector had authorized it, but without responsibility to him, and the proceedings shall be thenceforward under the control of the district attorney.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section fifty, as follows:

Sec. 50. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall sell any empty cigar-box or boxes which have been stamped, without first removing such stamp, or shall refill any cigar-box without first removing such stamp, shall, on conviction of each offense, be liable to a penalty of $100, or to imprisonment not exceeding sixty days, or both, in the discretion of the court, with the costs of the trial; and it shall be lawful for any cigar inspector or revenue officer to destroy any empty cigar-box upon which a cigar stamp shall be found.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That section is carried forward.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section fifty-one, as follows:

Sec. 51. And be it further enacted, That the dealers of any lottery shall give bond, in the sum of $200, that the person paying such tax shall not sell any tickets or supplementary ticket of any lottery which has not been duly stamped according to law, and that he will pay the tax imposed by law upon the gross receipts of his sales.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section twenty-three, the following:

And be it further enacted, That the forty-fourth section of the act of July 13, 1866, aforesaid, be amended by adding thereto as follows: Provided, That when any still used or fit for use in the production of distilled spirits, the same not exceeding $1,000 in value, has been or shall be seized for any violation of the laws relating to internal revenue, the same shall not be released by the court to the claimant, or any other intervening party, before judgment; and if declared forfeited, such still shall be so destroyed as to prevent its use for the purpose aforesaid, and the materials thereof shall be sold as other forfeited property. In case of seizure, as above, of a still exceeding in value the sum of $1,000, its release to the claimant or any other intervening party, before judgment, shall be at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section twenty-four the following:

And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any still, boiler, or other vessel used in the distillation of spirits, who shall neglect or refuse to make true and exact entry and report of the same, or to do or cause to be done any of the things by law required to be done in relation to the manufacture or sale of spirits, shall forfeit for every such neglect or refusal all the spirits made by or for him, and all the vessels used in making the same, and the stills, boilers, and other vessels used in distillation, and all materials fit for use in distillation found on the premises, together with the sum of $500 for each offense, to be recovered with costs of suits, and shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be subject to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year; which said spirits, with the vessels containing the same, with all the vessels used in making the same, and all said materials may be seized by the collector and held by him until a decision shall be had thereon according to law: Provided, That proceedings to enforce said forfeiture shall be commenced by such collector within twenty days after the seizure thereof. And the proceedings to enforce said forfeiture of said property shall be in the nature of a proceeding in rem, in the circuit or district court of the United States for the district where such seizure is made, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That section needs one or two little amendments. In line six I move to strike out the words "in relation to the manufacture and sale of" and to insert "concerning distilled."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twelve the "suits" should be "suit," so as to read, "costs of suit."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section twenty-five the following:

And be it further enacted, That if any collector, deputy collector, assessor, assistant assessor, inspector, district attorney, marshal, or other officer, agent, or person charged with the execution or supervision of the execution of any of the provisions of this act, or of the act to which this is amendatory, shall demand or accept or attempt to collect, directly or indirectly, as payment or gift or otherwise, any sum of money or other property of value for the compromise, adjustment, or settlement of any charge or complaint for any violation or alleged violation of any of the said provisions, except as expressly authorized by law so to do, he shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for every such offense be liable to indictment and trial in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in double the sum or value of the money or property received or demanded, and be imprisoned for a period of not less than one year nor more than ten years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section twenty-six the following:

And be it further enacted, That no distilled spirits which have been forfeited to the Government in accordance with law shall be sold for a price less than the amount of the tax required thereon by law at the time of such sale. And if the officer having such spirits in charge shall have been unable, for a period of ninety days, to sell the same for the price equal to the tax, such spirits shall be destroyed, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section twenty-seven the following:

And be it further enacted, That if any person shall falsely represent himself to be a revenue officer of the United States, and shall in such assumed character demand or receive any money or other article of value from any person for any duty or tax due to the United States, or for any violation or pretended violation of any revenue law of the United States, such person shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to a fine of $500, and to imprisonment not less than six months and not exceeding two years, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section twenty-eight the following:

And be it further enacted, That no person shall mix for sale naphtha and illuminating oils, or shall knowingly sell or keep for sale or offer for sale such mixture, or shall sell or offer for sale oil made from petroleum for illuminating purposes, inflammable at less temperature or fire test than one hundred and ten degrees Fahrenheit, and any person so doing shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof by indictment or presentment in any court of the United States, having competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by a fine not less than $100 nor more than $500, and by imprisonment for a term of not less than six months nor more than three years.

The next amendment was to insert as section twenty-nine the following:

And be it further enacted, That if two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the laws of the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner whatever, and one or more of said parties to said conspiracy shall do any act to effect the object thereof, the parties to said conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $1,000, and not more than $10,000, and to imprisonment not exceeding two years. And when any offense shall be begun in one judicial district of the United States and completed in another, every such offense shall be deemed to have been committed in either of the said districts, and may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in either of the said districts in the same manner as if it had been actually and wholly committed therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section thirty the following:

And be it further enacted, That all inspectors appointed under the provisions of the act or acts of which this is amendatory shall be required to give bonds, with security approved by the Secretary of the Treasury or assessor of the district, in a sum not less than $5,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of such inspector.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section thirty-one the following:

And be it further enacted, That any person who shall sell any empty cigar box or boxes which have been stamped, without first removing such stamp, or shall refill any cigar box without first removing such stamp, shall on conviction of each offense be liable to a penalty of $100 or to imprisonment not exceeding sixty days, or both, in the discretion of the court, with the costs of the trial; and it shall be lawful for any cigar inspector or revenue officer to destroy any empty cigar box upon which a cigar stamp shall be found.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are a couple of amendments to be made in that section. In line three I move to strike out the word "removing" and insert "defacing or destroying."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move the same amendment in line four, to strike out the word "removing" and insert "defacing or destroying."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line five I move to strike out the word "each" before the word "offense," and to insert the word "either."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is now half-past ten o'clock, and I think we have progressed very rapidly with this bill. I move, therefore, that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope not. I want to get through with the bill if I can to-night.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does the Senator expect to pass the bill to-night?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to do so; but at any rate, we can go on with it for at least another hour yet. The nearer we get through the better.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I withdraw the motion until the reading of the bill is finished.

The next amendment was to insert as section thirty-two the following:

And be it further enacted, That spirits of turpentine may be transferred, without payment of the tax, to a bonded warehouse established in conformity with law and Treasury regulations, under such rules and regulations and upon the execution of such transportation bonds or other security as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, said bonds or other security to be taken by the collector of the district from which such removal is made; and may be transported from such a warehouse to any other bonded warehouse established as aforesaid, and may be withdrawn from bonded warehouse for consumption on payment of the tax, or removed for export to a foreign country without payment of tax, in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the removal of distilled spirits, all the rules, regulations, and conditions of which, so far as applicable, shall apply to spirits of turpentine in bonded warehouse. And no drawback shall in any case be allowed upon any spirits of turpentine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section thirty-three, the following:

And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The committee have some other amendments that they desire to offer.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I believe the reading of the bill has been completed, and I renew the motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope not.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 2, section three, line six, after the word "attorney" at the end of the line, I move to insert the words "instead of reporting to the Solicitor of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 3, section four, lines two and three, I move to strike out the words "lands and other property" and to insert "real estate;" and in line three to strike out the word "have" and insert the word "has."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 5, section seven, line five, I move to strike out the word "their" and to insert the word "his."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 7, section nine, line twenty-nine, I move to strike out the word "petroleum" and to insert the words "other articles."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 15, section eleven, after line sixteen, I move to insert in the free list "boots, shoes, shoe-bindings, and strings, and gloves made of leather or skins."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I offer the following amendment as an additional section, to come in as section twelve of the bill:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That there shall be levied, collected, and paid on brandy made from grapes fifty cents per gallon; and if any person shall knowingly manufacture, compound, put up, sell or dispose of, or cause to be manufactured, compounded, put up, sold or disposed of, or aid or assist therein, any fluid as or for or under or with the name of brandy made from grapes, which shall not be really such, he shall on conviction thereof be punished for each offense by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both said punishments, in the discretion of the court, and any such simulated or compounded fluid as aforesaid shall be forfeited to the United States.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, until one year ago the tax on brandy made from grapes never exceeded fifty cents per gallon. At the last session of Congress the tax was raised from fifty cents per gallon or less to two dollars per gallon. The result has been nearly a total destruction of this product. I need not say to Senators how important it is that this product shall be encouraged in our own country, so that, in place of sending to Europe millions of dollars in gold, we may be able to pay those amounts to our own people and keep that treasure within our own country.

It happens in the progress of natural causes that the State of California is peculiarly adapted to the production of the grape, and therefore to the production from the grape of wines and brandies, perhaps in their very best condition. All the arable surface of that State below the altitude of three thousand feet above the sea may be called the native home of the grape. Thousands of our people have engaged in planting vineyards and in the production of wine and brandy. Necessarily their efforts are surrounded with the greatest possible difficulties. It takes, in the first place, a long time after the planting of the vineyard until it is fit to produce a crop; it takes a very long time after wine and brandy are produced from the grape before they are fit for market; and during all this period of time capital is invested in large amounts without any result or return. The State of California, appreciating these difficulties fully, has provided by its legislation for the exemption from all taxation of vineyards and their product.

As a revenue measure, the tax proposed in this section will yield the largest amount of revenue. There is no disputation about that. But it has been held in the House of Representatives, and by some others, that the reduced tax applied to brandy produced from grapes will lead to the production of simulated compounds represented to be brandy made from grapes, for the purpose of escaping the tax of two dollars per gallon which is imposed upon all spirits produced from the cereals. The facts and figures in the revenue department of this Government do not bear this out at all. As a cure for that apprehended difficulty and evil a tax of two dollars per gallon has been levied, thus destroying at one stroke this great industry which it is our duty, and should be our pleasure, to encourage.

That it may not be pretended that we desire to evade the law, or that we intend to promote an evasion of the law, it will be seen that we have prepared the section with sufficient safeguards and punishments and forfeitures to prevent the production of simulated compounds representing to be brandy made from grapes. It cannot be held in any fairness that we cannot protect the revenue against impositions of that character. I have been very much surprised to find gentlemen willing to destroy a great industry of this kind in their own country lest attempts should be made to violate the law, when we know that there is no law connected with the raising of revenue that attempts are not made to violate.

I do not wish at this late hour to occupy the time of the Senate. I think I have said sufficient that Senators may appreciate this amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall not detain the Senate in discussing this matter. If there is any reason why spirits distilled from grapes should pay a lower rate of duty than spirits distilled from corn I cannot see it. As a matter of course the result of such legislation will be that all the whisky made in the country will be distilled from grapes hereafter. Ohio is at least the second, if not the first, grape-growing State in the Union, and yet I do not know why a discrimination should be made in favor of brandy distilled from grapes by the same process that whisky is distilled from corn. Perhaps the Senator from California can point it out. I cannot see it.

Mr. CONNESS. I think I can tell the Senator. In the first place, the cereals are much more easily and cheaply raised than grapes. It takes a long time to establish a vineyard, and it takes a great deal of capital to get a grape crop. After wine and brandy are made from grapes it takes years before they are in a marketable condition, while spirits made from the cereals, produced readily and cheaply, are ready for the market as soon as produced. That is the difference, and it is a very material difference.

Besides, Mr. President, as I stated in the outset of my remarks, it is essential that we establish this industry in our own country, and thus avoid sending millions annually to foreign countries to purchase this particular article. The Senator must know very well that those who consume brandy will not be willing to consume whisky or ordinary spirits instead. If it is not an object to raise those articles in our own country and encourage their manufacture, then we legislate for a great many branches of industry in vain.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am able to make a statement as to the effect that this proposed change will have upon the revenue. I hold in my hand an exhibit on that subject. I find that from July 1, 1865, to July 1, 1866, when the tax was fifty cents a gallon, there were eighty-nine thousand four hundred and eighty gallons produced, yielding a revenue of $44,740. The average per month of revenue was $6,000. During the months of July and August, 1866, the tax was fifty cents a gallon, and there were twenty-six thousand five hundred and thirty gallons produced during those months, an average of thirteen thousand two hundred and sixty-five gallons per month. But from September 1, 1866, to January 1, 1867, when the tax was two dollars per gallon, there were only eight thousand five hundred and forty gallons produced; so that the effect of the tax of two dollars per gallon was to reduce the amount produced and practically to destroy the business.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty cents" and inserting "one dollar."

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. SHERMAN. A word in reply to the Senator from Oregon. He very properly shows us by statistics that the imposition of two dollars a gallon on brandy has tended to decrease the quantity manufactured. He might extend the same argument to whisky. One hundred million gallons of whisky were produced in 1860, and now only about fifteen or twenty millions are produced according to the returns. As a matter of course, the effect of this duty is to decrease the quantity produced; but still, as we need the revenue, we cannot make any discrimination as to the kind of spirits, whether made from grapes or corn or barley or beans, or anything else. Whisky may be produced from molasses. Every vegetable substance will produce whisky. There is no reason in the world to discriminate in favor of grapes. I am very fond of grapes, but certainly I would not discriminate in favor of the distillation of spirits from grapes. An attempt of this kind will only produce frauds, will evidently lead to frauds. It cannot be avoided. The argument which is made goes in favor of the reduction of the duty on spirits entirely; and if any reduction is made on any kind of spirits it ought to be on all spirits.

Mr. CONNESS. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with two years' experience under a tax of two dollars per gallon, differs diametrically from the honorable Senator, with all the experience of his office and with all his desire to collect revenue. Now, Mr. President, it does appear to me that the honorable Senator—

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator say that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is in favor of a reduction of the tax on spirits?

Mr. CONNESS. I do say the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is of opinion that a larger amount of revenue can be collected under a tax of fifty cents per gallon upon this commodity than at two dollars per gallon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I guess you are mistaken.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, I am at a loss to understand the coolness with which the honorable Senator proposes to wipe out an important industry of this country. We pass tariff bills here with a view to protect infant industries; but at another point you determine to maintain a tax against spirits which, as I have said before, in place of giving you revenue, corrupts the whole country, and then, lest you shall not be enabled to enforce its collection, you propose to destroy another industry completely and entirely. Sir, I do not understand such statesmanship; I do not understand its wisdom; I do not understand its economy.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not attempted to discuss the proper rate of duty on whisky. Perhaps the Senator and I might agree upon that. Probably the rate is too high. I was always opposed to a tax of two dollars a gallon on whisky; I was opposed to it when it was made; I thought it too high then. The question of its reduction now is a very different thing. It is manifest that against the vote in the House, after a discussion and a full examination of this question, and against the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, my friend to the contrary notwithstanding—he is present—who is not in favor of a reduction of the tax to one dollar, it is idle for us to discuss the question, and therefore the Committee on Finance have not presented the question. But allow me to say, waiving that, perhaps I might agree with the Senator that a dollar would yield more revenue. A dollar would be better on spirits; but that does not answer the question. Why discriminate in favor of grapes? Why should spirits made from grapes pay a less duty than spirits made from corn or wheat or barley or any other grain or any other product? That is the question.

Mr. CONNESS. I have undertaken to answer the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator's answer was not satisfactory. His answer was that brandy to be good must be kept a little longer. Whisky to be good must be kept three or four years, although when people take it for poison they drink it from the still. And so with brandy; if it is drank within the first year it is brandy; but still it is better every year it is kept. That is true of whisky and all other spirits.

Mr. CONNESS. Upon this question I ask for the yeas and nays, not upon the amendment of the honorable Senator from Kentucky, which I hope will not be adopted, though I appreciate the motives of the mover, but upon the question of imposing a tax of fifty cents per gallon on this commodity.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. I will suggest one reason why I propose the amendment to the amendment. When I get the opportunity I intend to propose an amendment that the tax upon whisky shall be two dollars until the 1st day of October next, and from that time until the 1st of April following, $1 50, and after April 1, 1868, one dollar; and I propose the amendment now so that there shall be a conformity in the rate of tax upon whisky and brandy.

Mr. WADE. I perceive that we shall hardly get through with the bill to-night.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will let us get a vote on this proposition before he proceeds to other business.

Mr. WADE. If Senators are ready to take a vote I shall not make the motion that I intended to make.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I shall support the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, because I think in the reduction of the tax upon brandy produced from the grape in this country there are not the embarrassments that surround the question of the reduction of the tax upon whisky. I suppose there is not any large amount of this quality of brandy in the hands of the dealers, and we are not likely to bankrupt many men by the adoption of the Senator's amendment. We are comparatively free in that respect to do what we think is right. I think it would be right to make a very large reduction of the tax upon whisky with a view to revenue, as well as with a view to justice to a large interest; but the embarrassment in the way of doing that is very great, because of the large quantity of liquor in the hands of dealers, which will immediately depreciate in value, bringing ruin upon that class of men.

But in regard to the grape, I agree with everything that has been said by the Senator from California. It is an interest that we ought to promote as much as possible, or, to say the least of it, it is an interest that we ought not to embarrass. I believe no Senator here can form a correct opinion about the production of the grape in California unless he has seen that production. A friend at one time sent me nearly a bushel of grapes that were grown near Los Angeles, and I know that I would not have believed any person who had told me just what sort of grapes were produced there. The size of the cluster and the size of each particular grape was a matter of wonder. Of course I cannot speak with great confidence, but my opinion is that portions of California will equal any portion of the world in the production of the grape. We should encourage it for very many reasons. One is the temperance reason. It is important to produce our own wines in this country, and as much as possible discourage the use of stronger liquors. Although the proposition of the Senator from California only applies, I believe, to the brandy that is produced from the grape, yet that will encourage the production of the grape, the cultivation of vineyards, and produce perhaps a temperance reformation to some extent. Of course this interest labors under some embarrassment at this time, and we should not burden it with a tax. I regard the tax upon the production of the grape as in wisdom about like the tax upon cotton—a tax upon agriculture. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from California. I think it is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from California, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Fogg, Fowler, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Lane, Nye, Patterson, Poland, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—27.

YAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, and Willey—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, and Riddle—12.

So the amendment was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO.

Mr. WADE. I now move to postpone the present and all prior orders and take up the bill for the admission of Colorado into the Union as a State, with the veto message of the President upon it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will not be done. I do not understand the necessity particularly of taking that up to-night instead of to-morrow or next day. This bill must be passed here, and then it must go to the House with our amendments, which are numerous, and be considered there, and we must have a committee of conference. It is of the utmost importance that we should pass it as soon as possible. I do not understand that the question of acting upon the President's veto is of such infinite importance that it must be taken up to-night at near midnight and the admission of a State be acted upon. I hope it will not be done.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suppose the Senator from Ohio wants to take the Colorado bill up to set it for some time. He hardly wants to force it to a vote to-night.

Mr. WADE. Certainly. I expect to get a vote to-night. I do not know that I can succeed; but I shall try it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. To-night?

Mr. WADE. Yes, to-night.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is a rather refreshing undertaking at this time of night. The tax on whisky ought to be reduced if that is the style of labor we have got to undertake. [Laughter.] I will suggest what is fair in regard to Colorado; and that is, that without debate to-morrow at half past twelve o'clock we take the vote.

Several SENATORS. That is fair.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is fair. Some Senators are not able to be here to-night on account of sickness. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. RIDDLE] has been sick for some time with the rheumatism; and it is, I suppose, impossible for him to come out at night.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] is sick, too.

Mr. HENDRICKS. And I believe the Senator from Iowa has also been sick recently; and although he is able to attend the day sessions he would hardly be willing to come out at night. I think I can say for our side of the Chamber that we can take the vote to-morrow at half-past twelve o'clock without any delay.

Mr. WADE. I have been endeavoring now for more than two weeks to get this bill up, and appropriation bills and other measures have intervened every time; and I know to-morrow how these measures will be pressed upon us. I have taken infinite pains here this evening to endeavor to keep a quorum for the purpose of disposing of this question now, and I think it ought to be disposed of before we adjourn. I hope we shall be permitted to vote on the question whether we will take it up, and we will try to see if we can get a vote upon it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Why can you not agree to my proposition?

Mr. WADE. The gentleman knows very well why I do not want to agree to his proposition.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Why?

Mr. WADE. I am very frank to tell him. It is because I think I am better prepared to-night than I shall be to-morrow to decide this question. I want to be frank and plain about it. I think that that is the case. It is a subject of great importance. Two gentlemen elected as Senators have been dancing attendance upon Congress for nearly two sessions, and we have kept them off, with all that anxity that always besets men under those circumstances. I really do not think we have treated these gentlemen with that fairness that we should have exhibited toward them. Their people are exceedingly anxious for admission as a State into the Union, and here we are baffling them in a way that no Territory ever has been interrupted in its progress before to my knowledge.

Mr. LANE. Let us take the vote on taking it up.

Mr. LANE. Very well; let us have the vote on taking it up.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no doubt that the vote may be taken to-morrow, and taken without debate. The honorable member may have, as he supposes, if he supposes correctly, a better chance of accomplishing his object now; but if he has, it is only because of the absence of Senators who are sick and unable to be here to-night, and who, when they left the Chamber, had not the least idea that the bill would be called up. Under those circumstances, I should hope that the Senate would agree to postpone the matter until some hour to-morrow, with the understanding that then, without any discussion, the vote shall be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to take up the bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I think the proposition which has been made at this time of night, that to-morrow at half past twelve o'clock, without debate on the part of those who are opposed to the passage of the bill, we come to a vote, is a proposition which has never before been declined in the Senate of the United States, never. It is a proposition which it seems to me it would be impossible for the majority, or those who control the majority here, to decline. It is known that we have been in session day and night, and even Sundays, for the purpose of finishing the business of the Senate. Now, here at half past eleven o'clock—almost midnight—right in the midst of the business of the Senate upon an important revenue measure, which every one supposed was the business of the evening and that nothing else was to come up, to have pressed upon us by surprise a motion to postpone a bill like this, and take up Colorado for a vote to-night, is beyond anything that I could ever have anticipated. Sir, we are not without being observed. The world stands looking on. The people of the United States know what is transpiring in this body; and there are peculiar reasons which connect themselves with the Senator from Ohio, which will draw some attention to him, and to the course he is pursuing on this occasion. We all know, time and again, that Senator, in pressing this matter of Colorado, has said over and over that his purpose was to reinforce a majority in this body, already more than two thirds. And for what, sir?

Mr. WADE. If the Senator will permit me—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Certainly, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WADE. It is said that this is very unusual on my part. Why, sir, I have been up here more than one night, nay, two nights in succession, and the following Sunday, in order to press a question much less meritorious than this. That is not a new thing; but it is a new thing to resist the admission of a State in this way. It never has been done before. Gentlemen resort to unusual means to prevent the wishes of the people of this State or Territory being carried out, but nevertheless many of my friends here do not agree with me; they think the proposition made on the other side is a reasonable one—

Mr. LANE. Take up your bill first.

Mr. WADE. I should like to take up the bill to-night. I do not know, however, that that would make any difference, because it would be superseded by something else.

Mr. JOHNSON. That makes no difference.

Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. LANE. You had better take it up.

Mr. WADE. I do not like the hour that is suggested very well. I suppose Senators on the other side do not care anything about the hour. I do not think the hour mentioned is the best.

Mr. JOHNSON. What hour would you prefer?

Mr. WADE. I should prefer one o'clock rather than half past twelve.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is no objection to that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no objection to fixing that hour. The only reason I suggested half past twelve was because I thought the Senator from Maine would want to go on with the tax bill at one o'clock.

Mr. WADE. Say one o'clock. If it is understood that it shall be taken up then and a vote be had without debate, I will agree to it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I yielded to the Senator from Ohio to allow him to make an explanation. If the proposition is accepted, so far as I am concerned, I do not know that I desire to go any further; though I was remarking in relation to the course of the Senator from Ohio that there are peculiar reasons why not only the members of the Senate, but the whole country have their eyes upon him in relation to this question of Colorado. But, sir, as the proposition is accepted I have nothing further to say. I shall take some other occasion, perhaps, to speak upon it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to address the Senate on this subject—

Mr. HENDERSON. What subject?

Mr. BUCKALEW. The subject of the admission of Colorado as a State.

Mr. WILSON. It is not up now; the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. WADE. I renew the motion if there is no agreement about it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I do not give way to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I had uttered one sentence when the Senator from Ohio arose. I said I should like to address the Senate on this subject; and if the Senator from Ohio had insisted upon his motion, and had been successful, I should have taken the privilege of speaking, endeavoring to condense my remarks within the reasonable limit of a couple of hours, not to waste time, but because the subject admits of legitimate debate. It is only in consequence of the general desire of other members that this subject should go over until to-morrow, and that it should then be voted on without debate, that I waive my privilege, or expect to waive my privilege of speaking.

I believe that the greatest subject that can possibly be considered by the American Congress is legitimate to the discussion of this bill. I do not mean the question whether a State, under the circumstances in which Colorado presents herself, shall be admitted or not; the circumstances attending the formation of her constitution, irregular and without authority of law, as it was; nor whether it is proper to admit that State, notwithstanding the objections of the President of the United States, as stated in his veto message. But, sir, it is a deep-rooted conviction of my mind that political power in this country is unfairly and injuriously lodged, and that without some fundamental amendment it is impossible that our system of republican government should go on permanently. My great objection to the introduction of Colorado and of Nebraska into the Union as States has been that that existing inequality and injustice are thereby increased.

I am not going into a debate upon this great subject which I have suggested; but I desire to say that it is with extreme reluctance that I shall yield my strong desire of traversing this field of debate, which has not been entered upon in the former discussions upon the admissions of these States, and which, in my opinion, constitutes a field of investigation more important, even at this time when other great questions are pressed upon our attention, than any other one possibly can be.

Sir, after the 4th of March next, one million six hundred thousand electors of the United States, representing a population of about eight million people will be represented in this Chamber by two voices only. In all the States of the North and in all the States of the West including the Pacific coast, the only Representatives of the political minority of the country will be the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] and myself. That great mass of intelligent humanity will have two votes in this Chamber, and the two million two hundred thousand that constitute the majority will have about forty. In the other House the case is, if possible, still stronger, because there it is supposed that the popular principle prevails.

I say that if we enter upon this field of debate, which is proper and appropriate upon the consideration of this measure, we have a more important subject presented than any other which is before Congress, a more important subject even than the admission of the southern States. Eight thousand voters in the State of Colorado are to have two votes in this Chamber. Eight thousand voters in Colorado are to have the same weight in the other House that twenty-two thousand in other parts of the country (taking the average ratio) have.

What I meant in rising, however, was to say that upon the first favorable occasion—I shall not embrace this one—I shall desire to be heard by the Senate at length, not for the purpose of complaining of the existing injustice, not for the purpose of pointing out defects in our republican system, not for the purpose of showing that without amendment and without change this experiment of ours must fail, not for the purpose of showing that civil convulsion and war arose from these defects in our system, but for the purpose of directing attention to useful changes, to amelioration, to improvement, by which our political system can have safeguards for its permanence and for its success hereafter. I regret from the bottom of my heart that this Senate is admitting these small States, increasing this existing inequality, accumulating difficulties in the way of reform. But, sir, I know that before the hot and heady passions of the hour—ay, and the interests of the hour—protest will be unavailing; and all that I could accomplish, if I were heard fully to-morrow or upon any other occasion would be to convince thoughtful and honest men in the country that this thing is wrong; it would be impossible to change present votes.

But, sir, the truth, the interests of our people, and the permanence of our institutions demand that this subject should be investigated, and upon the first proper occasion after this, when I shall be within the rules of order, and when remarks from me on this subject will be tolerated by the Senate, I intend to be heard, and to show facts and to discuss principles that are much more worthy of attention, in my opinion, than the current politics of the times. My political passions are not of the warmest and most ardent description; perhaps they are rather lukewarm for a good partisan. I would willingly sacrifice all my connections with party politics and retire cheerfully from public life if I could induce my countrymen to reform those defects in our system out of which existing troubles have arisen, and without the correction of which it is impossible that our system of government should continue successful and glorious in the future.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the bill—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Ohio, to postpone the present and all prior orders, and proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. WADE. In consequence of this arrangement, I am willing to withdraw the motion.

Mr. POMEROY. You had better take up the bill and have it assigned for to-morrow.

Mr. WADE. It is understood that we shall take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion has been made and not withdrawn.

Mr. WADE. I withdraw it if I am permitted to do so.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill of the Senate No. 204 to provide for an annual inspection into Indian affairs, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN A. KASSON of Iowa, Mr. ROBERT C. SCHENCK of Ohio, and Mr. WILLIAM WINDOM of Minnesota, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 746, for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GEORGE W. JULIAN of Indiana, Mr. IGNATIUS DONNELLY of Minnesota, and Mr. STEPHEN TABER of New York, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 598, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THOMAS A. JENCKES of Rhode Island, Mr. HENRY L. DAWES of Massachusetts, and Mr. JOHN L. DAWSON of Pennsylvania, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution of the House, No. 266, granting certain public property to the State of Ohio, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES A. GARFIELD of Ohio, Mr. JAMES G. BLAINE of Maine, and Mr. JOHN W. HUNTER of New York, managers at the same on its part.

And the message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1183) amendatory of an act for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill of the Senate No. 534, to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court, disagreed to by the Senate, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES F. WILSON of Iowa, Mr. THOMAS WILLIAMS of Pennsylvania, and Mr. WILLIAM RADFORD of New York, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House disagreed to the first amendment and agreed to the other amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1154, making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the Senate No. 220, for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels-of-war and steam machinery.

The message further announced that the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1220, to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolutions of the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 588) for the relief of Richard Chenery;

A bill (H. R. No. 1166) to authorize the building of light-houses therein mentioned, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) to pay Lieutenant John H. Hamlin for military services.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 490) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Idaho," approved March 3, 1863; and

A bill (S. No. 590) to provide for a temporary increase of the pay of officers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

CONTRACTORS FOR THE IRON-CLADS.

Mr. HENDRICKS. With the permission of the Senate, I submit the following report from a committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 220) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels-of-war and steam machinery, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate agree to the House amendment with the following amendments:

After the word "same," in the fourth line, insert the words "under contracts made after the 1st day of May, 1861, and prior to the 1st day of January, 1864."

Add to the House amendment the following words: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy, under this resolution, shall investigate the claim of W. H. Webb for constructing the steamer Dunderberg, applying the provisions of this resolution in such investigation, except that proper consideration shall be given to the increased cost incurred by said Webb by reason of any alteration in the plans and specifications for the Dunderberg made during the progress of the work, whether such alterations were provided for in the original contract or not, when payment for the same was not embraced in the contract price."

THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
HENRY B. ANTHONY,
WAITMAN T. WILLEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
ITHAMAR C. SLOAN,
COLUMBUS DELANO,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 950) to amend the organic acts of Arizona and New Mexico—to the Committee on Territories.

A bill (H. R. No. 1063) to regulate and fix the salary of the consul at Hamburg—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (H. R. No. 1121) amendatory of the organic act of Colorado Territory—to the Committee on Territories.

A bill (H. R. No. 1230) for the relief of the widow of Andrew Cunningham—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A bill (H. R. No. 1231) for the relief of Nott & Co.—to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 300) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue third collection district of California—to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 1183) amendatory of an act for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, was read twice by its title.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that that lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate No. 204, to provide for an annual inspection into Indian affairs, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate and insisted on by the House; and.

On motion of Mr. DOOLITTLE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the said bill, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. DOOLITTLE, Mr. POMEROY, and Mr. CATTELL.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 1220) to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and.

On motion by Mr. SHERMAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. SPRAGUE, and Mr. JOHNSON.

GOVERNMENT OF MONTANA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate (S. No. 501) amendatory of an act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Montana, approved May 26, 1864.

The amendment of the House was in section three, line four, to strike out "$4,000" and to insert "$3,500."

Mr. WADE. I move that the Senate concur in that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF CERTAIN PROPERTY TO OHIO.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the joint resolution of the House No. 266, granting certain public property to the State of Ohio, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and upon which the House asked for a committee of conference.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the joint resolution and amendment lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

LAND DISTRICTS IN THE TERRITORIES.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House No. 746, for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. STEWART, Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. PATTERSON.

ALLOTMENT OF JUDGES.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 534) to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court, disagreed to by the Senate and insisted upon by the House; and.

On motion by Mr. TRUMBULL, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the said bill insisted upon by the House, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. TRUMBULL, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. HENDRICKS.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its first amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 1154) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under authority of law, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House.

Mr. RAMSEY. The House have agreed to all our amendments except the first, and I move that the Senate recede from that amendment.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. What is it?

Mr. RAMSEY. A very small amendment relating to Sandusky harbor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the amendment to which the House does not agree be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was on page 3, line eleven, after the word "Sandusky" to insert "harbor, bay, and."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the context be read to show the application of the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The clause in the bill reads, "for improvement of Sandusky river, from Frémont to lake Erie, $20,000." The amendment of the Senate is to insert after the word "Sandusky" the words "harbor, bay, and;" so that it will read: "for improvement of Sandusky harbor, bay, and river from Frémont to lake Erie, $20,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate recede from this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. WILSON. I have two or three amendments that I desire to offer. I will offer one and then move an adjournment, as I understand the Senator from Maine is wearied out. I send the amendment to the desk, which I ask to have read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Insert after line four of section ten: That section one be amended by adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided, That on and after the last day of September, 1867, a tax of two cents per pound only shall be levied, collected, and paid on any cotton produced in the United States."

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at eleven o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 1, 1867.

Prayer by Rev. RUFUS BABCOCK, D. D., of New York.

On motion of Mr. POLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of yesterday's Journal was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 13th of February, information in relation to the amount of fees received by the American consuls general, consuls, consular and commercial agents, and other agents of the Treasury Department in Europe during each of the four years next preceding June 30, 1866, and the amount of money for salaries, compensation, and expenses required to maintain such officers; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. POLAND presented the credentials of Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Vermont, for the term of six years from the 4th day of March, 1867; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1868, reported it with amendments.

SUSPENSION OF JOINT RULES.

Mr. FESSENDEN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules of the two Houses be suspended for the residue of the session.

The sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules are:

"16. No bill that shall have passed one House shall be sent to the other on either of the last three days of the session.

"17. No bill or resolution that shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall be presented to the President of the United States for his approbation on the last day of the session."

DUTIES ON WOOL AND WOOLENS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to discharge the Committee on Finance from the further consideration of House bill No. 793, which is entitled "A bill to provide increased revenue from imported wool, and for other purposes."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill being now before the Senate, I propose to offer an amendment to it, striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting what I send to the desk. I will state that the bill itself is a bill which was passed by the House of Representatives at the last session, proposing to increase the duties on wool and woollen goods to correspond with the House tariff bill on that subject. I propose now, by direction of the Committee on Finance, to amend it by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the precise phraseology adopted in the Senate bill on that subject. As this question has already been gone over in detail, and is fully understood, I think we can act upon it and take the vote at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill from the consideration of which the Committee on Finance has just been discharged, and in connection with that subject the Senator from Ohio offers an amendment to the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is that in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is, Will the Senate now proceed to consider the bill?

Mr. GRIMES. I inquire whether the Senator from Ohio proposes that we shall proceed with the consideration of this bill without having it printed or knowing anything about it?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is printed. The Senator has a printed bill on his files word for word just what this is. We have not varied it.

Mr. GRIMES. Printed in what form?

Mr. SHERMAN. Printed in the form in which it came to us from the House, and printed in the precise form which I now offer.

Mr. GRIMES. What I want to know is, in what shape the Senator offers a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is printed precisely as I offer it.

Mr. GRIMES. When was it printed?

Mr. SHERMAN. It was printed the other day. I offer precisely the wool part of the tariff bill as we passed it some weeks ago. It was printed by the House precisely as we sent it to them. The Senator can send a page to the document-room and get a copy of it.

Mr. GRIMES. I think it would be well enough for us to be able to understand what this thing is before we are called upon to act on it. I have not seen the bill which the Senator proposes as a substitute, and I do not know anything about it. I had no idea that any such proposition as this was going to be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. When the bill is taken up I will explain it so that every Senator will have no trouble in knowing all about it.

Mr. GRIMES. I have no doubt the Senator will explain it very satisfactorily to himself and those who may be in favor of the proposition, and perhaps I may be in favor of it eventually; but I should like to see the proposition before me so that I can judge for myself.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will tell the Senator precisely the history of it, if it is in order for me to do so now. The House of Representatives at the last session sent us a general tariff bill. After the Senate had postponed the consideration of that bill until the present session, the House followed it with a bill which embraced that portion of the general tariff bill which affected wool and woollens alone, with slight modifications. That bill is still pending in the Senate, we never having taken any action upon it, because having taken up the general tariff bill at this session we disposed of the wool and woollen question in that bill. Now, the tariff bill having been defeated in the other House, an effort is being made to pass it so far as relates to wool and woollens. The Senate Committee on Finance propose the Senate bill on that subject as a substitute for the House bill. That is all there is in this question. Both propositions are printed and the Senator can get them in the very form that they are now presented to the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. But we do not know now the exact form in which the tariff bill went from the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is printed.

Mr. GRIMES. We had the original tariff bill in print, but I have never seen the tariff bill in print just as we passed it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was printed by the House of Representatives in that shape.

Mr. GRIMES. Where is it?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can get the Senator a copy if he wants one. There are plenty in the document-room.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to see it before I proceed to consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question upon the motion of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not understand how this bill can come up again in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has not yet come up; the motion is to take it up. On the motion of the Senator from Ohio, the Committee on Finance was discharged from its further consideration, and that Senator then proposed an amendment to the bill. The Chair regarded that as equivalent to a motion that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill, and that is the motion before the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The question which I wish to ask the Chair is, whether that is a House bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Did not the Senate substitute for that bill another bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall have to make the same explanation to my friend from Indiana that I just did to my friend from Iowa. There were two bills passed by the House at the last session. The first was the general tariff bill; but the Senate postponed that until the present session, and then the House passed another bill, containing the same phraseology as to wool and woollens, but confined to that subject, and that bill has lain in our committee ever since. The tariff bill having been defeated, we now feel bound to take up the House wool and woollens bill; and we propose to amend it by substituting the very words which were inserted in the tariff bill in regard to the duties on wool and woollens. The whole subject has been debated at great length, and I supposed, the Senate having previously acted on this very matter, there would be no controversy, but that we would at once send back the House bill on the subject of wool and woollens with our amendment, and give them the opportunity of agreeing to it if they can. The whole subject has been debated and gone over, and there is no necessity for consuming time with it now.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suppose this particular bill which the Senator now proposes to call up, has never been debated in the Senate, on the statement he makes. I did not know there was such a bill pending before the body. I think it is a remarkable proposition to take up a tariff bill on Friday, when we necessarily adjourn the day after to-morrow or the next day, with a view to its passage. I do not think the revenue laws should be changed in any such manner as that. I hope the bill will not be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Can a bill be considered the same day it is reported?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not reported it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has not been reported. The Committee on Finance has been discharged from its further consideration, and the motion is that the Senate now proceed to its consideration.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Was the committee discharged to-day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was discharged to-day.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask if that is not a report from the committee to be discharged from the consideration of the bill, and if it can be considered to-day?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not make any report on the subject. The action that was taken was done on my own motion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But it discharged the committee. Now, I ask, can it be called up the same day?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have seen it done often. My impression was that the motion to discharge the committee brought the bill directly before the Senate; but if the Presiding Officer thinks not, I acquiesce.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have a rule—I do not remember the number of it—which declares that no bill shall be considered on the same day that it comes from a committee; I cannot give the precise language of it. If this bill now comes from the committee, can a majority take it up to-day?

Mr. SUMNER. I was going to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the precise fact that the Senator from Illinois alludes to. It seems to me that his motion cannot be made without jumping over one of the most fixed rules of the Senate. A bill cannot be considered the same day it is reported except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a mistake in regard to the rule. The rule simply applies to reports of committees, and requires that they must lie over one day. If the committee reported this bill to-day, it must lie over at the request of any Senator until to-morrow. I, however, submitted a motion that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill. That was agreed to, and that brought the bill directly before the Senate. The Senate may now either postpone it till to-morrow or take it up and act on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the motion to take up the bill is in order. As, however, regards proceeding with it, the Chair does think that it comes under the spirit of the twenty-sixth rule with reference to action on bills, joint resolutions, &c., the latter clause of the rule being—

"And all other resolutions shall lie on the table one day for consideration; and also reports from committees."

This, it is true, is not a report from a committee. The committee has been discharged from the consideration of the bill; and it therefore comes into the possession of the Senate, but under the same limitations, in the opinion of the Chair as regards action upon it, as though it had been reported from a committee. The reason of the rule is the same in both cases. The Chair thinks, therefore, that it is obnoxious to the objection that it cannot be considered to-day unless by unanimous consent. Still the Chair is of opinion that the motion to take up the bill is in order, because until the question is put on that motion the point for an objection hardly arises.

Mr. SHERMAN. I insist on my motion. It is a question for the majority of the Senate to decide whether they will proceed with the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill

(H. R. No. 793) to provide increased revenue from imported wool, and for other purposes, is now before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole. It will be read.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object to the further consideration of the bill. After it has been once read, I object to more than one reading of it to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill was read twice before it was referred to the Committee on Finance, and is now upon its third reading. It is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. The practice has been very often to discharge a committee of the body and at once consider the bill. I have seen it done here frequently without objection. The point has never been raised. The rule is intended to prevent a committee from bringing a subject before the Senate without the consent of the Senate; but here is a motion made by a member of the Senate, not the report of a committee, but a motion by a member to take up a particular bill. It is true that bill is in the committee, but that makes no difference. It is always within the power of the Senate to take up any bill. A committee cannot by its report force a subject upon the Senate; but the body, at any time, by a majority vote, can take up any bill on its Calendar, whether it be in a committee or elsewhere. That is the plain, manifest meaning of the rule. Two readings of a bill cannot be had on the same day if objection be made; but this bill has already been read twice, and it is now open for amendment.

I do not want to debate the question. I trust if a majority of the Senate are in favor of an increased duty on wool and woollens we may have some decisive vote to test that matter without discussion. If a majority of the Senate are not in favor of passing this bill substantially as it passed the Senate, and in the same words that it passed the Senate, we may as well know it, and then of course we shall make no further effort to get it before the body.

Mr. CRESWELL. I should like to propound a question to the honorable gentleman from Ohio, and that is, whether we are to understand by the fact that he presses this measure this morning that all the rest of the tariff measure is abandoned by the Committee on Finance?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not say anything of the kind.

Mr. CRESWELL. I make that inquiry.

Mr. SHERMAN. When the bill is taken up the Senator can move any amendment he chooses, and then the question will arise what amendments ought to be made.

Mr. CRESWELL. That is no answer to my question.

Mr. SHERMAN. My desire is to see this passed substantially without any change, as the Senate passed it before.

Mr. CRESWELL. Precisely; but my question is still unanswered.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is it?

Mr. CRESWELL. I ask if we are to understand by the fact that the gentleman representing the Finance Committee of the Senate presses this bill this morning, that the residue of the tariff measure is to be considered as abandoned by that committee?

Mr. SHERMAN. I cannot speak for the Committee on Finance on that matter; I speak for myself. I want to get all of it that I can get. I am in favor of the passage of this bill relative to the duties on wool and woollens without any further amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to address an inquiry to the Senator from Ohio. If he is anxious that there shall be a bill passed for the benefit of wool and woollens, why is he not content to take the House bill without amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should prefer to do it myself individually; but I do not think I can get that. I always like to accomplish what I can. If I cannot get all I want, I take the best I can get.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to know how the Senator is satisfied that he cannot get that, and why he proposes this, so as to open the whole question for consideration and amendment, thus enabling a new tariff to be made by the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. I propose to take up the House bill. When it shall be taken up, it will be for the Senate to say what amendments, if any, shall be made to it.

Mr. GRIMES. I know that the Senator proposes to take up the House bill; but at the same time he proposes an amendment to the House bill changing it entirely.

Mr. SHERMAN. I intend to stand by the action of the Senate. If the Senate choose to vote me down on that question, be it so. I feel that we have considered this subject, and ought to stand by the deliberate action of the Senate, although I should personally prefer the House bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I understand that the bill which the Senator from Ohio proposes to take up is the bill that was passed by the House at the last session, and is now on the table and our action upon which, if we pass it as it came from the House, makes it a law.

Mr. SHERMAN. If we pass it without amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Perhaps it may be as well to explain just how this matter stands. The proposition of the Committee on Finance, so far as they have taken any action, is to pass, instead of the House bill as it stands, the bill that the Senate acted upon deliberately, on the subject of wool and woollens, and adopt that, thinking it to be a better bill, more elaborated, and protecting the interests of woolen manufacturers and wool-growers quite as well and perhaps better. There are two consequences involved. We can take up the House bill on wool and woollens and pass it precisely as it passed the House in totidem verbis if the Senate sees fit, and the result of that is necessarily an abandonment of all the rest of the tariff measure.

Mr. CRESWELL. So I supposed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But if the bill is amended, as proposed by the Committee on Finance, by substituting for it the bill which the Senate passed on the subject of wool and woollens, it will go back to the House of Representatives, and then the House can put any amendment on our amendment that they see fit to do. In the one case we get a bill for the protection of wool and woollens alone and nothing else; and in the other we have a chance to extend protection to other interests. That is the simple state of the case.

Mr. CONNESS. In either case, then, I submit to the honorable Senator, we had better proceed with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot consent to allow it to be proceeded with beyond one o'clock, because that would be an abandonment of the tax bill.

Mr. CONNESS. It is not possible that Senators desire to debate this question. I think they are prepared to vote upon the proposition.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senate is in a condition that I never saw it in yet during all the fourteen years I have been here, if they are prepared to act on the suggestion of the Senator from California. I never yet saw a measure of this sort, or of any other kind, that was allowed to be passed without debate, on the ground that it had been fully debated before. We took up the tax bill yesterday, and it is yet undisposed of. We ought to pass it to-day, if it is to be passed at all. It will be entitled to precedence at one o'clock. I cannot yield it to the wool bill, unless I am compelled to do so by the vote of the Senate, because it would be virtually to destroy the tax bill, which we have a very much better chance to pass than we have to pass the other.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to say to the Senator that I am not prepared to vote to put the tax bill aside, but will vote with him to proceed with its consideration when the proper time comes. I propose simply that, without further discussion about the order of business, we proceed to vote on this other bill if we can.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator will persuade all the Senate to that course I shall not object.

Mr. CONNESS. I think the Senator with his fourteen years' experience must be ready for an improvement this morning, and I hope he will witness it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That remains to be seen. There will be no speech from me on the subject.

Mr. CONNESS. Nor from me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand the question of order was decided by the Chair that the bill could not be considered if objection was made. Are we going on with the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair decided that a motion to take up the bill was in order, because objection could not very well be made to its consideration until it was taken up. The Chair, therefore, put the question to the Senate, on taking up the bill, and the Senate voted to take it up. It is up, and its reading has been directed. No objection has yet been made to proceeding with the bill. The reading will therefore be continued.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. My purpose is to offer amendments in detail to make this bill correspond precisely to the Senate bill. I therefore move to strike out the clause with regard to Wilton, Saxon, Aubusson, and other carpets of various kinds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The portion of the bill proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

On Aubusson and Auxminster carpets, and carpets woven whole for rooms, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, wrought by the Jacquard machine, seventy cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on Brussels carpets wrought by the Jacquard machine, forty-four cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on patent velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, printed on the warp or otherwise, forty cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on tapestry Brussels carpets, printed on the warp or otherwise, twenty-eight cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on treble ingrain, three-ply, and worsted chain Venetian carpets, seventeen cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on yarn Venetian and two-ply ingrain carpets, twelve cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on druggets and bookings, printed, colored, or otherwise, twenty-five cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on hemp and jute carpeting, eight cents per square yard; on carpets and carpetings of wool, flax, or cotton, or parts of either, or other material not otherwise herein specified, forty per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That mats, rugs, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, and other portions of carpets or carpeting shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description, and that the duty on all other mats, (not exclusively of vegetable material,) screens, hassocks, and rugs, shall be forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. SHERMAN. And in lieu of those words I propose to insert the following:

On Wilton, Saxony, and Aubusson, Axminster, patent velvet, Tournay velvet, and tapestry velvet carpets and carpetings, Brussels carpets, wrought by the Jacquard machine, and all medallion, or whole carpets, valued at $1 25 or under per square yard, eighty cents per square yard; valued at over $1 25 per square yard, ninety cents per square yard: Provided, That no carpeting, carpets, or rugs of the foregoing descriptions shall pay a duty of less than fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On Brussels and tapestry Brussels carpets and carpetings, printed on the warp or otherwise, sixty cents per square yard.

On all treble ingrain, three-ply, and worsted chain Venetian carpets and carpetings, forty-five cents per square yard.

On yarn Venetian and two-ply ingrain carpets and carpeting, thirty-five cents per square yard.

On druggets, baizes, and bookings, and felt carpets and carpeting, printed, colored, or otherwise, twenty-five cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty per cent. ad valorem; on carpets and carpetings of wool, flax, or cotton, or parts of either, or other material not otherwise herein specified, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That mats, rugs, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, and other portions of carpets or carpeting shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description, and that the duty on all other mats, (not exclusively of vegetable material,) screens, hassocks, and carpet, and door rugs, shall be forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

I ought to explain that this is a reduction of the rates proposed by the House. The House schedule of duties on carpets was materially reduced by the Senate committee, and in carrying out the view I expressed awhile ago, I make this motion to adopt the duties proposed by the Senate on carpets instead of the duties proposed by the House. Senators may find it in the Senate printed bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If I understand this amendment, it is to insert in lieu of the bill known as the Bingham bill the Senate bill on the same subject as we passed it some days ago in the general tariff bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. A portion of it, not the whole.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know it is not all the bill that we passed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is in this particular about carpets.

Mr. TRUMBULL. In the short time that I have had since this matter was called up I have been unable to compare these two bills together; but they are designed to accomplish about the same object, as I understand: to afford protection to the wool-growers and also to the manufacturers of wool. The House has passed a bill on that subject. A great many of my constituents have written to me about it, particularly in regard to wool. They have had meetings of wool-growers' associations in Illinois, and they have been content to abide by the bill as it came from the House. The bill has been discussed by them, and I understand it is satisfactory to them; at least they are willing to take it; and if we are to pass any bill on the subject I should greatly prefer to take the House bill.

Mr. CONNESS. This is more favorable to the wool-growers.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Well, suppose it is; they are satisfied with the bill as it passed the House; at least my constituents are, although the amendment of the Senate may be more favorable to them, as the Senator from California says. I have not had time to compare them together and to state upon an examination of my own how that is. Doubtless the Senator from California is correct. He probably has compared them. But my constituents, so far as I know their views, would be satisfied with what was known as the Bingham bill on this subject. I shall, therefore, vote against any of these amendments, and hope the Senate will consent to take the bill as it passed the House of Representatives. If the Senate amendment is more favorable to those whom I represent, and who have taken a particular interest in this matter, I can only say they are willing to rest content with the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. If we send this bill back to the House we run this hazard: they may put upon it just what they please, perhaps the whole tariff bill that passed and was sent to us at the last session, perhaps our tariff bill as we passed it, and we shall thus have the whole subject back again, and the result will be that you will accomplish nothing. Now, if it is desirable to pass any bill on this subject, we make that certain by taking the House bill as it passed.

Mr. CONNESS. Let us vote.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from California says, "Let us vote." I did not rise with a view of taking up time, but merely to state that I shall vote against this amendment and all amendments, because I prefer taking the bill as it passed the House rather than to run the hazard of losing any bill, and because I think that bill would be satisfactory to the people whom I represent, who are interested in this matter.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to say to the Senator that it is the purpose, or at any rate if not the purpose it is the intention, of some to do the very thing which he has suggested. I apprehend there is an amendment in the hands of a Senator here ready to be offered the moment an amendment shall be made to this bill, and he can get an opportunity to offer it, to raise the duties twenty per cent. upon all articles that are now dutiable, except tea, sugar, coffee, and salt. If that is adopted, it goes to the House for concurrence. If that is not adopted here, either that proposition will be made or the House bill will be added to it in the House of Representatives without requiring the two-thirds majority that is now required under their rules, and then the whole question goes to a committee of conference, and the committee of conference make the tariff bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WILSON. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. I should prefer to vote for the House bill as it came from the House, with a slight amendment that may be made to it. I do not wish to vote for this amendment as now proposed. I prefer the original bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The friends of this bill ought to understand the matter distinctly. If they divide in regard to these amendments that is the end of the effort to pass a bill relative to the duty on wool. Personally, I prefer to take the House bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Why not do so?

Mr. SHERMAN. Simply because I do not believe the majority will agree to it. If the question could be taken now, and the majority should prefer to pass the House bill, well and good. But there ought to be some modifications in the House bill; and we made them very carefully. They are generally in the interest of the consumer. The very amendment I now propose reduces considerably the duties on carpets; and yet the Senator from Illinois objects to that, although his constituents use the carpet and do not make any of it. That seems strange to me. It is natural that the Senator from Massachusetts should object. I intend myself to offer the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts and ingrafted on the tariff bill. Now, he ought to take the thing either upon one aspect or the other. If he wants the duty on a certain class of woollen goods increased a little, I propose to agree to that. I have got an amendment prepared to satisfy his views. In other words, I propose to offer his amendment to satisfy the interest which he says will be very unjustly dealt with by the House bill. But the Senator from Illinois objects to a bill that reduces the duty on carpets. The people of Illinois consume them and do not produce them. It is evident we must take one thing or the other; either take the House bill without any amendment whatever, or else we must take it with the amendments that have been carefully considered in the Committee on Finance, carefully considered in the Senate, and which improve the bill vastly. I do not care which course is pursued. If we take the House bill singly and alone it passes without any further difficulty.

Mr. CATTELL. I desire to notice the statements made by the Senator from Ohio. The reason that the amendments are proposed here is simply because the Senate fully discussed this question, and made improvements in the House bill, a very important one of which was made on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON.] The whole question has been thoroughly discussed by the Senate, and by a large vote our bill was passed, and those in the Finance Committee who were in favor of relieving the oppressed industries of the country thought it best to suggest that the Senate take their own action so far as wool and woollens were concerned. The whole question was discussed here, and a very important amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts was adopted. If you take the House bill you leave out that amendment. Now, the whole object of the movers of this measure is simply this: the tariff bill which has been so long discussed here, and which was passed by so large a vote, having failed in the House, they desire that something shall be done, and done promptly, in these two last days of the session to relieve the oppressed industrial interests of the country.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him is it intended to put the Senate bill entire on this bill?

Mr. CATTELL. No, sir; and while I am on my feet I will say in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa that I do hold in my hand an amendment which it will be at the option of the Senate to adopt or not when we shall have arrived at the proper time to offer it, a simple amendment increasing by a percentage the duties upon imported manufactured goods. That will be a question for the Senate to determine.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator read it?

Mr. CATTELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONNESS. Not now.

Mr. CATTELL. I will send it to the Secretary's desk; but I apprehend it has no relation to the question now under consideration.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to know what it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us go through with the question before us first.

Mr. GRIMES. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. CATTELL, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That from and after ten days from the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, and merchandise not herein provided for imported into the United States from foreign countries and now subject to duty under existing laws, an additional duty of one fifth, or twenty per cent. of the duty or rates of duty, including specific and ad valorem rates now imposed by law upon such goods, wares, and merchandise: Provided, That no additional duty shall be levied, collected, or paid on sugar, molasses, tea, coffee, salt, lumber, coal, and railroad iron.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It seems to me to be a clearer and safer plan not to make any amendments to this bill as it came from the House. The bill is reasonably fair as it stands in regard to these matters, and if we do not amend the text of the bill as it stands it will simplify matters. If we vote down this proposed amendment, and then the additional amendment to be proposed by the Senator from New Jersey, these two votes may dispose of the whole subject. It is possible that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to the text of the bill from the House of Representatives would benefit it; but it will complicate matters. By adhering to the bill as it came from the House in its text, and then taking a direct and single vote upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey, it seems to me you will much simplify the matter. If there be any reason for this particular amendment it can be made at the next session. That seems to me to be the better way.

Mr. JOHNSON. So far as I am able to judge from the signs of the times, the West is now very much against the protective system, and in all probability that opinion will become a fixed one in the West. The West now are in favor of protecting the woolen interest because they want to have protected the wool-growing interest. If this bill, therefore, passes in the shape in which it came from the House in all human probability no tariff can hereafter be passed which will protect any other interest. I think, therefore, the members of the Senate who are of opinion, as I am, that there are other interests that ought to be protected, ought to take care so to act on the bill before it as to enable the House or to enable the Senate to provide a protection for other industries that I think stand as much in need of it as the woolen interest. I am not against protecting the woolen interest. I shall vote, therefore, with pleasure for the amendment suggested by the Committee on Finance; but I cannot vote for the bill as it came from the House, and leave the other interests of the country to be acted upon adversely or not, as those who are apparently opposed to the other interests may hereafter think proper.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not think the Senator from Maryland understood me. I do not propose to avoid a direct vote upon the proposition to increase the tariff upon anything besides what is contained in the House bill as it stands. Let us suppose that the House bill as it came to us is, on the particular subject referred to in it, a reasonably good one. My proposition is that we do not amend that at all in its text; but let the Senator from New Jersey offer his proposition to increase by twenty per cent. the duties upon everything else except certain specified articles, and then the sense of the Senate can be taken upon that proposition. If that proposition be added to the bill as it came from the House then the question will be for the Senate to determine whether they will make this general increase or not; and Senators who believe that that general increase will be beneficial will vote for it, while those who are opposed to it will vote against it. I do not desire to avoid a vote upon the general proposition at all.

It may be as well for me to say also, as I am classed perhaps among those who are opposed to an increase of the tariff, that I really do not occupy that position. I have said in conversation, and say now publicly, that I regard the bill we passed here as the fairest bill to western interests, so far as my knowledge extends, we have ever had. I voted against it, because I thought it too high, not because I was against affording protection to our manufacturers to an extent that I thought proper and right. But I think we shall simplify our action, and, perhaps, get on the whole as good a bill, by not changing at all this bill as it came from the House, and taking a direct vote on the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HOWE. I apprehend the Senator from Maryland somewhat mistakes the position of the West, to which he has referred. Undoubtedly the West is in favor of the protection of the wool-growers and of the wool manufacturers, what he calls the woolen interest; but only in favor of it because they are legitimate branches of American industry. I do not think the West has any idea of securing protection to those two branches of American industry, and of destroying every other branch of American industry and driving labor into those two occupations. I think the West, while it would encourage these productions, would be willing to encourage every other legitimate branch of American industry; and I do not think it is worth while to attempt to put the West under bonds to favor any other branch of American industry. Therefore I think we may act, and I think the East may vote according to its convictions of duty and its convictions of the public interest upon the bill now before the Senate, without any danger that they will lose any strength in the West for other interests that may be proposed for protection hereafter. But it does seem to me that in this very late hour of the session we had better try to secure this much of protection and this much of additional revenue that is promised in the bill before us. Then I should be very glad to see the proposition suggested by the Senator from New Jersey put into a separate bill; let that be submitted to the Senate, and let it go to the House, if the Senate agree to it.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO—VETO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. WADE. There was an arrangement made last night that at this hour we should take up and vote upon the bill for the admission of Colorado into the Union. I therefore move that the unfinished business and all other business be laid aside informally, and that we take up that bill and have a vote upon it. I suppose there is to be no debate about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. The understanding was that there was to be no debate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I shall not object to that, as it was an understanding of the Senate, provided the unfinished business, being the act to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, does not lose its place. If it can be laid aside informally, so that it will be the business before the Senate after the vote is taken on the Colorado question, I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill before the Senate, being House bill No. 1161, can be laid aside by unanimous consent, and the subject named by the Senator from Ohio be proceeded with.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And when that is finished it will be the order of business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so if laid aside informally by unanimous consent. It is moved that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Ohio, the bill returned by the President of the United States, with his objections, for the admission of the Territory of Colorado into the Union as a State.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? and upon this question the yeas and nays must be taken by the provision of the Constitution.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, Riddle, and Saulsbury—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Fogg, Guthrie, and Sumner—4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 29, the nays are 19. Two thirds not having voted for the passage of the bill, it does not become a law.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a resolution suspending the sixteenth and seventeenth Rules of the two Houses for the residue of the session, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution of the House No. 205, for the erection of an equestrian statue in memory of Brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 588) for the relief of Richard Cheney;

A bill (H. R. No. 1166) to authorize the building of light-houses therein mentioned, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) for the erection of an equestrian statue in memory of Brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 222) prohibiting payments by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 268) to pay Lieutenant John H. Hamlin for military services.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GRIMES presented a petition of honorably discharged soldiers, late of the Army of the United States, praying for the passage of the bill, now pending in Congress, providing for the allowance of eight and one third dollars per month to all honorably discharged soldiers of the Army for the suppression of the rebellion for the term of their respective service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. POMEROY presented a copy of an act of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, relieving the incompetent Wyandotte Indians from the restrictions imposed upon them by the fourth article of the treaty of January 31, 1865, and subjecting them to the laws of the State of Kansas relating to the descent of property and the conveyance of lands; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of the payment to certain soldiers of company G, eighth regiment Kansas volunteers, first Army corps, of the amount of bounty money to which they are entitled, and which they failed to receive, as is alleged, through the fraud or negligence of an officer and authorized agent of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of an appropriation for the erection of suitable buildings at Leavenworth, in that State, for a custom-house and post office; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. STEWART presented resolutions of the Legislature of Nevada, in favor of increasing the size and capacity of the mint now being erected at Carson City; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 270) for the relief of J. H. Riley, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; which was agreed to.

Mr. CRESWELL, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 899) in relation to the revenue-cutter service, reported it with an amendment.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print additional copies of the Report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1866, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment, and to ask its present consideration. The amendment makes the resolution precisely similar to the one we pass every year.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That five thousand additional copies of the Report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1866 be printed, two thousand for the use of the Institution, and three thousand for the use of the Senate, and that said report be stereotyped.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the aggregate number of pages contained in said Report shall not exceed four hundred and fifty pages, without wood cuts or plates except those furnished by the Institution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

SUSPENSION OF JOINT RULES.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to take up the resolution that has come from the House suspending the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules for the last three days of the session.

There being no objection the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring.) That the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules of the two Houses be suspended for the remainder of the present session of Congress.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate concur in that resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF THE TWENTY-SIXTH RULE.

Mr. DIXON. I submit the following resolution with regard to the order of business, which I desire to have laid upon the table for the present:

Resolved, That the twenty-sixth special rule of the Senate, with the exception of the last sentence of the same, be suspended during the remainder of the present session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be laid upon the table.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I find that other engagements will prevent me from serving on the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th of June, 1868. I am already on two other committees of conference, and I trust the Chair will relieve me from this one and appoint somebody else.

The question being put, Mr. SHERMAN was excused.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the vacancy in the committee of conference be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WILLIAMS.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 32) to prevent the absence of territorial officers from their official duties;

A bill (S. No. 460) in relation to persons imprisoned under sentence for offenses against the laws of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 547) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the reversion to the United States of the land granted by Congress to aid in the construction of a railroad from Amboy, by Hillsdale and Lansing, to some point at or near Traverse bay, in the State of Michigan, and for the completion of said road," approved July 8, 1866; and

A bill (S. No. 550) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia," approved June 25, 1866.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1233) to establish certain offices for the assay of gold and silver in lieu of certain branch mints heretofore established; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 301) in relation to the laws passed by the Legislature of the Territory of New Mexico.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I call for the order of the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the following amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON,] to add to section one the following proviso:

Provided, That on and after the 1st day of September, 1867, a tax of two cents per pound only shall be levied, collected, and paid on any cotton produced within the United States.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that I think this amendment ought to be adopted. If we have a large crop, say three million bales of cotton, the price must fall, and the tax as now fixed by law will be very heavy. This tax was fixed at a time when the price of cotton was very high; and I think it would be liberal and just to make this reduction of one third upon the tax after September next. I do not wish to take up any time in discussing it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will merely say that this matter was discussed somewhat in the Finance Committee, and the committee concluded that it was best to leave the tax for the present as it was, whether we have an increased crop or not. If we have a large crop, of course the price will fall. It is a matter about which I have no particular feeling, and cannot tell one way or the other what will be best. I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon it. It is a very important question. I think it would be likely to create difficulty, and one great difficulty about it is that it would be likely to embarrass the passage of the bill at this late stage of the session.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment as a substitute, which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend it by adding:

And provided further, That no tax shall be levied or collected on cotton grown after the passage of this act.

Mr. HENDERSON. My design was to offer it as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. However, it may be added to it. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes that after this date a tax of two cents shall be levied on cotton. That would apply to the present crop now in the hands of planters. My amendment is not inconsistent, however, with his. It is that after the passage of this act no tax shall be levied upon cotton grown hereafter; that is, upon the coming crop, the crop that will be planted in the course of the next month or two. I do not know that it is at all inconsistent, and it may very well be added to the amendment. I call for the reading of the Senator's amendment.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. WILSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to strike out all after the word "that" in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, and to insert:

No tax shall be levied or collected on cotton grown after the passage of this act.

Mr. WILSON. The tax now is three cents a pound. I propose to amend it so that it shall be only two cents after the 1st of September, and the Senator from Missouri proposes to make all cotton grown after the passage of this act free. It is a plain question. I think we ought to have some tax, but I think we ought to make a reduction.

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer my amendment as a substitute for the Senator's amendment, and that will leave the present crop to be taxed at three cents. The Senator will see that his amendment might operate unjustly. If the tax has been paid upon a portion of the crop heretofore grown, it would be but just that the same tax should hereafter be paid upon that crop. I have no objection to subjecting the existing crop already grown, now in the hands of the planters, to the tax of three cents; that is, to make it equal upon all planters.

Mr. JOHNSON. Do you think we have the authority to impose it?

Mr. HENDERSON. No, sir, I do not; but as the Senate has so decided, and the legislation of the country has so fixed it, I would not make a discrimination between them, and the Senator will see that possibly it might operate in that way. My amendment is perfectly just, because the planter's hereafter will grow the cotton with a full knowledge that no tax is to be levied upon it.

Mr. President, I will make but one remark with reference to this matter. It seems to me the strangest policy in the world to levy this tax. I cannot understand it. Senators differ with me in regard to the propriety of it; but I can state, from some knowledge which I have on this subject, that unless an amendment of this sort be adopted to this bill or some other bill, and some encouragement for the production of cotton in the southern States shall be held out to the planters, but very little cotton will be grown the coming year. It is an interest that we ought rather to foster than to burden. In my judgment, it would be better for this Congress to pay a premium or a bonus for the growth of cotton than to tax it. That is my honest judgment. I take into consideration the present condition of our finances; I take into consideration the condition of the country in the South, where there is almost starvation existing, and it is threatened to become even more alarming than it is now; I take into consideration the condition of the negro population in the South, to whom we are annually appropriating large sums of money; and I would rather encourage them to support and take care of themselves in this way.

Last year numbers of men from my State went to the southern States to grow cotton; and each and every one of them, so far as my knowledge extends, came home a broken merchant. The production of cotton in the present state of affairs, with the present legislation, with the incubus of this tax resting upon it, will not be carried on to any very great extent in the southern States. We need it because it is an article upon which we can build up exchange and restore the disordered condition of our finances. We need some two or three hundred million dollars as an exchange in Europe made upon the sale of this article, and we should encourage its growth and exportation. Instead of sending our bonds to Europe to be hawked about in the markets to create an exchange for our merchants and business men to draw upon, we should encourage the production of an article which can be made better and cheaper in this country than in any other part of the world. In the present condition of labor in the South, the southern country now threatened to be flooded with the rise of waters in the western rivers, and with the general poverty existing among the planters and the negroes, I for one believe that it would be the best possible stroke of policy on the part of Congress to adopt this amendment.

One other idea and I shall have done. We complain now that the southern people are still rebellious in their disposition; that they have not accepted the situation; that they are still opposed to the Union. Will not the adoption of this amendment tend to send among the people of the South a large immigration? Northern people will go there to produce this article of cotton. They will be tempted to go there by the idea of profit; and all who go there will carry with them the sentiments of attachment, as we suppose at least entertained by the people of the North to the Union. Will it not have a tendency to mix and commingle the people of the North and of the South, and to do away with much of this clannish and separate feeling which originally brought about the war, and which in our judgment yet threatens to keep up an ill-feeling between the North and South?

I do sincerely hope that this amendment may be adopted. The small sum that we collect from the article is no consideration at all in comparison with the great injury that we inflict upon the country at large. It is demanded, in my judgment, by the manufacturers themselves. Every manufacturer of the northern States should be in favor of taking this tax from the raw material. And let me suggest that there is not a tax levied upon an agricultural product except this one. It is often supposed that we have levied it, because it is the only article from which we can get a large tax from the southern States. It has been said that we get no tax from the rebellious States except upon the article of cotton. That may be so. We may get, and we do get, but a small tax on this article, and the reason is quite apparent. We shall get but little revenue from there until we revive the industry of the South, until we carry back there again the hum of industry, until we make the people contented and satisfied, and get them to till the soil as they formerly did, because the cultivation of the soil is the most profitable pursuit in those States. They can grow an article of cotton better than is grown anywhere else. If we encourage the growth of cotton we encourage all branches of industry in the southern States. We then make it necessary to grow sugar. We then make it necessary to build up manufactures there. We then make it necessary for those people, and we enable them thereby, to buy the manufactures of the northern States, and in that way we benefit not alone the people of the South, but in my judgment we benefit the people of other sections of the Union more than we benefit the people of the South. I have said enough, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have two objections to the tax on cotton. The first is that I do not believe we have the power to impose it; and that is a question which I have examined with as much care as I could, and formed very deliberately that opinion. The next is that if we have the power it is very bad policy to exercise it at this time, for the reasons stated by the honorable Senator from Missouri. We are now called upon to protect, and the Senate has protected by passing the tariff bill, and a large majority of the Senate are willing, I am sure, to protect, nearly all the manufacturing interests of the country, and what may be called the agricultural interest of the country. We are now called upon to protect the wool-growing interest, which is a very large and increasing one. But here is a commodity much more important to the United States, in my judgment, than the woolen interest; and particularly in the present condition of the country. We are imposing a tax which, I have information as well as the honorable member from Missouri, has tended very much to diminish the growth of cotton, and which promises to defeat it altogether if the tax shall be continued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is to take off all the tax.

Mr. HENDERSON. On all cotton grown after this date; but to leave it on the present crop. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Foster, Fowler, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Nesmith, Patterson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, Willey, and Williams—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Conness, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Grimes, Harris, Kirkwood, Morgan, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Cowan, Craig, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Howard, Howe, Lane, McDougall, Morrill, Norton, and Poland—14.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, and upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I have had some experience in the planting of cotton for the last three years, and I have yet to learn of a single instance where the money invested in that enterprise has brought any profitable return. I know of no agricultural interest except that which has not brought a profitable return, and I know of no other agricultural interest in this country to-day that suffers under the burden of a tax of this description. Under those circumstances, it seems to me very clear that there should be some reduction of this tax. If it is wise to encourage the cultivation of cotton, it is certainly unwise to impose this burden upon it that will prevent its cultivation. Sir, you depend entirely upon this product to pay your indebtedness. Without it your country is to-day bankrupt in every particular. As certainly as you continue the burden to the extent that you have for the past three or four years, so certainly will you curtail its production and drive it out of the producing States of the country; and it is well that you may be warned in time. I speak, sir, from a knowledge of the Mississippi valley, from a knowledge of the Red river section, from a knowledge of the upland countries, from a knowledge of the Sea island cultivation; and I have yet to learn, and I challenge contradiction in that respect from any Senator, where money has been invested in this production that it has had a profitable return.

Mr. FOWLER. I regret very much, sir, that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri was lost. I think it very bad policy to impose so high a tax upon an article that has yielded recently, and even formerly, under the very best circumstances, when labor was thoroughly organized, a bad return to the capital invested in it. In my own State, which is a very good cotton-producing State, the most intelligent and the best farmers there would not, under any consideration, raise a crop of cotton on their farms, because of its exhausting character. The farmer who continues to raise cotton grows poorer and poorer annually, as the soil in which it is raised becomes poorer and poorer every year that it is produced. It will not yield anything like a remunerative profit for the capital and labor expended in it.

It is unnecessary to discuss this question longer; but I do hope that the Senate at any rate will concur in the present amendment, as it proposes a small reduction, and will do so much in the right direction. Beside, sir, this crop is to be produced by about four million freedmen, who have recently been turned loose from the state of slavery. They are the poorest, most hopeless, and most helpless population on the face of the globe at this time. This tax comes off them entirely; and so far from burdening them it is our duty to relieve them as much as possible. In addition to that, we need this crop for the purpose of supplying us with the means of keeping up our commerce with Europe. I hope that at any rate this amendment will be adopted, though it does not go as far as we ought to go.

Mr. POMEROY. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts I believe is to reduce the present tax from three to two cents per pound. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts by a still further reduction to one cent. I think something might be collected from this source, but three cents a pound is a very heavy tax. The present tax is very heavy. If the price of cotton should come down, as it will perhaps to fifteen cents a pound, a tax of three cents will be one fifth of the entire price of the article. A tax of one cent is a large tax considering the condition of the material. It is not a manufactured article. It is almost a raw material. Some little labor beside raising it is expended on it to clean it and bale it. My opinion is that, considering the unprofitableness of the business for the last few years, one cent is as large a tax as ought to be collected. I move, therefore, to amend the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts by reducing it to one cent per pound.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am opposed to tampering with this question in that way, because a tax of one cent would not pay the expense of collecting it. So many difficulties have arisen in the practical collection of the cotton tax, and the losses have been so great during the past year, that I have made up my mind, as I voted a moment ago, to repeal the tax entirely. The law will have to be changed materially if it is attempted to collect the cotton tax. The whole system of warehouses and transferring it from place to place that we have adopted is not adapted to the country in which the cotton is grown. But from what I learn from merchants and others engaged in the business I am satisfied when the cotton is brought in competition in Liverpool with the cotton of other countries the effect is, the whole of this tax falls on our own producers; first upon the planter who is engaged in raising it, then upon our own producers, and finally upon the laborer, the negro who raises the cotton. I think, therefore, public policy demands that this tax should be entirely repealed. I do not want to discuss it. I have a great many statistics on the subject, which at a more favorable season I should like to present to the Senate; but there is no time to do it now. I think we ought to choose, therefore, between the present tax of three cents and no tax at all. I am willing to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts; but I think it would be much wiser for Congress to abandon the tax after the present year. I think the tax on the existing crop ought to be collected; but as to all that is grown hereafter it ought, in my judgment, to be abandoned, and I should so vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. On all that ripens hereafter?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We got last year about seventeen million dollars in the ten rebel States, $14,000,000 of which was from cotton. Senators will see that by taking off the tax on cotton you make considerable of a hole in the revenue; and I do not know how it is to be made up.

Mr. WADE. How much?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Seventeen million in the whole, and $14,000,000 from cotton; so I think it did somewhat more than pay the expenses of collection, as my friend from Ohio suggests.

Mr. SHERMAN. I spoke of the cent tax.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The cent tax would do something more than that, although it would be a very large reduction. Now, sir, I do not object to reducing the tax from three cents to two cents, although I do not think any harm would come from letting it stand at three cents, as it is; but I should be altogether unwilling to go below two cents. That is a question that has been somewhat debated, and upon which the committee were somewhat divided; but I really hope this tax will not be taken off. It is all we get, or shall be likely to get for some time, in those States. Where the tax falls I am not able to say. I suppose it falls partly upon the producer, but mostly upon the consumer of cotton.

Sir, I fear nothing from the competition of which the Senator from Ohio speaks. The production of cotton in other parts of the world has been falling off since the spasmodic effort that was made to bring it up when it seemed as if we would get no cotton from the southern States. It has fallen off very much, and will be likely to fall off more, because there is no cotton production anywhere that will stand the chance of coming in serious competition with that which is raised in this country.

It will be very difficult to put on this tax again after it is once taken off, and I am unwilling to lose this source of revenue. I think we ought to collect some portion of the hundreds of millions which we collect from the people of this country, from the southern States; and I see no other point at which we can aim than that which is now fixed. A reduction to two cents would leave the burden a very light one comparatively; and taking it off altogether would produce an effect upon the revenue at the present time which I am not willing to experiment upon, it would be an experiment that I am not willing to try. I hope the tax will not be reduced below two cents. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not urge his amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. I would not urge any amendment unreasonably, but I think myself that two cents is a very large tax to be paid on cotton almost as a raw material, especially when the price comes to be reduced to fifteen or perhaps fourteen cents per pound. Then it will amount to one seventh or one eighth of the whole price of the article. We do not tax any product with as little labor expended on it as there is on cotton anything like that amount.

The Senator from Ohio objects to a tax of one cent per pound because he says it cannot be collected without great difficulty. There will not be half as much temptation to evade the payment of the tax if it is only one cent as there is when it is three cents. In the next place, when cotton is baled, it is as easy to get four dollars off a bale certainly as it would be to get twelve dollars. As the law now is, you take twelve dollars off it. If the amendment I have moved prevails and becomes a law, you get four dollars. Of course it is only one third as much; but there will be less temptation to evade it, and it is just as easy to collect. It will only be one third as much; but still it will amount to something; and if the crop increases, and if this amendment should stimulate its production, it might come up even to the amount of revenue the Senator from Maine desires. I want revenue of course as much as any one; but let us stimulate production. Let us come up to the old production of former years, and then with one cent per pound we shall get as large a revenue as we now get from a tax of three cents.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I apprehend that will not make much difference; and I have no belief whatever in the idea that you are going to prevent evasion by reducing the tax. Dishonest men will evade the tax whether it is large or small, and it will not make much difference to them. One singular fact has been told me by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with regard to the whisky tax; and that is that so far as they have been able to trace up the frauds, (and they are very much more successful now in ascertaining frauds than they were before,) they find that they run back to the time when the tax was sixty cents, and there were just as many in proportion then as there are now when the tax is two dollars. We did not lose so much because the tax was not so high; but they can trace the frauds back to the time when the tax was sixty cents a gallon instead of two dollars. It will be the same with cotton at a tax of one cent as well as at two or three cents.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I take some interest in this question, and I did at the last session, because I feel that it is the interest of the State which I represent to encourage the productions of the southern States; because when they become again more prosperous, they will furnish a market to our part of the country for much of its production.

I understand the argument so forcibly put by the Senator from Maine to be something like this: during the last year we have received from cotton $14,000,000 of revenue. Now, he says, "Why make this hole in the revenue?" Suppose that at the last session, or the session before, there had been a tax of ten cents on every bushel of wheat raised in the country; perhaps that would have brought into the coffers of the Government $14,000,000; would it be said now that it must not be reduced because you will make a hole in the revenue? That argument of the Senator applies to everything and anything that will yield a revenue. But I think there overrides that argument the consideration of good policy in developing a great interest. The Senator from Maine knows that cotton growing has never been so depressed as it is at this time. They have been peculiarly unfortunate; unfortunate in the grain that they have sowed; unfortunate in the breaking of the banks of the levees upon the rivers; unfortunate in their poverty, being unable to restore their farms to their former conditions.

It is not a question of punishing the South; it is a question of restoring prosperity to every section, for when the South or the West or the East is prosperous, I think every other section shares in that prosperity. I think you might just as well tax the bushel of wheat when measured as to tax the pound of cotton when weighed. I think you might just as well tax the hogs that are raised in Indiana as the cotton that is raised on a plantation in Louisiana. I cannot see the difference. It is a tax upon a raw material as produced by agricultural labor. It is not the policy of the country to tax that class of articles. You can realize revenue from all of them. You can realize large revenue by taxing the stock raised in the western States; but yet we do not think it is good policy. We want to encourage agriculture. Every reason that will exclude our productions in Indiana from taxation will apply, with perhaps increased force, to this most depressed interest. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, as perhaps the best we can get. I think cotton ought not to be taxed at all.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I suppose there are no people of their numbers on the earth who are in so deplorable a condition as the free negroes of the South now. I am going to make a suggestion that is true: it may startle and shock the Senate; but it is true. The best thing possible for human wisdom, in my humble opinion, to do at this time for the benefit of the free negroes, and of the country too, would be to put them back into the very condition in which they were six years ago. Of course that will never be done, and will never be attempted; and I should be opposed to it myself if it could be done. If I could do it myself I would not do it. But still I am satisfied it is the very best possible thing that could be done, both for the negro and the white man.

Mr. POMEROY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kentucky why he would not do what he thinks best to be done for both white and black?

Mr. DAVIS. I will tell you why. Because the Senator from Kansas could never be convinced on earth that that was the best thing that could be done, and I do not suppose there are many other people who could be.

Mr. POMEROY. Does the Senator then shape his actions to suit what he regards as the prejudices of other people?

Mr. DAVIS. I am going to give my reason in these words: the country would not accept it; the world would not accept it; it would convulse all civilized society; and of course it ought to be rejected. But, Mr. President, I was going to remark that the next best thing that can be done for the negro is to give him employment, to give him a motive to work, to work regularly, diligently, systematically; and whenever the negro can be obtained to work in that manner he will not only support himself, but will support himself comfortably, and he will ameliorate his condition. One thing is perfectly certain: that so far as cotton is to be made in the United States at all it is to be made by negro labor. You cannot get white labor to go voluntarily into the production of cotton to any considerable extent. It may be regarded, then, as a truth that the only labor that can be profitably applied to the production of that article is negro labor.

The present tax upon cotton and the depressed condition of the owners of the cotton lands make it utterly impossible for those owners by all their best, most persevering, and economical efforts to produce cotton and to be remunerated by the profits which they make out of the article. If the owner of the cotton land cannot be remunerated by the growth of cotton he will be discouraged from attempting it; he will gradually discontinue his effort to grow it; and consequently the negro must remain unemployed; and being unemployed he is a pauper, a vagabond, a criminal, and a charge upon the public Treasury.

I agree with the honorable Senator from Missouri most emphatically that it would be a wiser policy now to give a premium to the cotton-grower upon the article rather than to impose upon him the burden of a tax. It would redound largely to the advantage of the country generally, and particularly and especially it would redound to the benefit of the negro laborer. It would induce the owners of the cotton lands generally to attempt their cultivation, and of course it would employ the negro, who is the only laborer to cultivate them.

This tax is not only impolitic, but it is unjust; and as the honorable Senator demonstrated, I think conclusively, when the tax was imposed, we are not authorized by the Constitution to impose such a tax upon the growth of the soil in this country; but that question was decided. It seems to me to be one of the plainest propositions in the world that any system of policy that would bring back the production of cotton to anything like what it was in 1860, when there were five million bags—

Mr. HENDERSON and Mr. JOHNSON. Bales.

Mr. DAVIS. No; the planters call them bags. It is the same thing; a bag contains four hundred or four hundred and fifty pounds; but I will adopt the language of Senators. There were five million bales produced. I remember when cotton was sold for six cents a pound, and when a planter if he could get eight or ten cents was entirely satisfied, and thought he was getting a price for it not only remunerative, but one that would enrich him. Of course to reduce it to the lowest prices you must come back to a specie circulation; and in addition to that, you must have a production of cotton equal to what it was some ten or fifteen years ago. The larger the production of cotton the better for the country generally, for the negro particularly, and for every moneyed interest of the whole country; because the large production of cotton employs and stimulates industry in more forms than the production of any single article whatever that grows in the country or is made in the country.

I think, sir, that the tax upon cotton ought to be removed; that an appropriation for the purpose of reconstructing the levees, and reclaiming from the floods some of the finest cotton lands of America, ought to have been made at the last session. It would have brought back to the growth of cotton a very large quantity of land that has not been flooded in that way at all during the past year; and at this time every encouragement that can be given by the legislation of Congress to the production ought to be given.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us have a vote. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. POMEROY. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered. The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY, (when his name was called.) I beg to state that I voted before under a misapprehension. After the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Finance I think two cents a pound is a fair duty on cotton. I vote "nay." I will vote to reduce the tax to two cents, but not lower.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fogg, Fowler, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane, Nesmith, Patterson, Pomeroy, Riddle, Ross, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, Wiley, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—21.
NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Harris, Howard, Kirkwood, Morgan, Nye, Poland, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wade—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cowan, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Howe, McDougall, Morrill, Norton, Ramsey, Saulsbury, and Sherman—13.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment as amended; and on that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask that it be read as it now stands.

The Secretary read the amendment, as amended, as follows:

Provided, That on and after the 1st day of September, 1867, a tax of one cent per pound only shall be levied, collected, and paid on any cotton produced within the United States.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Nesmith, Patterson, Pomeroy, Riddle, Ross, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, Wiley, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—24.
NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Howard, Kirkwood, Morgan, Nye, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wade—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Guthrie, Howe, Lane, McDougall, Morrill, Norton, Poland, and Ramsey—10.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. I move to amend the bill on page 19, line one hundred and twenty-nine of section eleven, by inserting at the beginning of the line the words "sewing-machines," so as to put them on the free list.

The question being put on the amendment, there were, on a division—yeas 9, nays 17; no quorum voting.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Chair will put the question again, and we have another division, it will show the presence of a quorum. There were some Senators who did not vote.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on this proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NYE. I hope this amendment will prevail. The article sought to be exempted here is an article perhaps in as common use as any manufactured article in our country, and it is in use by that class of people who are ill prepared to pay an additional price for the purpose of raising a revenue for the country. It is mostly used by poor and industrious females, a class quite numerous in our large towns. It is found, sir, in the garret. It is found in the abode of the lowly. Its tick is heard by the dim lamp of midnight and by the early light of the morning. It is an article which in its use perhaps furnishes as much revenue to the country as any article used. Almost every article that is manufactured by these sewing-machines pays a duty to the Government, from the shirt to the shoe. The sum derived upon the machine itself is very diminutive compared with the revenues derived from the articles manufactured from it.

An impression prevails that the manufacturers of sewing-machines make large and heavy profits. I think upon investigation it will be found that the opposite is true. It is not the manufacturers that have amassed fortunes, but the inventors. Perhaps no amount of capital invested in one occupation to the same extent has been so unproductive to those who invested it as the capital invested in the manufacture of sewing-machines. They have been kept down during the entire war at the prices established before the gold prices; and if this amendment does not prevail the result must be that there must be an advance in the price of the article itself. In view of the persons who mostly use these machines, it seems to me it is taxing really the hard earnings of a class of people who are ill able to pay. The mere tax upon the machine is a trifle; but the revenue derived from the articles manufactured by it amounts in the aggregate to millions. I hope that the Senate will vote for this amendment. I shall do it most cordially, as an act of justice to that large and unfortunate class who are so much compelled to use them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The honorable Senator's argument is that we get a large revenue from the clothing, boots and shoes, &c., manufactured by the sewing-machines. I suppose a sufficient answer to that is that clothing and boots and shoes are put in the free list by this bill, and therefore we shall get nothing from them if we adhere to the proposition to put them in the free list. Now, sir, I am informed that the stock of the Wheeler & Wilson Company, who are among the great manufacturers of sewing-machines, sells for about eight hundred per cent. at this time. I have not heard any petitions from these poor people the Senator speaks of. The agent who has been here is the agent of the manufacturers, who has been insisting upon what they should have to do. I can only say that this proposition was carefully considered in the Committee of Ways and Means and rejected, moved in the House and rejected, considered in the Finance Committee and rejected, in view of all the facts laid before us; and if it is now to be put in by the Senate on the ground of which we hear so much, that poor people use them, it will be a singular proceeding. Poor people use everything that is taxed as well as this article; and when Senators are taking the taxes off cotton and everything else and reducing the revenue, I should like to have them devise and suggest other places where we can get the revenue we want. It is very easy to move to insert articles in the free list; but it is another thing to direct us where we shall go to make up the deficiency.

Mr. NYE. I voted with the Senator from Maine to retain the tax upon cotton. I was not aware that boots and shoes and all manufactured clothing were in the free list, but it seems to me if that be so it is no answer to the position that I assume. If the tax is taken from those articles, I think, with great deference to the opinion of the Committee on Finance, which the Senator seems to assume should be controlling here, they have begun at the wrong end to reform. Greater profits by far are made upon the manufactured article that is manufactured upon these machines than upon the machines themselves. But, sir, if it be true that the tax is removed from the manufactured articles, then I insist that it should be removed from the article that manufactures them. It is the labor which produces, and from which a little profit in its use is made as any other machine known I think to our industries. I do not know how Wheeler & Wilson may stand, but it is a thing patent, if the public papers are to be credited, that there have been extensive failures of manufacturers of machines of this kind, and there is a very good reason for it now. Heretofore there has been a large export of this article abroad. Now it is pretty much stopped by the making of like machines in other countries. I cannot see why these machines alone should be singled out to pay this tax, when I again assert that it is a known fact that the most of the persons who purchase them are poor females. Senators upon this floor have time and again been asked for donations to buy some unfortunate young lady here a machine to support herself. This tax falls upon a class of people ill able to pay it, and that is the reason why I have interposed in behalf of this amendment.

Mr. DIXON. I believe it is true that some of the larger establishments for the manufacture of sewing-machines have been heretofore profitable, and I do not know but that they now are; but I will state that a great many manufactories are now springing up over the country for the manufacture of an article of sewing-machine at a low price comparatively, which is very much used by the class of persons to whom the Senator from Nevada has alluded. Now we propose to place a tax upon them all. That tax, of course, must raise the price, and must come very hard upon that class of people whose great ambition is to own a sewing-machine. They consider it a fortune to them. If they can only obtain a sewing-machine which shall assist them in their hard work, that work being of a peculiarly hard character, especially in the manner in which it is performed, by night, as the Senator from Nevada has said, and early in the morning, it is to them a fortune. It is the sole means in many cases of their living, and now you add to the price in a manner which to them is burdensome.

Now, sir, with regard to the amount of revenue which the Government receives from it, the Senator from Nevada has alluded to the fact that the articles manufactured pay a large amount, while the sewing-machine pays comparatively a small amount. I will state to the Senate what the amount of tax received by the Government is. During the year 1866 the whole amount of revenue raised by taxing sewing-machines was a little over $150,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Where does the Senator get his statement?

Mr. DIXON. I am so informed. I have the paper before me.

Mr. FESSENDEN. By whom?

Mr. DIXON. By a reliable gentleman, and I have no doubt it is true.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can only say that I inquired of the Commissioner as to the amount, and he said it was impossible to tell; that it was so mixed up with other things it could not be ascertained with certainty.

Mr. DIXON. This intelligent gentleman informs me that it is somewhere about one hundred and fifty or one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars; whereas the amount of revenue received from clothing, boots, and shoes, and other manufactures made by the sewing-machine, of which that is the foundation, amounts to nearly one tenth of the entire revenue—six or eight million dollars. Now, it does seem to me it would be far better for us, as a mere revenue matter, to increase to the utmost extent the use of the sewing-machine, if we had only reference to the amount of tax which we should receive from the articles made by it. I think, therefore, the policy of the country requires that the article should be in the free list.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Davis, Dixon, Foster, Harris, Howard, McDougall, Nesmith, Nye, Patterson, Pomeroy, Riddle, Ross, Sprague, Sumner, Wilson, and Yates—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Norton, Ramsey, Sherman, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, and Williams—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Doolittle, Fogg, Fowler, Guthrie, Howe, Morrill, Poland, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Trumbull—13.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to offer the following additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the tonnage duty now imposed by law on all ships, vessels, or steamers engaged in foreign commerce shall be levied but once within one year; and when paid by such ship, vessel, or steamer no further tonnage tax shall be collected within one year from the date of such payment.

Mr. JOHNSON, (to Mr. SHERMAN.) Explain it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Maryland wishes me to explain the amendment. I thought it would explain itself. By the present law there is a tonnage duty of about thirty cents on every vessel engaged in foreign commerce; but by various enactments that I have here a large portion, the great body, of our foreign commerce is relieved from it, and the tax paid annually. All the coasting trade, all the trade with Mexico, the trade of California, the Panama trade, the West India trade are relieved, and they pay the annual tonnage duty. The result is that the new lines of steamers being formed between this country and Europe are compelled to pay tonnage duty every round trip under the general law. This relieves them from that. It makes them pay a single tonnage duty once a year, and allows them to run for one year after the date of payment. I think it is just.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am satisfied.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the bill on page 14 by inserting after line seventeen of section ten the following:

Amend section forty-eight of the act relating to internal revenue, approved July 13, 1866, so as to insert in the proviso the word "thirds" after the word "halves" and before the word "quarters; and also amend it by striking out the words "more than one quarter, and not more than one half, shall be accounted one half," and insert "more than one quarter, and not more than one third, shall be accounted one third, and more than one third, and less than one half, shall be accounted one half."

I will state, in regard to this amendment, that I have consulted the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and it is to supply a deficiency in the present law. There was a change made in the law of 1864, which resulted in a very unequal taxation. If, however, the chairman of the committee is satisfied I will not occupy time in explaining it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand the Commissioner has no objection to it.

Mr. CONNESS. None at all. It is entirely necessary. For the sake of explanation I will read a part of the petition that I hold in my hand—

Several SENATORS. Oh, no; we will agree to it.

Mr. CONNESS. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CATTELL. I wish to offer an amendment, which is merely verbal, and has the approval of the committee, to correct a clerical error in drawing the bill. It is on page 11, line one hundred and forty-one, after the word "glass" to insert "other than window glass;" so that the clause will read:

On manufactures exclusively of glass, other than window glass, three per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the bill on page 18 by inserting after line ninety-three of section eleven the words "files and rasps," so as to place them on the free list.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will not be adopted. There is no reason why they should be exempted; it is a prosperous business.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope this amendment will be made. Files and rasps are supplies that enter into the construction of your machinery and as such should be exempt from tax. There have been great interests established in this country; but in consequence of the introduction of foreign commodities they have been forced to suspend their business operations and their machinery is idle. If they can be relieved of this tax in a very short time they will perfect this product so that it will be brought into consumption at one half the price it has heretofore cost to those who use it. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will prevail.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The same argument will apply to everything else that we tax.

Mr. SPRAGUE. This is a new industry in this country, and it requires to be relieved of this burden.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. On page 29, line four of section thirteen, after the word "gallon" I move to insert these words:

Until the 1st day of October, 1867; and $1 50 for each and every gallon until the 1st day of April, 1868; and after that date, for each and every gallon, one dollar.

I will state that the effect of this amendment is simply to reduce prospectively the tax upon whisky. It provides that it shall remain at two dollars per gallon until the 1st day of October next, and from that time to the 1st day of April, 1868, at $1 50; and after the 1st day of April, 1868, that it shall be reduced to one dollar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question, and declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to have the yeas and nays on that proposition, but I will wait until we get into the Senate, if it is agreeable to the chairman of the committee. I would as soon take them there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer another amendment: on page 69, after the fifty-first section of the bill, which has been stricken out, to insert the following additional section:

And be it further enacted, That in any indictment, suit, or other proceeding in the name of the United States against any person or persons who by law shall be subject to any fine, forfeiture, penalty, or disability whatever for non-compliance or violation thereof, no person shall be subject to such fine, penalty, forfeiture, or disability, that was not incurred with intention to commit fraud or willful negligence.

That is the amendment upon which I made some remarks last night. The whole effect of it is to withdraw the power of remitting or reducing fines from the Treasury Department, and to make it a question upon the trial of cases when persons are sued or indicted for violations of the revenue laws. Now, sir, I will read the first section of the act of 1797, which will enable the Senate, or such members of it as pay any attention to the subject, the better to comprehend its provisions:

"That whenever any person or persons who shall have incurred any fine, penalty, forfeiture, or disability, or shall have been interested in any vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, which shall have been subject to any seizure, forfeiture, or disability by force of any present or future law of the United States for the laying, levying, or collecting any duties or taxes, or by force of any present or future act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels, or any act concerning the enrolling and licensing ships or vessels employed in the coasting trade or fisheries, and for regulating the same, shall prefer his petition to the judge of the district in which such fine, penalty, forfeiture, or disability shall have accrued, truly and particularly setting forth the circumstances of his case; and shall pray that the same may be mitigated or remitted, the said judge shall inquire, in a summary manner, into the circumstances of the case; first causing reasonable notice to be given to the person or persons claiming such fine, penalty, or forfeiture, and to the attorney of the United States for such district, that each may have an opportunity of showing cause against the mitigation or remission thereof; and shall cause the facts which shall appear upon such inquiry to be stated and annexed to the petition, and direct their transmission to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, who shall thereupon have power to mitigate or remit such fine, forfeiture, or penalty, or remove such disability or any part thereof, if in his opinion the same shall have been incurred without willful negligence or any intention of fraud in the person or persons incurring the same; and to direct the prosecution, if any shall have been instituted for the recovery thereof, to cease and be discontinued upon such terms or conditions as he may deem reasonable and just."

The object of the amendment is not to interfere with the tax that may be imposed by any of the laws referred to in this section of the act of 1797; but the act of 1797 refers to suits in debt and to indictments of persons for violations of the law, and provides that where the party who has incurred such fines and penalties presents his petition, stating the facts and circumstances of the case to the district court, the district court shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the facts of the case; and if the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that there has been no intent to commit fraud and no willful neglect, he may mitigate or remit the fine according to his discretion. This amendment proposes that that duty, instead of being devolved in this tedious, circumlocutory manner upon the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be performed at once by the court and jury. In other words, if the facts of the case satisfy the court and the jury that the party has not been guilty of an intent to commit fraud or of gross neglect, there shall be imposed no fine, forfeiture, or disability in the case.

Last evening I presented to the Senate a statement of some cases that had occurred under the internal revenue law in relation to distilling, where four distillers were sued and indicted in indictments and actions of debt that contained counts to the amount of forty-nine; and each count charged the party with a violation of the law four times in each month; and each violation subjected the party to a fine of $500. In other words, the charges against these distillers were forty-nine counts, and each count contained in the aggregate a charge of fines against the party that would have amounted to $2,000 per month; making a charge against them of fines that in the aggregate amounted to upward of $90,000. All these fines were not imposed. The district attorney had the conscience to discontinue some of the counts. But there were fines imposed upon those distillers to the amount of $15,000. Under the law one half of each fine was indorsed upon the record to the use of the informer, who was the assessor, and who had lain in wait for these uninformed and unsophisticated men for two or three years, knowing that they were in innocent violation of the law; his object being that they should accumulate fines until his cupidity was satisfied. When they had run up to that point, he had them sued to the enormous amount which I have stated; he had them fined and judgments against them to the amount of $15,000; he had one half of those judgments indorsed to his use as informer upon the record, and moved the court to commit them to prison until the fines were paid; and compelled them then and there to account to him for his half. Such oppression and iniquity under the color of law I have never known enacted in any other case except in relation to these distillers.

One of these distillers distilled only his own grain, and he made about ninety barrels of whisky. The tax imposed upon him would have sunk the whole value of his whisky at that time two or three times over, for it was when the tax was twenty cents per gallon on whisky, and the price was proportionately low. These men were unacquainted with the law. They had caused all the liquor which they distilled to be gauged and measured; they had paid the tax according to the law upon it. They had receipts for the full amount of all the whisky they had made, full acquittances from the officers of the Government for every dollar of tax which had been assessed upon them or which the whisky which they made was subject to be taxed with. The assessor knew these facts. He knew that these men were in violation of the law innocently and from ignorance. He concealed from them that fact, and permitted them to continue their violations of the law for the purpose of extorting from them money for his own enrichment. I have heard that in about a year he made $100,000 from that mode of extortion.

After these distillers had paid on every gallon of whisky they had made the amount of tax that was levied by law upon it, this officer had them indicted in the oppressive manner in which I have stated, had fines to the amount of about fifteen thousand dollars imposed upon them; he himself being the informer, whose duty it was to inform them of their violations of the law and to admonish them to the observance of the law. Instead of that, he called these men before him in his office, having the power to do so under the law, swore them, made them disclose the mode in which they were operating, and in that way to reveal their innocent violations of law; and with this knowledge in affidavits in his office he still continued to permit them thus to violate the law until they had violated it to his full satisfaction. Then, notwithstanding they had paid all the tax which they owed upon the liquor, he sued them simply for not having made a return of the amount of grain which they daily mashed, according to one of the regulations of the law. For that informal and innocent violation of it they were impoverished—one of them at least—to the extent which I have named.

Now, what does the law of 1797 provide? That where these violations of the law were without an intent to commit fraud and without willful neglect, upon those facts being certified by the district court to the Treasury Department the Secretary of the Treasury may, at his discretion, remit or mitigate the fines. I said last night that petitions had been prepared by these distillers, that they had them presented to the district court of Kentucky, and the court had certified according to the act of 1797. The petitions are in the Treasury Department. I went to the Treasury Department a few days ago and inquired the situation of this business. They had done nothing at all in it, and told me that they would write to the assessor and collector to know whether the remission should be made or not. Sir, could there be a more absurd, a more unjust, a more iniquitous mockery than to refer to officers, who have thus lain in wait to entrap innocent and ignorant men, and to mulct them with fines and judgments for their own enrichment to the amount of thousands and tens of thousands of dollars, when the Government has not lost a cent, the question whether there shall be a remission or mitigation of the fines?

The only change I ask is that this question of the remission or mitigation of the fines instead of being referred in that way to the Treasury Department, shall be decided when the trials take place by the court and jury that try them. It can result in no loss to the Government. It would have resulted in no loss to the Government if the law had been at the time of these trials as I now desire it should be; because the judge would have immediately instructed the jury that if they believed from the evidence those parties had no intent to defraud the Government, and were guilty of no willful neglect, they should so find, and the consequence would have been that there would have been no judgments or fines imposed for these innocent violations of the law.

I trust, sir, that the Senate will adopt this modification, and that they will withdraw this important duty from the Treasury Department, and put it upon the courts that consider the cases.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All I have to say with regard to this awful hard case is, that it is now under the consideration of the Secretary, who has the power to relieve from this suffering, if on the whole, on examination, he thinks it best to do so. The effect of the amendment as offered is simply to change the whole burden of proof. If you put it in the terms and manner that is stated in the amendment of the honorable Senator, it will be incumbent upon the Government in every prosecution not only to prove the fact of a breach of the law, but to prove that the man did it with an intent to defraud, instead of putting the burden of proof on him. The Senate will judge how many convictions we should be likely to get under that.

Mr. DAVIS. I am sorry I did not hear a word the honorable Senator said.

Mr. JOHNSON. He says it puts the burden of proof on the Government.

Mr. DAVIS. No, sir; I beg the honorable Senator's pardon. It does not put, nor was it intended to put, the proof upon the Government. The presumption of fraudulent intent would arise from the violation of the law; and the amendment provides that it must appear from the case that there was neither an intent to commit fraud nor willful neglect in the violation of the law.

Mr. JOHNSON. You do not put it upon the defendant?

Mr. DAVIS. Not in terms; but that is the effect of it. That is a matter of defense; of course it must be sustained by the defense. I should be willing though, and I will so modify the amendment, that the proof of the absence of fraudulent intent or willful negligence shall be put upon the defendant.

Mr. JOHNSON. You had better do that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The universal system has been in all our revenue laws to leave these matters to be relieved by the proper authorities, if they are satisfied, on the whole, that the relief ought to be given; and I hope that the system which has always been in operation will not be changed now. It is difficult enough to procure a conviction for a breach of the revenue law, and this will make it more so. I hope the Senate will not interfere with a system so well established.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 8, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Davis, Hendricks, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Willey—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Howard, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Connors, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Doolittle, Fowler, Guthrie, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Poland, Trumbull, and Wade—18.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to offer an amendment, to come in at the end of the thirty-third section, as amended by the committee, at the end of the bill. The object of it is to save all present causes of prosecution and other causes from being lost by the possible operation of the present bill. It is a general saving clause:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed to affect any act done, right accrued, or penalty incurred, under former acts; but every such right is hereby saved. And all suits and prosecutions for acts already done in violation of any former act or acts of Congress relating to the subjects embraced in this act, may be commenced or proceeded with in like manner as if this act had not been passed. And all penal clauses and provisions in existing laws relating to the subjects embraced in this act shall be deemed applicable thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have some amendments that I desire to offer after line seventeen, section ten, page 14; and before the amendment which has been adopted I move to insert:

That section nineteen is hereby amended by adding the following thereto: "And no suit in equity or otherwise for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of tax shall be maintained in any court."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 10, line ninety-seven of section nine, I move to strike out the words "not including sirup or molasses."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On the same page, line one hundred and four of section eleven, after the word "process" I move to insert "extract sugar from or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I offer the following amendment, to come in as a new section at the end of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That coal oil which has been returned to a bonded warehouse after having been withdrawn for the purpose of being redistilled or refined, according to law, may be withdrawn from said warehouse for consumption upon payment of the tax upon the quantity so removed for consumption.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance what the effect of the first of those amendments is, excluding or not including the words "sirup or molasses?"

Mr. FESSENDEN. If you reduce the one you ought to reduce the other.

Mr. CONNESS. I have not had time to examine it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The tax being put down to one and a half per cent. ad valorem, it seemed hardly worth while to distinguish between them.

Mr. CONNESS. That is right. I understand it now.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments which have been made as in Committee of the Whole, and the Chair will take the question upon the amendments collectively, saving those amendments which may be excepted by Senators.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish a separate vote upon the amendment made on page 16 of the bill, by which lines fifty-nine and sixty were stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be excepted.

Mr. POMEROY. I wish to have a separate vote on the amendment on page 18, line ninety, by which certain agricultural implements are stricken from the free list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be excepted.

Mr. NYE. I wish to have a separate vote upon the amendment adopted last night on page 9, lines eighty-eight, eighty-nine, and ninety. I wish to reinstate what was reported by the House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We fixed that over in the other sections.

Mr. NYE. How does it stand?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is not necessary.

Mr. NYE. I want to reinstate it after April 30, 1867.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be excepted.

Mr. CATTELL. I wish to except the amendment on page 16, line fifty-three, by which the word "iron" has been stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be excepted.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to except the amendment on pages 16 and 17 striking out lines sixty-three, sixty-four, and sixty-five, and also the amendment on page 12, lines one hundred and fifty-nine, one hundred and sixty, and one hundred and sixty-one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those amendments will be excepted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to reserve the amendments reducing the duty on cotton and placing boots, shoes, bar-iron, &c., on the free list. If we take the tax off the cotton we must put it on the others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those amendments will be excepted.

Mr. NYE. I should like a separate vote on the proposition to place sewing-machines on the free list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment not having been adopted it cannot be excepted. The Senator can renew it in the Senate if he chooses to do so.

Mr. NYE. I give notice then that I shall renew it.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire at the proper time to move to strike out the thirty-second section. I suppose it will be necessary, therefore, to have that excepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be excepted.

Mr. CRESWELL. I desire to except the amendment on page 16 striking out "sheet lead, lead pipe, and shot."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be excepted. If no other amendments be indicated, the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole with the exceptions specially named.

The amendments not excepted were concurred in.

The Secretary read the first excepted amendment, which was to strike out lines fifty-nine and sixty of section eleven in these words:

Horse-rakes, horse-powers, tedders, hames, scythe-snaths, hay-forks, hoes, and portable grinding-mills.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate on this matter. I think the House acted wisely by putting these articles in the free list; and I hope the Senate will concur in the action of the House, and refuse to strike them out, as recommended by the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Horse-rakes are already on the free list; this puts them in twice.

Mr. HOWARD. Where?

Mr. FESSENDEN. In the old bill.

Mr. HOWARD. Then to put them here will do no harm; it will only make it stronger. I ask for the yeas and nays in concurring in the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These words were stricken out in Committee of the Whole, and the question is in concurring in the amendment which was made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JOHNSON. Were they in the free list?

Mr. TRUMBULL. They were in the free list, and the committee reported to strike them out of the free list. I confess I do not know exactly how the question is being put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. These articles were placed in the free list by the bill as it came from the other House, and by vote of the Senate acting as in Committee of the Whole they were stricken out.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then those who want to keep them in the free list will vote in the negative on this question. ["That is it."]

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 10, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cragin, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Harris, Morgan, Poland, and Sherman—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Grimes, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, Nesmith, Nye, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Ross, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, and Yates—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Cowan, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Henderson, Howe, Lane, McDougall, Morrill, Norton, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—16.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to submit a motion at this time that at five o'clock to-day the Senate take a recess until half past seven.

The motion was agreed to.

The next excepted amendment was to strike out in line ninety of section eleven the following words: "potato-hooks, pitchforks, manure and spading forks."

Mr. JOHNSON. Were they stricken from the free list?

Mr. POMEROY. They were. It is precisely like the case the Senate have just passed upon.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was to strike out lines eighty-eight, eighty-nine, and ninety of section nine in these words:

By striking out the paragraph commencing "on oil, naphtha, benzine, benzole" down to the words "ten cents per gallon inclusive."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will remain.

Mr. NYE. We want to reinstate that provision.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We struck out the clause, and the Senator wants to keep it in. I shall object, and state the reason why I do. The matter the Senator refers to is in relation to gas companies. This has nothing to do with that.

Mr. NYE. We want to insert gas companies.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That amendment can be moved after we get through with the reserved amendments.

Mr. NYE. Very well.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no opposition to this amendment then.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was to strike out the word "iron," in line fifty-three of section eleven, and to insert the word "or;" and after the word "cement," in line fifty-four, to strike out "sheet lead, lead pipe, and shot."

Mr. CRESWELL. I am not informed upon what ground the Finance Committee propose to strike out sheet lead, lead pipe, and shot from the free list, and therefore I cannot speak by authority as to the motives that actuated them; but in the House of Representatives, by the action of the House these articles were inserted in the free list, and I think wisely. A system has grown up under the law, as at present established, which virtually defeats everything like fair dealing in the manufacture of these articles. The act of June 30, 1864, provides for levying an internal revenue tax of five per cent. upon these manufactures; and it further provides that unless the increased value of the manufactured article shall be five per cent. there shall be no tax whatever levied. The cost of these manufactures of lead is about ten and a half cents per pound; but the manufacturers in certain quarters of the country, in derogation of every principle of fair dealing, have entered into an arrangement one with the other that they will produce these manufactures for a rate not exceeding half a cent per pound, which brings them below the rate of increase which under the act is chargeable with tax; that is to say, the increased value of the article is less than five per cent., and of course therefore no tax is to be paid.

This has been carried on so extensively that the manufacturers of these articles who are disposed to deal fairly with the Government have been virtually driven out of the market, and I apprehend, although I am not positively informed upon the question, that the amount of tax paid upon these manufactures during the past year has been almost nothing; and therefore, so far as the question of revenue is concerned, these articles might just as well be put upon the free list; but the manufacturers in a statement which I have before me say that it is not so much to their interest that these articles should be placed on the free list as it is to their interest that the tax placed upon them shall be so certain that those in the trade who are disposed to be dishonest may not be able to evade it. They think, therefore, that either these articles should be entirely relieved from the tax imposed by this bill, that is to say, the five per cent., or that there should be placed upon them a specific charge of one fourth or one half of one cent per pound. In view of the fact that these articles really pay no tax as the law now stands, and that the manufacture of them has been very much deranged by the illicit practices that have been resorted to, I think it is unwise to strike them from the free list in which the House placed them by their action the other day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The whole difficulty which the Senator states has been done away with by a provision in this very bill, which he will see, on page 12:

That section ninety-six be amended by inserting after the words "and also all goods, wares, merchandise, and articles," and before the words "made or manufactured from materials" the words "not specially named and taxed, and which are."

By turning to the provision in the law to which this item refers, he will see that these articles are specially named and taxed, so that they come within the provision mentioned, and the difficulty which the Senator has stated is obviated.

Mr. CRESWELL. How will the section read then as applicable to these articles?

Mr. FESSENDEN.

And also all goods, wares, and merchandise, and articles not specially named and taxed, and which are made or manufactured from materials which have been subjected to and upon which internal duties have been actually paid, or materials imported upon which duties have been paid or upon which no duties have been imposed by law, where the increased value of such goods, wares, or merchandise, and articles so made or manufactured, shall not exceed the amount of five per cent. ad valorem, shall be, and hereby are, exempt from duty.

By turning to page 66 the Senator will find that sheet lead and lead pipe and shot are specially named in the law, so that the difficulty is obviated.

Mr. CRESWELL. Does the Senator mean to say that these articles are now exempt by law?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I read from the law of 1864, and the clause on page 12 of this bill, to which I have called attention, is an amendment to that law, inserting the words which I have read, and thus relieving the matter from all difficulty.

Mr. CRESWELL. But they are still chargeable with five per cent. tax.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CRESWELL. That is the very difficulty. The Senator does not reach the point I make. I make this point, that some of the manufacturers by fraudulent practices represent that the increased value of these manufactures is not equal to five per cent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is done away with by this provision, because these articles by this amendment do not come within that clause.

Mr. CRESWELL. Then they are all chargeable with the five per cent. whether there be five per cent. increase in value or not.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CATTELL. I asked for the exception of the amendment striking out the word "iron" in line fifty-three of section eleven, and I hope that amendment, which was adopted in Committee of the Whole, will be disagreed to. The House put upon the free list drain, gas, and water pipe made of wood, iron, or cement. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole struck out the word "iron." Now, I believe it is quite important that we should be able to furnish these articles, which are almost essential and necessary to the public good, and not by taxing them so heavily as five per cent., to drive the smaller towns and cities of our country to the use of cement and wooden pipes, which are left free, instead of the very much better material of iron pipes.

Further, I would say to the Senate, that having some knowledge of the manufacture of these articles, I think I am justified in the statement that in the last fifteen years every single establishment on the sea-board for the manufacture of gas iron pipes has gone to the wall with the exception of two. It is a hard trade, and cannot afford to pay the excessive tax of five per cent. I hope the Senate will disagree to the amendment and reinstate the word "iron" in this clause.

Before taking my seat, I will state that the Committee of Ways and Means of the other House agreed to insert this word "iron," and a motion was made to strike it out in the House; and after a fair and full discussion the insertion of it was sustained by the House. I believe the other words in the clause, "sheet lead, lead pipe, and shot," were added upon motion in the House; but the word "iron" came from the committee, and on a motion being made in the House to strike it out it was retained.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think this is rather an unreasonable request. Drain, gas, and water pipe made of iron is very generally used, and used principally by corporations who are perfectly able to pay the tax; more so than individuals usually are. This article yields a very considerable revenue. The committee thought it was well enough to take the tax off the cheaper kinds of pipe which are used by individuals, who perhaps cannot afford to buy the iron pipe and lay it down. Iron certainly has been very much favored, and we do not see why we should take the tax off this manufacture, which is important in the way of revenue, and which is used by those who can well afford to pay, because it is used mostly by corporations.

Last year we took the duty off coal used in the manufacture of iron; we took the duty off pig iron. Now the persons who manufacture these pipes want us to take the tax off the iron pipes themselves. I think they ought to stand on the same level with other manufactures. There is a strong demand and always will be for the manufacture itself, and the manufacturers can charge their prices for it. I see no reason for this special exemption of a flourishing interest. I hope the amendment of the committee will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in this amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

The amendment was concurred in.

The Secretary read the next excepted amendment, which was to strike out lines sixty-three, sixty-four, and sixty-five of section eleven, in these words:

Leather of all descriptions, and goat, deer, calf, kid, sheep, horse, hog, and dog skins tanned, or partially tanned, curried, finished, or in the rough.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The effect of this amendment, as I understand it, is to take leather of all kinds from the free list. I think that those articles named should be upon the free list. When the tariff bill was being considered there was an effort made to have the duty upon these articles much increased, and all agreed, I think, that the duty should be increased; but it was stated that they were to be placed upon the free list in the internal revenue bill, and that would give them sufficient protection, as they would be relieved from the existing tax. The same effort was made in the House to have the duty on these articles increased, and I think everybody was satisfied that it should be increased; but the persons interested in these articles withdrew the effort to have the duty increased, because they were assured that they would go upon the free list in the internal revenue bill; and the House placed them upon the free list. The effect of this amendment is to remove them from the free list. I think the amendment should not prevail.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This was a matter of considerable discussion in the other House, and the result which the committee came to was founded on the fact that we could not afford to lose a revenue of between five and six millions that has been derived during the year from leather. Boots and shoes have yielded about two millions and a half. Boots and shoes are put on the free list instead of leather. That is substantially the way it was reported from the Committee of Ways and Means in the House originally. I should be very glad to take the tax off all these articles and put them all on the free list. I should be very glad to get rid of taxation altogether; I dare say we all should. But the question to be considered, after all, is not whether we cannot succeed in getting a particular interest relieved, but whether we can afford to do it with reference to the revenue. The Senate this morning has voted off the revenue about ten million dollars in the article of cotton alone.

Mr. CONNESS. Provided its production is not stimulated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We cannot tell how that will be; but at any rate, judging from what we have received, the reduction will be ten millions; and if we put leather on the free list, that will add five millions, making fifteen millions; and then the placing of iron on the free list will add two or three millions more. I think, on the whole, as the matter stands now, I shall have to ask the Senate to strike iron off the free list, because the votes of the Senate seem not to have been influenced by that fact. The Senate has been insisting upon putting on the free list articles made of iron which we thought it advisable to strike off, besides having the iron itself on the free list.

With regard to the question before the Senate, I wish to suggest to my friend from New Jersey that there are various interests that I should like very much to relieve, leather among the rest; but we cannot part with the revenue on all these things. It is very gratifying to hear patriotic sentiments on a subject of relieving these things from taxation. But the question is whether the country can afford it. Senators say that if we only increase production we make the country rich; but we do not make the Treasury rich unless the production pays something. The object of the bill is to get some of the money which the country makes into the Treasury to pay the bills with. I hope the Senate will not put this article on the free list, for I think the effect will be very injurious, and we cannot afford it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I regret very much that the Senate have taken off the tax on cotton, and think it was a great error, so far as my judgment goes; and I would be very sorry if our other industries are to suffer in consequence of that error. When the subject of the duty on these articles was up, there was no doubt but that those who examined the subject thoroughly, among them the Commissioner, who understood this whole subject, were clearly of opinion that it was requisite that a higher duty should be imposed on these articles; but inasmuch as it was understood that they were to be placed upon the free list in the internal revenue bill that was waived, as it was in the House also. The House, after mature consideration placed them upon the free list in this bill, and I hope they will be restored to the free list. To take off the duties on these articles and then impose the tax is destroying the interests of the country.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This argument about what the House has done works very curiously in reference to these questions. If what the House has done suits the views of a particular Senator, it is a wise and sensible House, and we ought to stick to it! If otherwise, it is an unwise House, and it did not act right in that particular. Now, I think we are just as capable of forming opinions as the House is, and I do not like to hear the question argued in that way. The real point is whether or not we can afford to dispense with this amount of revenue. I should like very much to dispense with it on this and a great many other articles. I do not like the high price I have to pay for boots and shoes more than anybody else.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator from New Jersey says that we agreed to take off this tax as an equivalent for not raising the duty on the imported article.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We did not understand it so.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; on being taken resulted—yeas 22, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Grimes, Harris, Hendricks, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Patterson, Pomeroy, Riddle, Saulsbury, Stewart, Wade, and Willey—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Conness, Frelinghuysen, Howard, Howe, Nesmith, Nye, Ross, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wilson—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Cowan, Creswell, Doollittle, Guthrie, Henderson, Johnson, McDougall, Morrill, Norton, Poland, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Williams, and Yates—19.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The Secretary read the next excepted amendment, which was in line one hundred and fifty-nine of section nine to strike out the words "words ferry where they occur twice," and to insert "the word 'three' where it occurs in the second proviso," and inserting the words "two and a half."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the chairman of the Committee on Finance inform the Senate what this clause means, what it applies to, what will be the effect of agreeing to the whole of it as it stands, particularly the words which follow what has just been read, and which are "by striking out the words 'until the 30th day of April, 1867.'"

Mr. FESSENDEN. The effect of the first amendment is simply to cut the tax on all the articles named in the section referred to down from three per cent. to two and a half per cent. The effect of the second clause is to take off the limitation upon the right of horse railroad companies to put the tax upon their passengers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it confined to horse railroad companies?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It applies to all corporations which transport persons. The time within which they were allowed to add the tax to their charges were limited to the 30th of April. That was done with a specific object. After a good deal of discussion the House thought it best to strike that limitation off. They refused to do it in the case of gas companies, but did it in all these other cases.

Mr. ANTHONY. The practical effect, I understand, upon these railroads where the fare is very small and the tax amounts to one eighth or a quarter of a cent, is that they take one cent from their passengers, and pay the Government one fourth or one eighth.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is provided for.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is provided for by a provision that they shall sell packages of tickets at such a rate as will simply add the tax to the fare.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir; it was provided for in that way at the last session.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, and a horse railroad company in New York will sell packages of tickets up at Two Hundred and Fifty-second street. If you go up there you can buy a package, but you cannot buy them in the cars. So the practical effect is, that under this law the horse railroad companies in New York exact of their passengers one cent and return to the Government one fourth or one eighth of it. It seems to me it would be very easy to collect one cent off the company upon each fare and have it all paid to the Government. Then the people would pay no more than they do now, and the Government would have the benefit of the tax. Now, in order to get one eighth or one fourth of a cent to the Government, the people are taxed one cent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Complaints have always been made, and some companies try to evade the law, I have no doubt.

Mr. ANTHONY. Pretty much all the companies do it in New York. On other roads it is not so great an inconvenience; but on a horse railroad fare, twenty per cent. is added in order to give the Government two and a half per cent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose they try to evade it. This arrangement was fixed, according to my recollection, by my friend from Iowa.

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. These companies are compelled according to law to sell tickets in packages for the amount of the fare and the exact tax.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not like to have the paternity of anything that does not belong to me assigned to me. I have not the slightest recollection of ever having had anything to do with this matter. So far from it, I would oppose, if I thought it would avail anything, the whole proposition. I can see very well that in some cases, so far as it relates to the railroads in some States, such legislation on the part of the Federal Government would be just and wise; that is to say, where the amount that is authorized to be exacted from a passenger by a railroad company is fixed by law, and that is the case in only a few of the States. But I know no reason why a railroad in my State where the amount they are authorized to receive is not fixed by law, but they can make it unlimited, should not be subject to the same payment on account of the receipts they receive as any other corporation.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was to insert at the end of the first section of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That on and after the 1st day of September, 1867, a tax of one cent per pound only shall be levied, collected, and paid on any cotton produced within the United States.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the Senate will not interfere with the tax on cotton. The revenue cannot afford it.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I should like to inquire whether that amendment was proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] who is absent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was moved by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. WILSON. I desire to inquire whether it would be now in order to amend that amendment by inserting "two cents" instead of "one cent?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order to amend the amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "one cent" and inserting "two cents."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will agree to that. I am perfectly willing that should be done.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senate will compromise on that, for I think it is a fair tax. The price of cotton is considerably lower than it was when the tax was fixed at three cents, and there ought to be some reduction; and yet I suppose the Government cannot afford to lose the revenue.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was to insert the following additional section:

And be it further enacted, That spirits of turpentine may be transferred, without payment of the tax, to a bonded warehouse established in conformity with law and Treasury regulations, under such rules and regulations and upon the execution of such transportation bonds or other security as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, said bonds or other security to be taken by the collector of the district from which such removal is made; and may be transported from such a warehouse to any other bonded warehouse established as aforesaid, and may be withdrawn from bonded warehouse for consumption on payment of the tax, or removed for export to a foreign country without payment of tax, in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the removal of distilled spirits, all the rules, regulations, and conditions of which, so far as applicable, shall apply to spirits of turpentine in bonded warehouse. And no drawback shall in any case be allowed upon any spirits of turpentine.

Mr. HARRIS. I am informed that the operation of this section will be very injurious to the holders of the article mentioned in the section, and that it will not be insisted on by the Finance Committee. I will not, therefore, go further until I am advised to the contrary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no objection to its being struck out.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The excepted amendments have all been disposed of. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. NYE. I move to amend the bill by inserting after line eighty-seven of section nine:

Strike out in the paragraph relating to gas the words "until the 30th day of April, 1867."

This is a question that does not affect the revenue, but simply a question as to who shall pay that revenue. By reference to the law in regard to railroads, steamboats, ferry-boats, and bridges, passed last year, it will be seen that the companies were authorized by the provisions of that law to become the collectors of certain taxes from their passengers, and to pay them over to the Government. The same provision was applied in that law to gas companies, with this condition: that in relation to the gas companies the privilege of charging the tax to their customers should exist only until the 30th day of April, 1867.

I do not desire to occupy the time of the Senate, and will simply read a little statement I have before me in regard to the enact condition of these gas companies. I read the statement of the Manhattan Gas-Light Company in New York city.

Statement of the Manhattan Gas Light Company.

There are four gas companies in the city of New York, namely:

The New York, charging $3 50 per one thousand feet, company paying the tax; Metropolitan, charging $3 50 per one thousand feet, company paying the tax; Harlem, charging $4 per one thousand feet, company paying the tax; Manhattan, charging $2 50 per one thousand feet, and additional tax twenty-five cents; consequently with the tax added the consumers of the Manhattan Company's gas pay seventy-five cents per thousand feet less than those who are supplied by the New York and Metropolitan companies, and $1 25 per thousand feet less than those supplied by the Harlem Company.

The Manhattan is the only company restricted in price. The limitation was imposed upon a specie paying basis.

Before the war gas coals were imported from the British Provinces free of duty. Now the duty on the same is $1 25 per ton.

Before the war the provincial coals were delivered in New York at five dollars per ton, and coals from England at $6 37½ per ton.

Now, coal from England costs, delivered, about eleven dollars per ton, and from Pennsylvania and the British Provinces about ten dollars per ton. This is bituminous or gas coal; anthracite coal will not make gas.

Before the war labor in the gas works could be had at thirty-seven dollars per month per man. Now, the same class of laborers receive $2 50 per day, or seventy-five dollars per month, while the wages of mechanics are more than doubled.

All the materials which enter into the construction of gas works, or the distribution of gas are also more than doubled in price.

Last year the Manhattan Gas-Light Company paid to the Government for tax on gas sold, $235,000, and for duty on coal imported $100,000 in gold. Its capital is $4,000,000 all paid, in cash.

It has not paid a dividend in more than a year, and can never again pay a dividend until the country returns to specie payments, unless the State of New York removes the restrictions imposed in its charter.

While, therefore, this company pays to the General Government over ten per cent. on its capital, it does not pay its stockholders one dollar.

The price of the company's stock has been alluded to as being above par. The explanation is simply this: many years ago the company purchased a large amount of real estate, which having advanced in value really makes the stock worth more than par.

The Manhattan Company respectfully asks that it may be permitted to charge the tax until it can be placed on the same footing as other Companies not restricted and whose property is not affected by the tax.

CHARLES ROOME, President.

My amendment is that the Manhattan Gas-Light Company, of the city of New York, so far as this section applies to them, shall have the privilege of collecting the tax from their consumers after the 30th of April, 1867, as they have heretofore done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The only effect of this amendment is to allow certain gas companies who are limited by law by the terms of their charters as to the price at which they shall sell gas, to add to that price the amount which they pay to the Government. Last year the companies made a very strenuous effort to have that privilege, which was before granted to them, renewed, and they represented that all they wanted was to have it continued so that they might apply to their several Legislatures to have the restrictions taken off. We accommodated them by allowing them to charge the tax till the 30th of April next, by which time all their Legislatures will have had a chance to act. In New York I understand the Manhattan Gas-Light Company applied to the Legislature, and the Legislature removed the restriction; but Governor Fenton vetoed the bill. I do not know whether applications were made in any other State or not.

I have always been in favor of allowing the gas companies to charge over the tax in these cases. I think it is no more than just. We allow it in regard to horse railroads, and I think we ought to allow it in regard to these corporations who cannot take the advantage which the railroads do of our permission. The Committee on Finance, I believe, were unanimous that this ought to be done; but we did not insert the provision for the reason that we feared it would be impossible to carry it through the House. The House did reject it over and over again, and would not hear anything about it, would not listen to the recommendation of either committee. We thought, therefore, to put in this amendment would be only to multiply matters of contention with the House at a period of the session when they ought to be as few as possible. If, however, the Senate see fit to try the experiment I have no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It appears to me that this amendment ought not to be agreed to. The prices and emoluments that corporations are to receive for their operations ought to be regulated by the authority that establishes them, the State governments that give them life, the representatives of the very people among whom they exercise their monopolies and their privileges; and the representatives of those people are supposed to know better than we can know what is right and just as between the corporations, the monopoly, and the people from whom they derive their revenue. This view has been taken by the Legislatures to whom application has been made, and they have done one way or the other in increasing or diminishing those limitations as to them appeared to be fit and just. And we have been told by the chairman of the committee that this experiment to allow these monopolies still further to operate upon the people has failed in the other branch, if it is proper to allude to that at all, and now it is to be forced on here.

It is bad enough as the bill stands that railroads and carriers are authorized to charge over upon their passengers not only the tax which is imposed upon the rates of fare that they get upon the passenger business, but upon all their income derived from the transportation of the mail; so that the hundreds of thousands of dollars that the railroad companies in this country receive from the Government for the transportation of mails, being taxed at two and one half per cent., that two and one half per cent. upon that mail service is charged over to the passengers under the existing law. I think it to be an outrage upon the people, and I do not think we ought to go any further in that direction.

Mr. POMEROY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cattell, Chandler, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fogg, Fowler, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, McDougall, Morgan, Nye, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, and Willey—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Edmunds, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Kirkwood, Lane, Poland, Ross, and Wilson—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cowan, Creswell, Guthrie, Henderson, Johnson, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Williams, and Yates—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to make one amendment now that I think of it, on page 70, in line six of the new section twenty-four. It is to insert after the word "shall" at the end of that line the words "in addition to other fines and penalties now by law provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to inquire if it is in order to move to strike out an amendment adopted on the recommendation of the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment agreed to in certain words cannot be stricken out now.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to inquire of the Committee on Finance the reasons which induced the committee to recommend the amendment which was made on page 16, inserting in the free list "legs of piano-fortes?"

Mr. FESSENDEN. The reason simply was, that legs of piano-fortes are taxed when we get them into the piano.

Mr. CONNESS. So is every other part of the piano taxed when it goes into the piano as well as the legs.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator has any violent objection to the legs he may strike them out. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNESS. I do not intend to be put in the wrong about the matter. I have no very violent objection, but there seems to be something about it that is not right. I hold in my hand the House bill as reported in the House, in which, among the articles placed on the free list, occur "legs of piano-fortes, melodeons, and billiard-tables;" but it appears that by subsequent action the whole line was stricken out and none of these articles were allowed to be placed on the free list. In the report from the Finance Committee of the Senate "legs of piano-fortes" are introduced. It appears palpable to me that some very active agent of the manufacturers of legs of pianos has been about here steadily, a man with "swift legs," as my friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] suggests, for he got himself exempted with two other articles in the report of the House bill, and that being stricken out in the House, he got himself reported on the free list separately here. Now, as we should not legislate for particular interests, and as we should never reward special efforts of this kind, I move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let the legs travel; I have no objection.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment inserting those words.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope it will not be agreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us get through with the bill. I think we can finish it in a few moments. I am not aware of any more amendments to be offered.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I have an important amendment to present.

Mr. GRIMES. I think we cannot get through the bill before the time fixed for the recess, and therefore I insist upon my amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ALLOTMENT OF JUDGES.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the Senate No. 534, to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to Senate bill No. 534, to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment to the said bill as passed by the Senate.

LYMAN TRUMBULL,

IRA HARRIS,

THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES F. WILSON,

W. RADFORD,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. At five o'clock the doors were re-opened, and the Senate took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven and a half o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 552) for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SUPPLIES FOR WALLACE'S COMMAND.

Mr. LANE. I move to take up House joint resolution No. 226. I came here with nothing on the Calendar, and this is the only thing I now have on the list. I desire to leave with nothing on the Calendar. I hope the Senate will indulge me.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 226) extending the provisions of section two of an act to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States, approved July 4, 1864, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to extend the provisions of section two of the act of July 4, 1864, to cover all cases where quartermasters' stores were actually furnished to forces under command of Major General Lewis Wallace, and duly receipted for by persons acting under his authority, during the Morgan raid in Ohio and Indiana during the summer of 1863; and for the purpose of giving such receipts the persons referred to are to be held to be proper officers of the Government.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I would inquire what is the necessity for the passage of this resolution? Do not these persons come within the law?

Mr. LANE. I will state the necessity for it in one moment, and the Senator will see it. We passed a law on the 4th of July, 1864, that we supposed covered every possible case; but the accounting officers of the Treasury refuse to acknowledge receipts given by officers during this Morgan raid because they were not regularly mustered into the United States service. The second section of the act of July 4, 1864, provided:

"That all claims of loyal citizens, in States not in rebellion, for quartermasters' stores actually furnished to the Army of the United States, and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same, or which may have been taken by such officers without giving such receipt, may be submitted to the Quartermaster General of the United States, accompanied with such proofs as each claimant can present of the facts in his case; and it shall be the duty of the Quartermaster General to cause such claim to be examined, and, if convinced that it is just, and of the loyalty of the claimant, and that the stores have been actually received or taken for the use of and used by said Army, then to report each case to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, with a recommendation for settlement."

We supposed that was broad enough to reach every case; but the accounting officers have determined that volunteer officers under the command of General Wallace are not embraced in the term "proper officers" as here used. When Morgan invaded the State of Indiana there were no United States troops there to meet him. In three days sixteen thousand troops were raised in the State of Indiana, and General Wallace, a major general of the Army of the United States, happening to be at Indianapolis, he, at the request of Governor Morton, took command of those troops. The regiments had their colonels and quartermasters and commissaries, but they were not regularly mustered into the service of the United States, and only served some six or eight days; but in passing through the country in pursuit of Morgan it was found necessary to take horses. Perhaps thirty or forty horses were impressed from the farmers, which at the end of the expedition were turned over to the United States. They were receipted for regularly by the commissaries and quartermasters of the volunteer forces; but those officers never having been mustered into the United States service the accounting officers think on this section they cannot pay on their receipts. That is the whole difficulty. We simply extend the provisions of that section in the very words of the section itself, to cover these cases where volunteer officers gave their proper receipts for the horses.

Mr. POMEROY. I think that is a very good case as it applies to Indiana. I have tried to get a bill reported from a committee to meet precisely such a case in my own State; but I have never been able to succeed in it. The facts were that in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, our militia were called out to the extent of twenty thousand at one time, and were under arms, and yet we have never been able to get a single commissary or quartermaster store paid for. The troops provided for by this joint resolution were nothing but militia. I never could get a bill reported to pay persons in the case I have referred to, because the receipts were given by militia officers not properly mustered into the service of the United States. I am not going to object to this joint resolution; I only say that it will prepare the way for one which I will try to get reported myself.

Mr. LANE. I will say that this is a House joint resolution, which, after being passed by that body, was referred to our Committee on Military Affairs and reported favorably. It was reported a month ago, and I have been trying to get it up. I think the general provisions of law ought to be held to cover the case; but the Treasury officers decide differently.

Mr. POMEROY. But there are not less than a million of dollars of claims precisely in the same situation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This is a very loose proposition. It covers cases of property taken by order of Major General Lewis Wallace for the use of the forces under his command during the Morgan raid, "and duly receipted for by persons acting under his authority." What "persons?" We do not know what officers they were, or what became of the property, or anything else. What proof is there to be of the authority to take the property?

Mr. LANE. If the Senator had listened to the reading of the act of 1864 he would have seen precisely what proof is required.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Proof as to loyalty, &c.

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir. That act provides "that all claims of loyal citizens in States not in rebellion for quartermasters' stores actually furnished to the Army of the United States, and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same," are to be paid. The only difficulty is that the quartermaster and commissary officers of the volunteers are not regarded by the accounting officers as the "proper officers" under this act.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But this resolution speaks of "persons," not officers.

Mr. LANE. The reason for that is that these troops were sent out and officered upon a sudden emergency, and the quartermasters and commissaries were appointed under State authority, and acted under the orders of General Wallace. If the Senator from Maine will look at the act of 1864 he will find that it provides that such claims are to be presented to the Quartermaster General—

"Accompanied with such proofs as each claimant can present of the facts in his case; and it shall be the duty of the Quartermaster General to cause such claim to be examined, and if convinced that it is just, and of the loyalty of the claimant, and that the stores have been actually received or taken for the use of and used by said Army, then to report such case to the Third Auditor of the Treasury with a recommendation for settlement."

Some thirty or forty horses were taken and used for about a week, and then turned over to the United States quartermaster three years ago; and the farmers have got no pay for their horses, and never can get it unless we pass a resolution of this kind. Every one of the horses, as the proof shows, was turned over to the United States, and seized for their use. That is the whole of it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will state what I suppose the danger of this is. If it only opened the door for payment for thirty or forty horses that were taken by persons under the command of General Wallace during the Morgan raid I am sure there would be no objection to it; but the law of 1864 was framed with some care so as to guard against paying for property that was taken by persons, as this resolution reads, who were connected with the Army, and we intended to pay for no property unless it was actually taken by the proper officer, and received and used by the Army. If this is passed, what will be the result? In Kentucky, in Tennessee, in West Virginia, and in Missouri, all of which States now come under the operation of the law of 1864 by amendatory acts, and in Kansas, where as the Senator from Kansas has told you, there is $1,000,000 claimed, we have got to pay for all the property that was taken by anybody acting under command of an officer. I am sure this precedent will open a very wide door. The original law, it will be seen, intends to pay for no property where the proper officer did not give a receipt. Now, if this resolution was changed so as to provide that property should only be paid for which was taken by the quartermaster or commissary of General Wallace's command it would be different.

Mr. LANE. That is exactly it, "persons acting under his authority."

Mr. TRUMBULL. If you say persons acting under his authority you have got to pay for all the property taken by any of our soldiers; for they were all acting under somebody's command.

Mr. LANE. Not at all. This resolution extends the provisions of the second section of the act of July 4, 1864, to this case, and that act requires the proper officer's receipt. The accounting officers of the Treasury refuse to acknowledge these men as officers. That is the whole trouble. They were officers acting under authority; but the Treasury refuses to recognize them as officers, and that is the whole difficulty.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This joint resolution is confined in its operations to Wallace's command during the Morgan raid. It cannot extend to any other cases.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Of course not; but can the Senator from Indiana refuse to extend it to Kentucky and to Tennessee and to Missouri, and to the other States in precisely such cases?

Mr. HENDRICKS. If there is any other such cases as the case of the Morgan raid I would not want to refuse to extend it. If the troops of the southern army invaded any other northern State, or State not in rebellion, and made war there, and the people had to rise to meet it because there were no troops of the Army there, I should say that the expenses of that volunteer force ought certainly to be paid by the United States, whether it was in Illinois or in Indiana or elsewhere; but this joint resolution is confined exclusively in its operations to the Morgan raid and to the soldiers under General Wallace's command.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As it reads, if anybody under his command chose to take a horse and give a receipt for it, the Government is to pay for it.

Mr. LANE. It has to be proved that a proper officer gave a proper receipt.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is not the expression. It is "persons acting under his authority;" it does not say "proper officer."

Mr. LANE. It extends the provision of the act of 1864, and the manner of proof is all contained in the second section of that act.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It does not say the proof required by that act.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, it does; for it extends the provisions of that law to this class of cases. I cannot think there is any danger in it. It is a most meritorious case.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out the words "and duly receipted for by persons acting under his authority."

Mr. HENDRICKS. I hope that will not be done, because it will defeat the joint resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How defeat it?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Because the amendment cannot be concurred in in the House of Representatives, in all probability.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why not?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Because there is not time. At any rate I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. LANE. Striking that out leaves nothing of the resolution. We intended to cover cases where officers under his command receipted for property, as their receipts are not recognized at the quartermaster's department.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That would recognize them. If the provisions of that act were extended to the case, the officers of the same relative rank would be the "proper officers." Extending the provisions of that act to this case distinctly and in terms would be sufficient; but it would not allow of course anybody's receipt to be taken who might happen to take a horse and give a receipt for it.

Mr. RAMSEY. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that he allow this joint resolution to be passed over informally so that I may call up the post route bill.

Mr. LANE. Oh, no. I shall never be able to get it up again.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I must insist upon going on with the tax bill presently.

Mr. LANE. I think I can show the Senator from Maine in a very few minutes that there is no use in passing the resolution if his amendment be made. It will amount simply to nothing at all. The resolution is:

That the provisions of section two of the above-entitled act, be, and they are hereby, extended to cover all cases of quartermaster's stores actually furnished to forces under command of Major General Lewis Wallace.

Under the present law, if there were proper officers under him, technically speaking, the cases would be included. But there were not, and hence the necessity for the words "duly receipted for by persons acting under his authority during the Morgan raid," &c. If you strike out that part of the resolution, the officers who acted will not be held to be proper officers; and if that clause is stricken out the resolution might as well lie on the table.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the Senator is mistaken. If amended as I propose, it will apply to whoever may be the officers holding the same relative position, on the same footing precisely as others.

Mr. LANE. I would agree to the Senator's amendment if he would leave in the words "and for the purpose of giving such receipts for property so applied said persons shall be held to be proper officers of the Government."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the Senator is mistaken in his construction. Those words I move to strike out also. I should like to have the phraseology changed to make it a little more safe.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANE. I believe the Senator from Illinois has prepared an amendment which will satisfy all parties.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to amend the resolution by striking out in line seven the words "persons acting under his authority" and inserting "acting quartermasters of his command."

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will not that raise precisely the same question which is raised under the law?

Mr. TRUMBULL. No; because this declares that the acting quartermaster's receipt shall be received. That is the difficulty now, as I understand.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the resolution to be read a third time. The resolution was read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL CAPITAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. MORRILL, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 234) to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference appointed upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon House bill No. 234, to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their first amendment, with the following amendment: in line nine, page 1, after the word "elsewhere" insert "subject to the laws of the several States."

That the Senate recede from their second amendment, with the following amendment: in line fourteen, page 1, after the word "elsewhere" insert "subject to the laws of the States as aforesaid."

That the Senate recede from their third amendment, and that the whole of section nine, as amended, be stricken from the bill.

That the Senate recede from their fourth amendment, with the following amendments: in line twenty-seven, page 6, strike out the word "twenty" and insert "one hundred and fifty;" after the word "dollars" in line one, page 7, insert "in shares of fifty dollars each;" in line two of same page strike out the word "twenty" and insert "one hundred and fifty;" strike out all of the tenth section after the word "insurances" in line three, page 7.

That the House concur in the fifth amendment of the Senate, with the following amendments: in line four of said amendment strike out the word "January" and insert in lieu thereof the word "February;" after the word "Interior" in line six of said amendment insert as follows: "a detailed report of their transactions for the preceding year;" in same line strike out the word "shall;" in line seven after the word "some" insert the word "value;" after the word "Columbia" in lines seven and eight insert "for at least ten days;" strike out the word "premiums" in lines eight and nine and insert in lieu thereof the word "profits;" at the end of said Senate amendment add the following: "together with the amount of stock subscribed and the amount actually paid in;" and the Senate agree to the same.

D. T. PATTERSON,

ULYSSES MERCUR,
MARTIN WELKER,
J. W. CHANLER,

Managers on the part of the House.

The committee also recommend the following amendments to the bill:

On page 2, strike out after the word "upon" in line five down to and including the word "upon" in line eight.

On same page, after the word "lives" in line nine insert "and health."

On page 3, strike out all after the word "that" in line eighteen over to and including the word "representatives," on page 4, line nine.

On page 4, strike out the words "members or" in lines eleven and twelve.

On same page, strike out all after the word "responsibilities" in line thirteen down to and including the word "company" in line fifteen, and insert in lieu thereof as follows: "beyond the amount of stock subscribed by them respectively."

On same page, strike out all of section five.

On same page, strike out the word "members" in line twenty-five and insert in lieu thereof the word "stockholders."

On same page, strike out the words "said deposit notes or" in lines twenty-five and twenty-six.

On same page, strike out the word "thereon" in line twenty-six, and insert in lieu thereof the words "on their stock."

Strike out all of section seven on pages 5 and 6.

On page 6, strike out the words "members or" in line nine.

JOHN W. CHANLER,

Managers on the part of the House.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report.

On motion by Mr. MORRILL,

Resolved, That the Senate agree thereto.

The Senate then proceeded to consider the recommendations of the committee of conference on the amendments to the text of the bill.

The recommendation of the committee was unanimously agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 534) to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for appointment of a marshal for a Supreme Court.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 128) authorizing limited partnerships in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 264) to grant certain privileges to the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 470) to authorize the change of a name;

A bill (S. No. 477) to amend an act entitled "An act to continue, alter, and amend the charter of the city of Washington," approved May 17, 1848;

A bill (S. No. 493) supplemental to an act to establish the Treasury Department, approved the 2d of September, 1789;

A bill (S. No. 529) to incorporate the Howard University in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 570) extending the time for the completion of certain street railways;

A bill (S. No. 589) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Theological Institute," and to define and extend the powers of the same; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 160) for the relief of Dempsey Reece, of Indiana.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1183) amendatory of "An act for the disposal of the public lands for homestead settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 202) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of certain vessels-of-war and steam machinery;

A bill (S. No. 501) amendatory of an act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Montana, approved May 26, 1864;

A bill (S. No. 460) in relation to persons imprisoned under sentence for offenses against the laws of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 547) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the reversion to the United States of the lands granted by Congress to aid in the construction of a railroad from Amboy, by Hillsdale and Lansing, to some point on or near Traverse bay, in the State of Michigan, and for the completion of said road," approved July 3, 1866; and

A bill (S. No. 550) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia," approved June 25, 1866.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1183) amendatory of an act for the disposal of the public lands for homestead settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to renew in the Senate the amendment which I offered in committee reducing the tax on whisky. It is to insert after the word "gallon," in line four of section thirteen, on page 29, the words "until the 1st day of October, 1867; and $1 50 for each and every gallon until the 1st day of April, 1868; and after that date for each and every gallon one dollar."

I think it is the predominant sentiment of the Senate that the tax upon whisky is too high, that it diminishes revenue, encourages fraud and crime from its excess, and that both good policy and good morals require that the liquor taxation should be reduced. I have no doubt that a dollar a gallon would produce a larger amount of aggregate revenue than the present high rate of two dollars. The amount of fraud, perjury, and crime would be greatly diminished, I have no doubt, by a reduction of the tax as I have proposed. I admit that it might be hard and unjust, probably might be ruinous to those who have large stocks on hand at the present time if a reduction was to take place suddenly and at once; but that is provided for by my amendment. My proposition is that the present rate shall continue for six months, and then the rate of $1 50 a gallon shall continue until the 1st of April next, and that after that time the rate shall be reduced to one dollar. It seems to me that the reduction would be proper and politic with a view to the revenue, with a view to the morals of the country, and with a view to justice to the dealers in whisky who have now large stocks on hand.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall vote for this amendment, and I should wish we were not crowded into so few hours that there is not time to consider it with deliberation; I think a great mistake was made when we placed the tax on whisky at two dollars a gallon. I thought so then, and I struggled against that tax as exorbitant and out of all proportion to the other taxes. Congress, however, thought differently, and I remember that some members of this body pretended that our revenue would be largely increased by doubling the tax upon whisky. Experience showed that we got very little revenue for a long time from whisky; and now we do not get as much revenue as we should get at one dollar a gallon tax. There are more reasons than one for this: one is that the temptation to fraud is much greater when the tax is two dollars a gallon than when it is but one dollar. I think the Senator from Maine said to-day that in tracing back the frauds it was found that frauds were practiced even when the tax upon whisky was only sixty cents a gallon. That is very likely; but still the inducement is much greater when the tax is two dollars a gallon. We should get a larger revenue by putting the tax at one dollar a gallon, not only in consequence of making more whisky pay a tax, but because the quantity of whisky produced would be very greatly increased. Now, we all know that whisky has been driven out of all other uses except to drink. People will buy it to drink whether you have a tax of two dollars a gallon on it or one dollar. I do not think it makes much difference in that point of view; but the effect of the high tax has been to drive it out of domestic uses and drive it out from the manufacturing establishments of the country. They use some other article which they can obtain cheaper to supply its place; and I have been told by manufacturers who used many barrels of whisky during the week that since this high tax upon it they have not used a single barrel; and the consequence is that not as much of it is produced. A Senator asks if I want to increase its production. Yes I do for manufacturing purposes and domestic purposes other than those of drinking; and I do not think you will reform the morals of the country by placing a tax of two dollars a gallon upon whisky. It is an unreasonable tax in my judgment. It is out of proportion to any other tax which is levied. We know that a bushel of corn, which in the State where I reside costs perhaps no more than twenty-five cents, makes some four gallons of whisky; and eight dollars tax is paid upon what the cost of the material from which it is made is not more than twenty-five cents—a tax of thirty-two hundred per cent. There is no such tax upon anything else.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Oh, it has already been argued over and over again.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know it has been argued, and I think it ought to be argued until we can reform it. If you want revenue put on a reasonable tax that can be collected. Is not the experience of last year enough to satisfy the Senator from Maine that this two-dollar tax does not work? Has he not seen whisky advertised all over the country at $1 50 a gallon when you pretend to collect two dollars a gallon tax on it? And now you put a clause in the law that nobody shall sell whisky for less than the amount of the tax. How easy it will be to evade that? The nominal price of it may be equal to the tax, but this provision will be evaded just as the tax upon the production of the article is evaded. I wish it was possible to get the attention and the thought of the Senate to this question of levying a tax of two dollars a gallon upon whisky. I call for the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The great objection to this is that the matter has been tried, and it is impossible in my judgment to get it through at this late period of the session. If I thought it was possible I might be willing to try the experiment, but it is only embarrassing the bill to no sort of purpose. The proposition was rejected in the other House by such a vote as to satisfy me that it cannot possibly pass. At this very late period to insist upon it is endangering what there is in the bill. That is my objection to it. At another time I might be willing to try it.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope there will be no change in this tax now. When the tax of two dollars a gallon was put on whisky it was admitted that for some time at least there would not be as much manufactured as before, and perhaps there was not as much; but to change the law after it has got into operation, when our system of detecting frauds has just commenced working, is yielding the whole question, in my opinion. I do not believe that this is an exorbitant tax. I do not know what use the article is for except to tax, and I certainly think it ought to be well taxed. I have not found that it lessened the consumption, unless it be for the purposes the Senator from Illinois speaks of. I do not know what mechanical and medicinal purposes he alludes to; but for all the purposes that I have known of it has been used just as freely and consumed just as much as before the tax was imposed. Other Governments, which are a great deal older than ours and have well-regulated systems of taxation, tax this article even higher than we do. If the experience of the English Government is worth anything to us I think we may follow it at least in this particular. I am for holding this tax precisely as it is, having our revenue officers instructed to execute the law, and having the most vigilant search into frauds; and let it be distinctly understood that if this article is manufactured it shall pay a tax.

Mr. HENDRICKS. From my information on the subject this interest is almost destroyed now.

Mr. POMEROY. So much the better.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is certainly not better with a view to revenue. When Senators talk about revenue, that contemplates production. Congress has nothing to do with legislating with a view to a moral reform in the country. The only object Congress can have in a tax is to produce revenue, and experience has shown that the present law does not produce revenue. It defeats revenue; it defeats production. I do not think Congress has a right to select out a northwestern interest and destroy it. The production of this article is a matter of profit to the farmers of the West. If the Senator from Kansas, or any other Senator, does not want to use it, all they have to do is to close up their mouths. It is a matter for a man to consider whether he chooses to use liquor or not. It is a necessity for many proper purposes, and its production is of importance to the State which I in part represent. This has been an unjust tax all the while. The proposition of the Senator from Kentucky is free from the objection which I suggested the other evening; this proposition is not likely to destroy the dealers who hold the article.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It is within my personal knowledge that the consumption of whisky has been reduced many thousand barrels in consequence of the tax; I speak of the whisky entering largely into the mechanical productions of the country. In lieu of whisky articles of foreign production have been imported, and the consequence has been that productions of foreign countries have taken the place of a production of our own.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Fowler, Grimes, Hendricks, Nesmith, Patterson, Ross, Saulsbury, Sprague, Trumbull, Wade, and Williams—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Kirkwood, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wilson—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Conness, Doolittle, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Howard, Johnson, Lane, McDougall, Norton, Riddle, and Yates—14.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEWART. I renew the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. Dixon,] to place sewing-machines on the free list.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope it will not be adopted. It was voted down before, and I see no necessity for taking up the time of the Senate by renewing amendments in this way. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move to amend the bill by inserting after line one hundred and twelve of section eleven, on page 18, "foundery facings, when manufactured from coal." It is the same as stove polish, under a different name. If stove polish should be exempt from taxation, this article should be also. I offer the amendment at the instance of my colleague, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know anything about it. The clause proposed to be amended puts on the free list "stove polish or other manufacture exclusively of plumbago." Is this made from plumbago?

Mr. SPRAGUE. Stove polish is made from plumbago; this is made from coal.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know what it is or what the extent of the manufacture is.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It is very small.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This clause is only intended to include stove polish for domestic purposes.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRESWELL. I move to amend the bill by inserting after line one hundred and thirteen of section nine—

Also in the paragraph relating to "copper and brass tubes, nails, rivets, sheet lead, lead pipes, and shot," by striking out the words "sheet lead, lead pipes, and shot" and adding to the said paragraph the words "on sheet lead, lead pipes, and shot, a tax of one fourth of one cent per pound."

The only object is to make the tax specific and certain upon sheet lead, lead pipes, and shot. It is now five per cent. ad valorem, and the difficulty is that with unfair manufacturers the revenue is defrauded. I am sure the amendment I offer will increase the revenue and give strength to the trade.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The same provision was attempted in relation to copper and brass tubes, and it was found, on examination, that it would not have the effect.

Mr. CRESWELL. That was an entirely different article.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know they are different articles; but they ought to pay something. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. CRESWELL. So far as I am informed by gentlemen familiar with this trade—

Mr. FESSENDEN. If we are to put on every amendment that every interested person outside solicits we shall never get through.

Mr. CRESWELL. For the life of me I cannot see why the chairman of the committee on Finance should object to giving this article greater certainty.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know that this will have that effect.

Mr. CRESWELL. The trade think so.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It has been found in regard to other articles that such a provision cannot be made operative, and therefore the clause to which I referred was struck out on the suggestion of the commissioner, and probably the same objection would apply to this.

Mr. CRESWELL. I have understood that was a mistake.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Of course the commissioner does not know anything about the operation of the bill so well as those in the business! [Laughter.]

Mr. CRESWELL. I suppose we all know something about it. It may be an entirely erroneous conjecture.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope Senators will not continue to offer amendments on mere suggestions of outsiders. If this course be persisted in we shall never get through with the bill.

Mr. CRESWELL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What is the effect of it?

Mr. CRESWELL. The effect is merely to relieve sheet lead, lead pipes, and shot from the ad valorem tax of five per cent., and to make the manufacture subject to a specific tax of one fourth of a cent per pound. It gives greater certainty to the tax, and I am sure will result in a greater product to the Government, as well as greater certainty to the trade.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The commissioner does not think so.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Creswell, Davis, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Nesmith, Patterson, Ross, Sprague, Van Winkle, and Wade—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Cowan, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Howe, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Conness, Cragin, Doolittle, Fogg, Fowler, Guthrie, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Lane, Norton, Nye, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Trumbull, and Yates—18.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move to amend the bill by inserting the words "or of cotton" after "wool" where it first occurs in line one hundred and forty-three of section nine, on page 11, and by inserting the words "or cotton" after "wool" where it next occurs in the same line, so as to make the clause read, "on manufactures of wool or of cotton, or of which wool or cotton is the chief component material, or the component material of chief value, two and one half per cent. ad valorem."

This is a very important amendment, and I am very anxious that the Senate should adopt it. The bill reduces the tax on woolen goods from five per cent. to two and a half per cent., and the question naturally arises why select out woolen goods and not embrace cotton goods? Why this distinction? In December, 1865, I took occasion to suggest to the Senate that if taxes were left as they then existed, and if there was no change in the tariff, the result would be that in six months from that time your woolen interest would be dead; and I say to the Senate now, that if they continue this tax of five per cent. three fourths of the smaller cotton manufactures of this country will be prostrated. I hold in my hand a letter from a southern man who has been engaged in cotton manufacturing for the last forty years, and he writes thus:

"If no better can be done, reduce the tax on cotton manufactures to the same level as the proposed tax on woolen goods."

That is, two and a half per cent. He continues:

"I cannot see why they intend to discriminate. During all the war the woolen business was much better than the cotton business. The cotton business suffered terribly in this war. We have only had one year of good trade, part of 1865 and 1866. Now it is all up with us. Our business is very bad. We have immense stocks of goods on hand, made out of high-priced cotton. On these we shall lose heavily. Our mills that are not stopped are now working on short time."

Mr. President, you do not hear any application from the section that I have the honor in part to represent for the reduction of this tax, and why? The tax as it now exists will drive from the country all the smaller cotton manufactures, and will throw the business into the hands of the larger establishments, into the hands of monopolies, corporations with great capital. This tax is certain to drive from the country all the smaller cotton manufactures in Georgia, in the Carolinas, in Delaware, in New Jersey, and in Pennsylvania, everywhere where they exist, and in their stead to build up the great manufacturer. If that is the desire of the Senate, that those who are great already shall be greater, let them continue this tax. Why, sir, the tax of three cents a pound on raw cotton, and of five per cent. upon the manufactured article, amounts to just about as much on all the heavier articles of goods as the price of cotton was before the war. Who pays this great tax? Where does it rest? It rests upon the men who obtain a dollar and a quarter a day for their wages; it is paid by the people of those States with great populations, the masses of whom receive small compensation for their labor. Sir, there is nothing in the whole list of taxable articles that bears one half the amount of tax that cotton manufactures do this day.

When it is recollected that the price of cotton is three times what it was before the war, it must be plain to Senators that a five per cent. tax upon the manufactured article is three times as much taxation as the corresponding rate would be upon any other article similarly situated. Take wool, if you please, by way of comparison. The price of wool to-day is not very much greater than it was before the war. A tax of five per cent., therefore, upon woolen manufactures would not bear more heavily than the same tax would have done before the war, whereas that tax upon cotton manufactures bears with three times the weight it would before the war. Sir, the women and children will bear this burden, your sewing-girls, your housemaids, those who work for their daily living, and whose compensation is small. The taxation is out of all proportion to that upon any other interest that I know of; and the result will be, as I have said before, to destroy and lay prostrate the smaller establishments. It seems to me the Senate should be warned in time. The great concerns can live and prosper; they can live when they get a profit of one half of one cent a yard; but no small concern can live a day upon that compensation. This tax will prevent the further running of every small mill in this country.

It may be asked why I should be interested in maintaining the smaller establishments. I was requested in 1857 to devise a course of policy that would prevent the banks from suspending, and it was in so many words stated, "We will destroy all the smaller interests, all the small people in this business with you and me." But, sir, that will not do in this country, and it will not do in any country. You cannot concentrate a monopoly of the cotton manufacturing interest in this country; and if there are any large interests who have used this bill as a means for carrying out that state of things they will destroy themselves, for they cannot collect such an interest as this in one locality; and when they attempt to drive this hard bargain, when they attempt to destroy and drive from the business operations of this country the smaller interests, they are at the same time striking a blow at themselves, and they in their turn will be served in the same way.

I know as certainly as I stand here that those who advocate the continuation of this tax advocate it for the very reason that they desire to crush out the smaller interests. The gentleman from whose letter I have read is a gentleman from Delaware, who stands as high as any other man in this country, and he says that their mills which are not stopped are to-day running upon short time. The small mills engaged upon heavy articles of cotton production are as certain to be driven out of the business of this country as that this tax remains.

No commodity in the history of the world during the last five years has ever experienced such great embarrassments as this; none has been cultivated at such great expense; upon no article has there been such great loss; upon no article in the history of manufacturing has there been such a great risk run by those who engaged in it as has been run by those who have devoted themselves to the cultivation and the manufacture of cotton; and yet to-day you continue a war tax when it is self-evident that two thirds of those engaged in it must stop if the tax continues.

I said a year ago last December, considering the exorbitant tax upon woollens which led to the importation of woolen goods into this country, that before six months expired that interest would be prostrated. That remark has been verified; and after that great interest has been prostrated what is now proposed? My honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] comes in with a bill specially to protect them after they have been destroyed. If they attempted to-day to sell the product they have on hand and the machinery and the buildings that they have erected for the manufacture of that product three fourths of them could not pay fifty cents on the dollar. The same course is now being pursued toward the cotton interest. This bill reduces the tax on woolen goods to two and a half per cent. Now, what I ask of the Senate is, that they shall pause before they destroy the cotton interest. Take the matter in time, take warning from the fate of the woolen interest, and avert the disaster which is as sure to come as that Senators sit in their chairs. The woolen interest was prostrated because prompt legislation was not had when the Senate and the country were warned of the impending danger. Now, you propose to continue a war tax upon an interest which stands exactly as the woolen interest stood a year ago.

I have been pleased by the communication from which I have read, sent to me by a man who has been engaged in this business for forty years. I have been desirous of exposing the selfish policy of those great monopolists, those great corporations, who would absorb every interest into their own hands; and I desire to tell them that never with my help shall they be forwarded in their designs.

Why, sir, there is in the woolen bill which we had before us one of the most nefarious, the meanest, the most detestable designs for that particular interest that I ever heard or read of. A great interest that combines within itself more capital than forty of the smaller cotton mills that we now desire to help, who are making millions of money to-day, come in here in this woolen bill for additional protection and additional law, that they may continue to thrive and to overshadow all the other interests. By the very greatness of their own they would absorb and destroy all around them.

I do not want to take up the time of the Senate on this matter. I feel a deep interest in this question. I know that if this tax is continued as it now is the smaller manufacturers of cotton in the middle and southern States must go to the wall. We have but very few small manufacturers in my own section of the country; but in the middle and southern States they have begun to show themselves, and have gained a foothold and gained strength; but all that are engaged in the manufacture of heavy goods must stop, and the revenue that you expect now from these manufactures will cease to exist. I think justice to the localities where these establishments are located requires you to pause in this course of legislation.

If the interest which I am seeking to benefit were confined to Rhode Island, the Senator from Maine and the Committee on Finance might attack it as they chose; but if they will look into the State of New York they will find that it has more cotton interests than all of New England. Go into New Jersey, and they will find this interest distributed in almost every town. Go into Delaware, and they will find forty or fifty of these smaller mills. Go into Maryland and into South Carolina and Georgia, and they will find them there. When, hereafter, they find that the continuation of a burdensome tax has compelled the suspension of all these establishments they will ask what is the reason of this; who has done this?

Sir, I have done my duty when I have warned the Senate that the effect of this burdensome tax, of this war tax in time of peace, will be the destruction of this interest. I ask for the yeas and nays on the proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to say one word. This will take about six millions from the revenue, and I do not know how the Senator proposes to make it up.

Mr. SPRAGUE. And the result of continuing the tax will be to destroy forty millions.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It cannot destroy $40,000,000 of revenue, because we do not get that much revenue from it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Forty millions of property.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I appreciate the very disinterested efforts of my friend in behalf of New Jersey, Delaware, Georgia, and South Carolina, and I dare say they do; but in my judgment we cannot afford to strike off this revenue. If, as my friend from Rhode Island says, the continuation of this policy will be advantageous to the large establishments, we had better continue it and put something in his pocket. He admits that a very large portion of them are doing very well, and can make money. It is perfectly well understood that the cotton interest is not suffering, and we cannot afford to part with these $6,000,000 of revenue just now.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator from Maine asks where this tax is to be made up from. That very same argument was used in reference to what I considered a perfectly fair amendment in regard to the leather interest. Since that vote was taken the revenue has been increased $6,000,000 by an increased tax of one cent per pound on cotton.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, a decrease of one cent.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I beg the Senator's pardon. The vote that has been taken has raised the tax from one cent to two cents. The revenue from raw cotton last year at three cents was $18,000,000; so that the increase from one cent to two cents makes a difference of $6,000,000. Therefore the $6,000,000 of which the Senator speaks has been made up since that vote was taken. Now, sir, looking at the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, I find that the estimate was that the expenditures of the Government for three quarters of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, were estimated to exceed $112,000,000 beyond the receipts. The result was widely different. The receipts exceeded the estimates $89,000,000, making a difference of $289,000,000 between the estimates and the result. I believe that if we follow this policy of laying heavy taxes on cotton and on all the manufacturing interests of the country, while we seem to be perfectly regardless of protection, of protecting our labor from foreign competition, we shall reduce our manufacturing interests to a position in which they will be unable to pay any tax. I know from information that comes to me that our factories are now being closed. Where shall we then look for our revenue? I hope that the amendment which has been proposed will be adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We put glass into the free list for the benefit of New Jersey. I really think my friend ought to be content with that, and not seek to throw off the revenue on cotton goods.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Creswell, Davis, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Howe, McDougall, Nesmith, Patterson, Ross, Sprague, and Wilson—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Yates—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Doolittle, Fowler, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Norton, Poland, Pomeroy, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Sherman—17.

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, its title was amended by adding the words "and for other purposes."

TOWN SITES ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 532) for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment with the following amendment to be added to it:

Provided, That no title shall be acquired under the provisions of this act to any mine of gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper.

Mr. POMEROY. This has not been examined by any committee that I know of.

Mr. STEWART. It has been examined by the Committee on Public Lands of each House.

Mr. CONNESS. It is the same bill that was debated here the other day.

Mr. JOHNSON. How does the House amendment differ from our bill?

Mr. STEWART. It does not differ in any material particular, except that they have left out a proviso of mine.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to know how the amendment varies the bill.

Mr. STEWART. The amendment I now propose?

Mr. JOHNSON. I speak of the House amendment, which I understand is a substitute for our bill.

Mr. STEWART. They have changed the phraseology, but in substance the two bills are the same except that theirs is a general bill and ours only applied to a few States specifically named.

Mr. JOHNSON. Was the amendment the Senator proposes in the original bill?

Mr. STEWART. It was in the original bill, but not in the same language. I think this language will be acceptable.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator from Nevada will agree, I think it is best, perhaps, to have the matter referred to the Committee on Public Lands. They can consider it in their seats and report it back at almost any time. That will be more satisfactory to the Senate, and I hope it will be done. I move that the bill and amendment be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the bill by striking out the second section, in these words:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall not be over fifty per cent. of the foregoing appropriations expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and the residue thereof shall not be expended till otherwise ordered.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the bill by adding the following additional section:

And be it further enacted, That in order to determine the relative powers of resistance of the turret and the broadside systems of iron-clad vessels-of-war, and whether or not our present heaviest guns are adequate to the rapid destruction of the heaviest plated ships now built or deemed practicable on either system, and whether or not our best stone forts will resist our heaviest guns, and if not, what increase in strength by adding either stone or iron, or variation in form is necessary to that end, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized to detail a joint board of not less than six competent officers, three from the Army and three from the Navy, whose duty it shall be to construct and test by firing upon them such targets as they may deem necessary for the purpose above named; and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and directed to supply the board with such facilities for this purpose as they may require: Provided, It can be done from the unexpended funds and materials now at their disposal, the expenses to be borne equally by the War and Navy Departments, and from such funds at their disposal as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may designate respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following amendment with the approval of the Committee on Finance, to come in after line sixty-six on page 8:

For the construction and repair of barracks for engineer troops at the depot of engineer supplies at Willet's Point, New York, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1868.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was to insert after line thirty-three on page 2, at the end of the appropriation for the Boston navy-yard:

For purchase of wharf adjoining the navy-yard $125,000: Provided, That this sum shall cover the whole cost of the property, and it can be acquired on terms satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to know whether that is the sum that was fixed last year?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The same sum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause from line forty-one to line forty-seven:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to receive and accept a deed of gift, when offered by the State of Connecticut, of a tract of land situated on the Thames river, near New London, Connecticut, with a water front of not less than one mile, to be held by the United States for naval purposes.

Mr. FOSTER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) I should like to know why the committee proposed this amendment, striking out those words.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The committee thought it would be time enough to act upon the question of accepting a deed of gift to land on the Thames, in Connecticut, near New London, when the State of Connecticut offered it. It has not offered anything of that sort at present. To pass a provision of this kind is entirely useless, certainly unusual. We do not know now what is proposed to be done with this land if it shall be given. When Congress acts on such a matter Congress should know distinctly what the offer is, instead of leaving it to the discretion of somebody else before the offer is made to accept it when it shall be made. Besides, we supposed that if this provision was made it might be considered as an implied obligation, having accepted the gift, to proceed to use it for naval purposes, which at present Congress is not prepared to determine. These were the simple reasons that operated on the mind of the committee in proposing to strike out the clause. We saw no good reason why it should be there.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a mistake to suppose that an offer of this land has not been made by the Legislature of the State of Connecticut. If I mistake not, two years ago the Legislature took the necessary steps to transfer the jurisdiction of this tract of land to the United States. Everything requisite to be done on the part of the State to convey it to the United States has been done by the State of Connecticut; and if the offer has not been formally or technically made, it is because the State, in her modesty, has not thought proper to appear obtrusive in regard to her gift. It may not be as "munificent" as some other gifts that have been offered to the United States and accepted; but I can assure the Senator, and I can assure the Senate, that so far as the State of Connecticut is concerned there will be nothing implied in the acceptance of this gift by the United States; and, further than that, it will not be an expensive gift to the United States, for it will not cost what some other gifts accepted by Congress will cost before they can be of any possible utility to the country.

The frigate Sabine, which is the practice-ship of the Navy, has been making New London harbor her station for more than a year past. It is very frequently the case that the young lads on board are taken on shore to be drilled, and it would be very convenient if there was a drilling-ground which could be used for that purpose. There are very many purposes for which this land may be used with very great advantage by the Government. There is nothing, as I apprehend, wanting on the part of the State of Connecticut to complete the offering of the property. Her action may not be officially before the Senate; but I can assure the Senator from Maine and the Senate that everything has been done which is requisite in order to give the Government of the United States a tract of land there which will be very valuable, in my opinion, for naval purposes. It seems to me a little singular that it should be declined. I can see no reason why it should be. It costs nothing to accept it. If it should not be offered finally in such a manner as to convey anything, the Secretary of the Navy will probably not accept it; but if it should be deemed of any possible use to the Government I can see no reason why it should be refused. I confess the opposition of the honorable Senator to the acceptance of a conveyance of this sort seems to me strange, unusual, unaccountable.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will state to the Senator that my opposition is not more to this than it was to League Island. I voted against the acceptance of that gift knowing all about it; and now I vote against the acceptance of this gift because I do not know anything about it, and because Congress knows nothing about it. What the consequence may be, what use it may be put to, what necessity we may have for it, I think ought to be known before we enter into an implied obligation to use any place for naval purposes.

Mr. GRIMES. Before the question is taken on striking out the clause, I move to amend it so that it shall read:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to receive and accept a clear and indefeasible title deed by gift of any tract of land from any State, county, city, or other municipality or individual in the United States, and to be used only for naval purposes: Provided, That such acceptance shall not imply any obligation on the part of the United States to use or occupy the same or expend money thereon.

I am not exactly clear that it would not be advisable for many purposes that the Government should have stations along the coast where under certain exigencies there might be depots of naval supplies, or where naval vessels might at times be laid up. Two or three places on the coast of Maine have been mentioned in this connection. Wiscasset, I think, is one; and an application has been made I believe from Booth bay. I remember that my friends from Ohio a year ago were insisting on a station being established either at Sandusky or Cleveland, and certainly one was proposed on Lake Michigan. Now, if the municipal authorities at these places saw fit to give us a grant of land, to be used by us whenever it should be required for naval purposes, I do not know any reason why the Government should not accept it.

Mr. FOSTER. As an amendment to the amendment moved by the Senator from Iowa, I move to add at the close of it "and the principle herein contained shall apply to the gift of League Island."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The Senator from Iowa moves an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. With great deference to the Chair, I beg to suggest that there is a motion to strike out the clause, and the Senator from Iowa simply proposes to amend it before it is stricken out. His, therefore, is an original amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is in order, and the question is on that amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, as amended.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Finance to strike out the clause which has been read.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What objection is there to that clause?

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I am trying to ascertain.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the State of Connecticut is willing to give this property I do not see any objection to our taking it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have stated the objection at length once.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was in favor of accepting League Island for the purposes of a navy-yard at Philadelphia, and contributed what little I could toward securing the passage of that bill. Now, if the State of Connecticut wishes to make a present to the Government of some water front on the Thames river, I do not know that it is unbecoming the United States to accept it. There is no obligation on the part of the Government by receiving it to improve it, and I think there are some purposes for which this location, if secured, would be of value.

Mr. CATTELL. The Senator from Indiana asked what objection there was to this clause. The Finance Committee in looking at the subject discovered that there had been no offer whatever from the State of Connecticut of a gift of this kind, and they consequently concluded that it would be as well for the United States to wait until a tender was made, and not invite Connecticut to make it at present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the tender from Philadelphia?

Mr. CATTELL. The tender from Philadelphia was by the city councils having purchased League Island and offered it to the Government as a free gift.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will suggest to the Senator from Indiana that the last words of the clause "to be used by the United States for naval purposes" contain, in my opinion, an implied obligation on the part of the Government that they will at some time use the premises for naval purposes. I think that Congress ought to have the supervision over that question, and decide in the first instance before the land is accepted whether they think it advisable to accept it before they enter into such an implied obligation. We do not know what it may lead to, and it is simply removing the judgment of the question whether we ought to have it or want it for naval purposes from Congress to the Secretary of the Navy, whoever he may be.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The point made by the Senator from New Jersey in answer to my inquiry is just this: that the State of Connecticut has not proposed to make this gift to the Government, and it is a question of propriety whether the Government of the United States shall suggest it or the State shall suggest it.

Mr. FOSTER. The Senator from Indiana will pardon me for suggesting that the Legislature of the State of Connecticut two or three years ago passed a resolution directing the jurisdiction of this soil to be conveyed to the United States, and made all the provisions necessary to give to the United States jurisdiction and everything over this tract of land which the State as such could do, and other provisions were made. I have not the resolution before me, this matter having come up suddenly and unexpectedly to me. All the provisions necessary to give to the United States title to this tract of land have been made by the State in the most ample manner.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That was my recollection about it, though I never investigated the question in regard to New London, because I did not think it properly arose when we were considering the other proposition in regard to League Island. The objection of the Senator from Maine, I think, is not sufficient to control me in my vote on this question. I do not think it is implied that the Government will improve this site; but I think it means just what it says, that the Government will use it for no other purpose than naval purposes. I think the faith of the Government will be committed that far, that we cannot accept of this gift and afterward use it for some other purposes. The State of Connecticut offers it for a particular purpose, and we accept it for that purpose; but we do not agree to improve it unless the interests of the Government so require. Therefore I shall not vote to strike this clause out.

Mr. DIXON. What are "naval purposes?" The Senator from Maine objects that the Government of the United States may be bound to use this ground for some naval purpose, and is in that way committed. I will state that there are almost always more or less ships-of-war of the United States lying in the harbor of New London every season for several years past, and I believe at this very time there is one there, if not more. It does not seem to me that there is any committal here which can injure the Government at all.

Mr. DAVIS. I think this is a new form of competition between Connecticut and Pennsylvania. It seems to me that there is more in both of these munificent gifts than meets the eye, and that the object is to create some consideration upon which some demand shall be made in the future upon Congress for legislation in regard to both places. I have no doubt that probably at the next session or the session afterward there will be a claim set up that in consideration of the munificent gift of League Island the site of the present naval depot in Philadelphia shall be ceded by the United States to that city. I suspect that one of the objects of this proposition on the part of the State of Connecticut is to be at least as liberal as Philadelphia, and to have as much of consideration upon which to receive the future benefit of favorable legislation from Congress as Philadelphia will have by reason of the cession of League Island.

Mr. FOSTER. The honorable Senator from Kentucky will pardon me a word right there. On the part of Connecticut we do not claim this to be a munificent gift. We do not wish that epithet applied to it. We certainly do not call it so.

Mr. DAVIS. I stand corrected.

Mr. FOSTER. It is by no means a munificent gift, although I must say that in my opinion it is worth half a dozen League Islands; but it is not in the judgment of the people of Connecticut at all munificent, and we do not suppose the General Government to be under any obligation to accept it. We have no ulterior designs to interfere with League Island. We will keep clear of that if we can, and advise all our friends to do so.

Mr. DAVIS. I stand corrected, and frankly concede that the State of Connecticut had not claimed for her gift the character of munificence, and agree with the Senator in another particular. I think that the gift which is now offered by Connecticut will be of ten times the value of League Island to the United States. I have no doubt that League Island has already initiated a very great expenditure of money on the part of the United States, and that it will be found the most costly gift that was ever characterized on the earth as a munificent gift to the donee. I wish we could get rid of both these gifts, and if some gentleman will move an amendment that League Island shall be surrendered instead of this gift of a tract of land at the mouth of the Thames being received I should be disposed to vote for the proposition. I wish it could be made and successfully made. I want to get clear of League Island, and I do not think there is any occasion for accepting the gift either of League Island or of a tract at the mouth of the Thames, because I think the naval depot at Washington city is the proper site for an iron-clad station, and that the Government ought to put it here at the metropolis, where there is better water, and everything more favorable to the construction of a great iron-clad depot. This is the proper place for it in my humble opinion.

Mr. COWAN. If my ancient Trojan friend [Mr. DAVIS] had been in Troy with his extraordinary sagacity to look into the wooden horse, I have no doubt he would have seen the armed men contained in it, and perhaps have saved the city. He is evidently suspicious of gifts; he fears the Greeks bearing gifts; but I am free to say that his arguments have not yet convinced me that the United States may not accept gifts, and accept them all over the country on the same terms. Why not? Is it to be presumed that the next Congress will have no more sense than this? I expect my friend from Kentucky would not be guilty of indulging in any such violent presumption as that.

Mr. DAVIS. Perhaps less sense.

Mr. COWAN. If that be true, I should think he would have small hopes of the country.

Mr. DAVIS. That is true also.

Mr. COWAN. Facilis descensus Averni; but suppose we are on the downward road rapidly, how does that affect this question? I really never could see much objection to receiving grants of this kind. I cannot conceive now of any possible mischief which can come from them. I was very strongly in favor of accepting League Island, and I was in favor of it because it was a gift, because it cost nothing, and because we were not bound by any obligation I could see to use it even for naval purposes. I look upon this in the same way; and without any desire to be revengeful, I would be glad to accept this from Connecticut; and I think it is a munificent gift, with all due deference to my honorable friend, [Mr. FOSTER,] a great gift. Why not? It is true, Connecticut is a small State, and not very wealthy, I presume, and therefore the more munificent the gift. Very wealthy people may give larger gifts than poorer people; the widow's mite may be more in proportion than Peabody's million. Still, not to jest on this subject, Connecticut is able to give, and that she has done. I think we ought to accept it and trust to the future to make a proper use of it. I am not by any means disposed to tinge the future with a rose color, but I believe there will be no disposition in future Congresses to expend money idly or uselessly upon either League Island or the Thames. We shall have difficulty in expending money uselessly anywhere if the present spirit of contention goes on, if all over the Union such a spirit prevails that we cannot agree upon a tariff, we cannot agree upon a revenue bill, and we cannot reconcile conflicting interests anywhere, and cannot prevent their clashing so as to stop almost the wheels of Government. I learn from a report lately made to the House of Representatives that it is almost considered a crime to attempt a reconciliation between the President and the legislative department of the country. Think of it!

Gentlemen suggest that I am taking up the time of the Senate with useless talk. It may be so, but I wished to calm the apprehensions of my friend from Kentucky. I am pretty certain that when it is proposed to expend money either upon League Island or upon the Thames there will be here champions ready to protect the Treasury against any onslaught which may be made upon it.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us vote.

Mr. DAVIS. I assure the honorable Senator from Ohio that I am not going to make a speech, but I must remonstrate strongly and earnestly against the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania finding any apology for accepting League Island in the Trojans receiving the Grecian horse. If that present had been tendered in the form of an irreclaimable swamp, instead of in the form of a Grecian horse, the Trojans never would have admitted it within the walls of Troy. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Finance, to strike out the clause which has been read.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out the following clause from line ninety-eight to line one hundred and two:

For pay of some suitable person, appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, to examine the archives of the Department and other sources of information, and collect and collate the facts which may illustrate the history of the United States Navy, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and nineteen, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the appropriation "for preparing for publication the American Nautical Almanac," $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. Are there any other amendments from the Finance Committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) The amendments reported by the committee have been completed.

Mr. CONNESS. I move then to amend the bill on page 4, line eighty-nine, by inserting after the words "Washington, District of Columbia" the words "and Mare Island, California." It is the clause requiring the nomination by the President, and the confirmation by the Senate, of master mechanics at certain navy-yards.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no objection to it. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Committee on Finance recommended an increase of the appropriation for preparing for publication the American Nautical Almanac from $15,000 to $25,000. They were governed in that by the estimates and by what was said about $15,000 probably not being enough. I understand from my friend from Iowa that the gentleman having charge of it thinks that $6,000 more, $21,000 in all, will be sufficient. I therefore move to reconsider the amendment of the committee for the sake of amending it.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not know that my recollection is accurate on the subject; but the gentleman who called on me wrote in my committee-room a letter to the Senator from Maine, and I suppose that was true.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I never received it. I never had any letter from him.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move to amend that clause by striking out "fifteen" and inserting "twenty-one;" so that it will read:

For preparing for publication the American Nautical Almanac, $21,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend the bill by inserting on page 2, after line thirty-six, the following:

Naval Laboratory, New York:
For repairs of apparatus, machinery, fixtures, painting, glazing, wagons, furniture, &c., $3,500.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think that is right. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am authorized by the Committee on Naval Affairs to propose the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to negotiate with the city of Brooklyn, in the State of New York, and to effect a further exchange of lands in Wallabout bay between the United States and the said city, and thereupon to make, execute, and deliver good and sufficient deeds and releases therefor.

I will explain this amendment in a word or two. By the act of July 2, 1864, the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to make an exchange in this language of some lands between the city of Brooklyn and the navy-yard. An exchange was made, but that exchange did not adjust the grounds as is desirable. The Secretary understands that the exercise of the power is exhausted, that he has not the power to make any further exchange. I have here a letter from the head of the Bureau of Docks and Yards which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.
BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS, March 1, 1867.

SIR: The city of Brooklyn and the Navy Department have in view a further exchange of ground and water privileges at the navy-yard, New York. The terms proposed are not yet consummated, and it is not certain that they will be; but it will require legislation of Congress, as I think, to confirm such arrangement if agreed upon by the parties. It would be well that such a resolution be passed at once authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make such exchange on terms which may be agreed upon, and which are supposed under all the circumstances to advantage both parties.

The Secretary has referred this matter to this bureau subject to his approval.

JOSEPH SMITH,
Chief of Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Navy Department really require this, and if the Secretary of the Navy makes an application for this power, I should be in favor of giving it to him; but I do not quite understand that that is the application.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not know that I understand the question asked by the Senator from New York. The act of 1864 authorized the Secretary of the Navy to negotiate an exchange of some lands between the navy-yard and the city of Brooklyn. One exchange has been made, and that is understood by the Department to exhaust the power. A further exchange is desired, but it cannot be made except there be a renewal of the power. The amendment which I propose is in the language of the act of 1864, except that it says "further exchange." This is submitted, just as the act of 1864 submitted it, to the discretion and judgment of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I move to insert on page 4, line eighty-four, after the words "master laborer" the words "master mason, master cooper, master boat-builder, master spar-maker, and superintendent of rope-walk." Those all come within the enumeration which precedes them. The passage immediately before is as follows:

Provided, That the offices of civil engineer, master machinist, master carpenter, master joiner, master blacksmith, master boiler-maker, master sailmaker, master plumber, master painter, master caulker, master laborer, and naval storekeepers, be, and the same are hereby, established in connection with the navy-yards at Kittery, Maine, &c.

I propose to insert the words I have read after "master laborer." It merely adds to the enumerated list.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are they to be appointed by the President?

Mr. SUMNER. By the President just the same as the others, and the same reason is applicable to them that is applicable to the others.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are they as important?

Mr. SUMNER. Two of them are full as important as any. I have several letters from gentlemen familiar with the operations of the Charlestown navy-yard, in which they say it is very desirable that this addition should be made.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire if they have all these offices at the navy-yards?

Mr. SUMNER. At Charlestown they have; at some of the other yards they have not.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This would apply to the navy-yards at Kittery, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and Washington.

Mr. SUMNER. If they have not these offices at those navy-yards then this is not applicable to them.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But this establishes them. It makes it necessary to have the office of a master rope-walker [laughter] at Philadelphia, Washington, and all these places. I do not know but you will have a rope-dancer next. I do not know whether these offices are established at these places.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As a rule they are not.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then we are to establish these rope-dancers and rope-walkers and masters of all these various performances. I doubt the propriety of establishing them in this bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no objection to inserting the words "so far as the same may be necessary in these yards respectively."

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think we are carrying this to a great extent.

Mr. SUMNER. I merely wish to apply to these other officers the same precaution that we apply to those already mentioned.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My own opinion is that the whole thing is an absurdity.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think so, too.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts is just about as proper as the rest of this proviso. The whole thing is mighty cheap, a getting down small for Congress, in my opinion. Here are certain persons that superintend mechanical employes or laborers for the Government, and they must be constituted into officers to be confirmed by the United States Senate, as if they were officers of dignity and importance under the Constitution of the United States! Why, sir, if a machinist is appointed, what does the Senate know about him as a machinist?

Mr. SUMNER. I will ask the Senator with his permission, when a second lieutenant is appointed what does the Senate know about him?

Mr. HENDRICKS. For a second lieutenant we expect a man of ordinary intelligence and cultivation, and the Senate can judge for that office just as well as for a postmaster, just as well as for a revenue collector. But a master machinist is a man who is learned in his particular trade, and whether he be fit for the place the Senate can form no judgment at all. That is generally ascertained by having a test of his skill by practical men. Generally they grow up in the shops, promoted from one position to another until they become master machinists. The idea of the Senate of the United States undertaking to confirm a master machinist is too ridiculous. In my judgment it is beneath the dignity of the body to talk about it. We want for that position a man who knows how to construct machinery, a man of practical business and good judgment; and who can tell of that as well as the person in command at the navy-yard. If he is not found to be suitable he ought to be dismissed at once. Now, if you require him to be confirmed by the Senate, and he cannot be removed except a case be made out, and it be tried before the Senate, I say it defeats the efficiency of our navy-yards, and it is a blow at the good of the Government and of the service for political purposes. It is beneath the dignity of Congress to talk about it. Whether it be the master machinist or the rope-dancer, as the Senator now proposes to amend, is a matter of no consequence. The whole thing ought to be stricken out. If this amendment fails, I shall move to strike out the whole clause.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President—

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us strike it all out.

Mr. COWAN. I am perfectly satisfied to do that. I rose for the purpose of saying that I think another very wholesome amendment might be made now. Why all this trouble about master machinists and rope-walkers and the like of that? It is to contrive some kind of machinery by which they may be turned to political advantage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are they not now?

Mr. COWAN. That is the trouble; and they always have been. Now, if all the people who seek employment in the public navy-yards and other public works were disfranchised there would be no difficulty about this subject; the politicians would not care a cent who you made foreman, or who you made master of any particular branch; but it is because they are to be manipulated through these positions and these offices and made of use to political parties that these questions arise. I understand the motive of this new procedure. Always heretofore the President and his party had the advantage of these things. Now, the dominant party want to secure this influence in some way or other, and they want to get the advantage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We give the appointment to the President.

Mr. COWAN. But it is by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. That is only making it worse, because it is bringing it into a higher arena, into a larger theater, and giving it greater importance; and the fact is, confirmations by the Senate, if you undertake to run them into all these things, will become such an absurdity that the Senate itself will be absurd. It will be impossible for the body to make the necessary examinations required and to perform its duties here.

Mr. SUMNER. I have one word to say in reply to the Senator from Indiana. He says, why should the Senate act upon a machinist? I ask him, why should the Senate act upon an engineer? It does now act upon engineers. We confirm them or reject them as we please; and the reason is just as good in one case as in the other. Then the Senator asks what is the reason for this provision? I will tell the Senator; there is no secret in it; I will disclose it to him so that he shall know it completely. It is to provide against the exercise of a peculiar political influence over these places by the Administration here in Washington. The Secretary of the Navy has exerted his power over these officers. It is felt by all people who are familiar with it, injuriously to the public interests.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator asks a question which I will answer now if he will allow me.

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. He asks how the Senate know anything about an engineer. The engineer before he can be appointed at all must undergo an examination. That examination in regard to his fitness comes to the Senate, and the Senate can have some information about it, though I do not think that the confirmation by the Senate of even that class of officers is important.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well. The argument is just as strong in one case as in the other; and it is now proposed to apply the principle to these cases simply to meet an abuse which has recently occurred. And permit me to say that the Senate is just as competent to deal with these cases as the gentlemen who now deal with them. For instance, these appointments are now made by the naval constructor and naval officers, who as a general rule know nothing of mechanical duties; and yet they appoint these mechanics. In appointing them latterly in the yard with which I have most acquaintance they have followed not merit, but simply political interests. They have made all these appointments subordinate to party politics. I think we ought now to interfere and check it. I am sorry that there is an occasion for it; but I do think that the occasion has come.

Mr. ANTHONY. I did not happen to be present when this matter was before the Committee on Naval Affairs. I suppose this bill was before that committee before it was reported.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This bill does not come from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. ANTHONY. The naval appropriation bill has always been before the Committee on Naval Affairs at former sessions. I should like to know the views of my friend the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, upon this legislation upon an appropriation bill, which brings to the confirmation of the Senate, as I understand, for the consideration of the Senate, officers some of whom control from three to five men. Here is the master caulker, the master sailmaker, the master plumber, the master painter. I understand that in some of these navy-yards they do not have the control of but four or five men; and if they are confirmed by the Senate, and the bill which we have passed with regard to the tenure of office becomes a law, they cannot be turned out except by the assent of the Senate, and we are to be called upon here in executive session to discuss the qualifications of a master painter in a navy-yard who has the control of seven men. I should like to have my friend from Iowa give us his views on this subject.

Mr. CONNESS. I am very much inclined to take the view of only opposing this amendment, but all such provisions made here. The Senator from Pennsylvania has nearly convinced me that if we do these things the navy-yards will become as demoralized as the collection of the revenue in the State of Pennsylvania. It is a bad thing to change officers who are merely engaged in what might be called the useful avocations, who get acquainted with trades and become masters of the situation, who learn the intricacies of the internal revenue laws, and fill the places of those persons with mere tyros. I incline to think that that ought not to be done. I am glad to see a little sign even of latter-day reformation on the part of my friend from Pennsylvania.

The severest rule applied in this respect that I know of is the one applied by the honorable Secretary of the Navy, which we have had partially here before us, in the Norfolk navy-yard, wherein that official declared to the commandant of the yard that disunionists should not be employed even as laborers, and then proceeded with a political disquisition on what constituted disunionists, namely, persons opposed to the thirty-six stars of my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOOLITTLE;] persons opposed to the representation of the rebel States in Congress. Those were disunionists in the estimation of that distinguished functionary. If the country could be made to laugh at anything, and laugh at it heartily, they would have laughed at the honorable Secretary of the Navy more than they have ever laughed at him before for such a definition of Unionism, and particularly for laying down such a rule for the employment of laborers in navy-yards.

I am one of those who believe that political office, that the employments connected with the administration of this Government, are resolved entirely too much into political organisms. I can say with full truthfulness that so far as I have any political experience in life all the men whom I have advised the public employment of have never been worth the snap of a finger to me; and I care nothing about their services or their assistance politically; and I do not think a man is fit for high station who does. Because the honorable Secretary of the Navy has belittled himself by the proceedings taken by him it is no proper example to be followed by the Senator. I think we have too much of this.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President—

Mr. SUMNER. I will withdraw my amendment, and not attempt to add to the proviso as it stands.

Mr. COWAN. Then I will speak to the general project which my friend from California and myself have in our eye at this time; that is, to dispense with all this legislation. I must confess to a little astonishment at hearing the corruption of Pennsylvania rebuked from that quarter; and especially was I astonished afterward that with the exceedingly high ground the honorable Senator takes now in regard to the use of political patronage, he says he has never so far derived a single particle of benefit from it, and does not care anything about it, and no man of sense does. After that experience I am glad to welcome him into the ranks of those who never thought it was worth anything, and have never used it in that way, especially in Pennsylvania, where we have never been in the habit of that.

Mr. CONNESS. No; we know that.

Mr. COWAN. Now, I should be glad to join him, particularly after his speech this evening, and have all this legislation dispensed with, and let us go on in the old way and trust to Providence to encounter evils as we best may, without introducing others worse than those they are proposed to remedy.

Mr. GRIMES. I suppose that the Committee on Finance, who have had this subject under consideration and who have given their approval to this proposition, perhaps did not intend to include sailmakers.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The proposition came to us in the bill from the House.

Mr. GRIMES. But I understand it was under consideration in the Committee on Finance and met their approval.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We reported it as it came from the House.

Mr. GRIMES. Sailmakers are petty officers, and stand exactly like boatswains and carpenters and other officers of that kind. They do duty at sea for a three years' cruise and then come home and are attached to a navy-yard for two years or a year and a half, and then are ordered to sea again. It is the same case with the carpenter.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to strike out the proviso commencing in the eighty-first line on page 4. That is the bill we have been speaking about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move to strike out the whole proviso?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir; it all relates to the same subject. I move to strike it all out from the eighty-first to the ninety-seventh line, in these words:

Provided, That the offices of civil engineer, master machinist, master carpenter, master joiner, master blacksmith, master boiler-maker, master sailmaker, master plumber, master painter, master caulker, master laborer, and naval storekeepers, be, and the same are hereby, established in connection with the navy-yards at Kittery, Maine; Charlestown, Massachusetts; Brooklyn, New York; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and Washington, District of Columbia; and Mare Island, California; and that the persons selected to fill the several offices hereby established shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall have the immediate supervision and direction of the work to be performed in their several departments, with authority to select and discharge such workmen as the necessities of the service may require, subject always to the approval of the commandant of the navy-yard to which they are attached.

I think if Senators will reflect for one moment they will strike out this proviso. These persons ought not to be placed under political influence. They are business men, superintendents of work that is to be done, and they ought not to depend upon political influences for their position nor for holding their position. The Secretary of the Navy cannot know what sort of men to nominate for such places. It ought to be left to the commandants of the yards to select practical, business, experienced men. This bill was not before the Committee on Naval Affairs, or I suppose that committee would have considered this question.

Mr. GRIMES. This bill was not, but this proposition was.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We never favored it.

Mr. GRIMES. This proposition was before the Committee on Naval Affairs as an independent measure, and was decided against. I think there was only one member of the committee who was in favor of reporting it to the Senate. I do not feel any responsibility for this bill, and do not take any particular interest in it; but as the Senator from Rhode Island has made an inquiry of me, I choose to answer it. I suppose that ever since the foundation of the Government navy-yards have been regarded as a sort of political instrumentalities in the hands of the politicians in their vicinity, and whenever there has been a change of Administration there has invariably been a change of the civil employes of the navy-yards at the instance of the Congressmen in the immediate vicinity, they regarding them as a part of their local patronage. When the Republican party came into power six years ago this same change took place, very much against the remonstrance of the chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks in some instances, who desired to retain—and I have no doubt from conscientious motives and very properly—some of the best master workmen that the Government had ever had; but I think, as a general rule, they all went out.

Now, I suppose there is no doubt that last year, when there was an effort made to organize what is known as the Johnson party, in the navy-yards at Philadelphia and New York, and perhaps in one or two instances in Boston, and I am told in one or two instances at Kittery, changes were made for the purpose of promoting political ends; and the Secretary has made two changes in the Norfolk navy-yard, very improperly I think, and he wrote a very foolish and improper letter, for which, if it was in my power, I would desire to rebuke him. But I want my political friends to understand that while there have been those changes made, there are five to one of the present master mechanics in the different yards who are our friends. The only effect, therefore, of adopting this proposition will be to cause all those men to come before the President for appointment, and we must take our chances of getting our friends reappointed or not.

Then, again, if the tenure-of-office bill shall become a law—I am not very familiar with its provisions, but the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] can explain it to the Senate—I apprehend the effect of it will be that when we get a master mechanic into one of these places it will be somewhat difficult to get him out.

Then again, in regard to the provision itself, it will be observed that it applies, as it now stands, to all the navy-yards of the United States. We carry on different kinds of business in different yards. At one yard we manufacture all the rope that is used in the Navy of the United States, and there we have a rope-yard. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts covers the case of the master of the rope-walk, and it would establish one in every other yard where we have no such institution. Then again, in the yards at New York, Philadelphia, and Boston we repair ships, and we have a master caulker, but we have none, I believe, at the Washington yard, and I think we have none at Kittery.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This law would establish one.

Mr. GRIMES. This law would establish one where we have not one now, and where we do not desire any. Then in regard to sailmakers, they are warrant officers of the Navy, and this will take from them the duty that is now imposed upon them, change it entirely, make it a permanent office connected with the yard, instead of their having their regular routine of sea and shore duty, as they have had ever since the foundation of the Government. There is one officer in that list who ought to be confirmed, and that is the naval storekeeper. He has the control of a large amount of property. It ought to be a presidential appointment, and he ought to be confirmed by the Senate; but I cannot see the necessity for confirming all these master workmen. I should like to restore if I could some of the men who have been removed. One of them is a friend of mine; I believe he is a very worthy officer; I am satisfied he is a good man; I think he ought not to have been removed. But I do not think it is worth while to disturb half a dozen good men who are my political and personal friends, for example in this yard, for the sake of requiring his successor in the future to be sent before the Senate for confirmation.

Then, again, I do not understand the latter clause of this provision, which declares that these officers—

Shall have the immediate supervision and direction of the work to be performed in their several departments, with authority to select and discharge such workmen as the necessities of the service may require, subject always to the approval of the commandant of the navy-yard to which they are attached.

What is "subject to the approval of the commandant?" The selection of the workmen or the supervision and direction of the work? Does this last qualification apply only to the second member of the preceding sentence, or does it apply to both? If it does not apply to both, then you will have no discipline, no subordination in your yards? This is all I have to say. I am indifferent as to the proposition. I am not affected one way or the other by it.

Mr. CRAGIN. As I understand this provision, it simply changes the mode of appointment of the officers named in it; nothing more, nothing less. I hope that the provision will be retained.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire if they make boilers at the Portsmouth navy-yard?

Mr. CRAGIN. I am not sure about that.

Mr. GRIMES. Have they got any engine-shop there?

Mr. CRAGIN. They have constructed several steamers, gunboats, &c., there.

Mr. GRIMES. But the engines were made in New York and carried there, were they not?

Mr. CRAGIN. I think they were, or some other place. Perhaps there might be an amendment to this provision saying that these offices shall only be established if necessary.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire if there is a master caulker at the Portsmouth navy-yard?

Mr. CRAGIN. I think we have not a master caulker, but something that answers the same purpose. I have, at any rate, recommended a man for master caulker this very session, and expect to get him appointed.

Mr. GRIMES. I ought to say that another great clamor that has been raised on this subject grows out of this fact: they have in a navy-yard a master workman, and then under this master workman there used to be what were called quartermen. A quarterman was a man who was a sort of go-between, an intermediary man between the common mechanic and the master mechanic, and he got an extra pay for acting as quarterman. Each quarterman had from seven to fourteen men under him. Now, some of these master mechanics have been abolished, and the business they have performed has been put under the control of the constructor of the yard, and this constructor has abolished a great many of these quartermen; and instead of these quartermen doing nothing except superintending the work of seven or fourteen men, they now have in some yards only one quarterman to forty men. Each one of these quartermen was anxious to be restored to his old position; and I suppose out of that has originated a great deal of clamor on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out the proviso.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope it will not be struck out. It has come to us from the House where it was introduced to meet an existing abuse. The evidence is ample as to the abuse. Now, it may be that the proviso, should it be adopted, will not work well. If it does not, then on the next naval appropriation bill it can be repealed.

Mr. GRIMES. Do you want to create these new offices?

Mr. SUMNER. It is not proposed to create new offices.

Mr. GRIMES. The bill does.

Mr. SUMNER. I am not sure of that. All of these offices exist certainly in the Charlestown navy-yard. I should have no objection to the words being introduced "so far as the same may be necessary in the different yards respectively."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us take a vote.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the clause will not be struck out. I have a great many letters here to the effect that there is great hardship from the want of something like this. There is in the Charlestown navy-yard a positive abuse. Political power has been exercised there against worthy men simply because they agreed with the Senator from Iowa in political opinions. Now, I think we ought to step in and relieve them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to disclaim all possible political considerations in making this motion. If I had charge of a navy-yard I should despise myself if I turned out a good mechanic merely because he differed with me politically. I ask Senators what would they think of the management of the affairs of a railroad company if the president did not have the power to remove at once a principal machinist in his shops if he found the locomotives were not running well? This power is necessary to the efficiency of the public service. This question, as was said by the Senator from Iowa, was before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that committee thought it very impolitic indeed to make this change; that it would be injurious to the public service.

Mr. CRAGIN. I wish to say in relation to this matter being before the Committee on Naval Affairs, that it was not very fully discussed or considered there. The Senator from Indiana and the chairman of that committee will recollect that the bill that came from the House was passed over into my hands; but we did not act finally upon it; and we were to consider it hereafter to some extent. I admit that a majority of the committee, on first impression, were opposed to it. But, Mr. President, there is great necessity for this provision at the present time so far as the yard at Portsmouth or Kittery is concerned. The abuses there are very great at the present moment. I have received since the adjournment of the Senate to-day two dispatches from there urging the passage of this proposition from men of the highest character. I hope that this proviso will not be stricken out.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, it is rather amusing to me and others who observed with me the course pursued during the Administration of President Lincoln in reference to removals from office, and who have heard the laudations pronounced upon him and his Administration, to see gentlemen rise in the Senate of the United States and find fault with President Johnson for imitating, to a very limited extent, the glorious and noble example set by such a glorious and noble chief of a party. The idol before whom these gentlemen have bowed down and worshiped, so far as my State was concerned, left no single office-holder in office who differed with him in political opinion, not even the humblest postmaster throughout the length and breadth of that State. Throughout this whole country, where ever his hand could reach an office-holder, however humble, or any person holding employment under the Federal Government, that hand was reached forth to remove him, provided he differed from him in political opinion. And yet these gentlemen, who even now since he has passed from earth have erected his image in the rotunda of this Capitol, that every time they pass to the other Hall they may be reminded of their idol, whose administration to them was an administration worthy to be remembered in all after time, now that he fills the presidential chair no more, but President Johnson occupies it, are horrified at the idea of executive power, and cry out "usurpation, oppression worthy only of impeachment!" Oh, consistency, thou art a jewel; and oh, politicians, how changeable ye are!

Mr. HOWE. Is it in order to move an amendment to the proviso before striking it out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be in order.

Mr. HOWE. Then I move to amend by striking out all of the proviso after the word "storekeepers" in the eighty-fifth line, and inserting "whenever the same exist shall hereafter be filled only by persons appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That the offices of civil engineer, master machinist, master carpenter, master joiner, master blacksmith, master boiler-maker, master sailmaker, master plumber, master painter, master caulker, master laborer, and naval storekeepers, wherever the same exist, shall hereafter be filled only by persons appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Indiana, to strike out the proviso as amended.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I hope it will be done.

Mr. HOWE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am extremely sorry that on account of momentary exasperation at misconduct that has undoubtedly been practiced, we should undertake to make the Senate of the United States the supervisors of the selection of carpenters and joiners and blacksmiths and boiler-makers and sailmakers and plumbers and painters and caulkers and laborers at all the naval stations of the country. It is derogatory to the dignity of the Senate. It is injurious to the public service in every respect, in my judgment. If we are to adopt this principle of descending to these minor mechanical employments, which involve no trust, although the mechanics may be politicians, as everybody has a right to be in this country, we shall have our hands certainly full enough; because if we do this we must go to every laborer, every clerk, every employé of the Government everywhere. The Senate on a former occasion, by a very decided vote declined, after a long debate, to increase the number of appointees of this description, although of a much higher grade, who should be appointed by and with our advice and consent. We have much more important duties for the benefit of the country to be performed by us than these. We cannot attend to them all. The remedy for this evil lies in another bill, which I hope will pass before many years, although I have no idea that it will this Congress, regulating the civil service of the Government. I do hope that this proviso will be stricken out.

Mr. SUMNER. I hear a great deal very often said about "the dignity of the Senate." It is beneath the dignity of the Senate to take into consideration the grave question of who shall be a master mechanic! Sir, I believe it is not beneath the dignity of the Senate to protect any American citizen against political oppression; and that is the precise point here. The evidence is ample, it is overflowing, that this protection is needed. If my friend from Vermont had a navy-yard in his State, and he became practically acquainted with the abuses there through the exercise of political power, he would not come into the Senate and invoke its "dignity." No; the word is out of place. It is not worthy of this discussion. No honest attempt to sustain an American citizen against oppression can be beneath the dignity of the Senate. I say the evidence is complete that there is an existing abuse; and there is no single argument in favor of the bill which the Senator from Vermont so ably carried through this Chamber which is not applicable to this proposition; not one of his speeches which I might not make now in favor of this humbler proposition.

Mr. CRAGIN. One word further. Some Senators seem to think that this is a very small business; that the officers named here are of no consequence. I think every one of the officers named here receives a compensation equal to $1,500 at least.

Mr. SUMNER. Some two thousand dollars.

Mr. CRAGIN. Some more. The naval storekeeper, who is named here, has charge in some cases of millions of dollars' worth of property, more than a paymaster in the Army or a paymaster in the Navy, and those officers are confirmed by the Senate. The master carpenter and master machinist and the civil engineer have the employment of hundreds of men. They are officers of great importance. They are not mere laborers. They are head men in these establishments, and we confirm here every day hundreds and thousands of men whose salaries are less, whose responsibilities are infinitely less, and whose offices are less dignified and in every way of less importance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then why does my friend from New Hampshire insist upon carrying in on the shoulders of these very dignified and important personages all the rest of the laborers and unimportant personages whom he does not mention, but who are mentioned in this proviso?

Mr. CRAGIN. Will the Senator be kind enough to mention those unimportant laborers?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only omit to mention those that my friend from New Hampshire did. He has named the naval storekeeper and two or three others, and has omitted the sailmakers and painters and caulkers and laborers and all the rest of the mechanics that work in navy-yards.

Mr. CRAGIN. Does the Senator observe that this master painter is the man who has charge of all the painting and employs all the laborers under him, the head man?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly. When he says paint white, they paint white, and when he says paint black, (if that is not an offensive word in this audience,) they paint black, [laughter;] and we are to decide upon whether John Smith or William Jones is to conduct this painting business. Now, I undertake to say that is beneath our dignity altogether. It involves no trust or responsibility commensurate with being put in opposition to the duties that we have to perform. It is quite evident that there is some personal grievance or political grievance under all this thing. Some one has "shot the albatross," as The Ancient Mariner said, of my friend from Massachusetts.

"Since then, at an uncertain hour—"
As I believe the poet has it—

"That agony returns:
And till his ghastly tale is told
His heart within him burns."

We hear it every time these questions come up. All these minor officers, mere laborers that involve no great pecuniary responsibility, no public trust at all, are undertaken to be drawn into our consideration. Now, I agree that no man ought to be removed from an employment merely on the ground that his political opinion does not agree with that of his superior, because political opinion in this country is free. A man, under the Constitution of the United States, and under any other free constitution, has just as good a right to believe on one side of a political question as he has on the other; and it is just as wrong, in my judgment—it may be heresy to say so—to turn out a man from one of these mere mechanical employments because he is a Democrat as because he is a Republican.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is the same thing precisely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is exactly the same thing. I do not dispute but what some of these head officers in navy-yards may have undertaken to turn out men for political opinion. If so, it is a mere temporary abuse that ought to be punished; but we ought not to upset the whole proper policy of the country because some subordinate in a navy-yard having charge of a gang of men has been guilty of some abuse. We are making too much of it. We must correct it in a better way. We must put the civil service on stable ground which will enable those who have charge to oversee it, rather than do it here. We cannot draw to ourselves the whole detail of the business of the country.

Mr. TRUMBULL obtained the floor.

Mr. HOWE rose.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I certainly have no speech to make. I give way.

Mr. HOWE. I will make a speech for the Senator from Illinois for nothing. [Laughter.]

Either Mr. Macaulay or somebody else says that within a few months after Walpole was driven from the ministry there was not so odious a word in the English language as that of "patriot." Mr. President, I am very much afraid that in a short time we shall make the word "magnanimity" as odious in this country as the word "patriot" was made in England.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has anybody used it in this debate?

Mr. HOWE. The word has not been used in this debate until I introduced it; but the thing has been attempted to be palmed off upon us until I begin to get sick of it already.

Mr. President, the undeniable fact is that men every day are being proscribed for holding just such opinions as the Senator from Vermont is supposed to hold, hurled out of employments, hurled out of trusts, thrust out from offices for no offense in the world but for holding such opinions as the Senator from Vermont is supposed to hold, and for holding such opinions as the large majority of this Senate and of the other House is supposed to hold; and that is being done because we will not prohibit it from being done. No "albatross" named in this section of the bill and belonging to me has been shot. I am not a sufferer in that sense or in that way; but I see these things being done, and whenever magnanimity rises to the height that it refuses to withdraw the power which is smiting one's own friend, and because he is such a friend, then magnanimity is an odious and a contemptible thing, and the word ought to be stricken from the English dictionary. Every one of these officers named in the bill—

Mr. EDMUNDS. They are not officers.

Mr. HOWE. They are officers; they are provided for by law, or they have no business to be employed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you mean that every person employed in a navy-yard is an officer?

Mr. HOWE. No, sir; but I mean that every one of the officers named here are created by law, or there is no authority for their employment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is a general authority.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This very provision proposes to make them officers.

Mr. HOWE. This does not make them officers.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Not with the amendment which the Senate has already agreed to. They are officers now, or these offices do not exist; one of the two. As the section is amended it only provides that where these offices exist they shall be filled by persons to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Suppose they do not exist as offices.

Mr. HOWE. If they do not exist it becomes inoperative.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Not by any means, because you name the particular persons. This part does not say they are officers.

Mr. HOWE. We do not name the particular persons. We name the particular places where the offices exist.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Do you not name the employment?

Mr. HOWE. We name the employment, to be sure, the character of the office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You make a question that it is an office.

Mr. HOWE. I do not make any question at all. The section as it stands now before the Senate only provides for offices which exist by law. If they do not exist by law in any particular place, then the section is inoperative. Where they do exist by law it is said here that the salaries attached to them are not less in any one case than $1,500. In other cases—

Mr. CONNESS. Let us vote.

Mr. HOWE. Yes, you shall vote if you live. [Laughter.] In other cases you require offices where the salaries are $1,000 to be filled by appointments by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the duties of which are no more important, involve no more trust than these. The dignity of the office consists not in the employment, not in the service performed. The man who makes a sail fills a place of as much dignity as the man who opens a letter or the man who writes letters in one of your Departments. But the dignity and the rank of the office depend upon the emoluments, the salary attached to it; and certainly if so adjudged, an office with a salary of $1,500 is of higher rank than one where the salary is only $1,000. There is no reason, satisfactory to me at least, why you should not protect these officers of this higher salary if you protect others of this lower salary. I will not detain the Senate longer.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us have a vote.

Mr. SUMNER. I want to say a word. The Senator from Vermont made an appeal to me. He seemed to intimate that I was speaking under some sense of personal injury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg my friend's pardon; I did not intend to say that. I meant to say he was laboring under some feeling for some person who had received injury in that way.

Mr. SUMNER. That is an imputation which Senators have thought it proper to deal in of late. This is not the first time it has been launched at me within a very few hours. I meet the Senator from Vermont. I do not know a human being now who is suffering in this regard—personally, I mean—not one. The alb-trois that has been shot is no friend of mine, except that every man who is suffering from oppression is my friend, and he ought to be the friend of the Senator from Vermont. The Senator from Vermont discards him because he is humble.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no.

Mr. SUMNER. Oh, yes; that is the argument of the Senator, or he said nothing. He discards him because he is only a mechanic, and therefore it is inconsistent with the dignity of the Senate that we should protect him. The most beautiful sentence—it is so considered—that has been given to the English language was those last words of the first book of Hooker where he describes law as having a seat on the bosom of God, and after proceeding with his picture he concludes by saying of her that in her beneficent sphere the greatest was not exempt from her power and the humblest was not below her care. Now, I insist that the humblest citizen of the United States should not be below the care of this Senate. The evidence, I have already said, is ample, is multitudinous that there is an abuse growing out of the head of the Navy Department and running from him down through all the subordinates, which I insist the Senate ought to correct.

Mr. CONNESS. It is a painful task, sir; but I entreat Senators to vote. We have before us a bill which the wool-growers are suffering for the passage of, and the manufacturers are in need of. We can pass it in half an hour if we can get to it; and we are spending nearly the last night of our session in what certainly is not useful discussion.

Mr. GRIMES. Is it in order to amend the proviso before it is stricken out? ["Let us vote."] I want it amended first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That part of the amendment which has not been inserted can be amended.

Mr. GRIMES. In the part that has been inserted by the Senator from Wisconsin, after the word "exist" I propose to insert the words "by law."

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to know what the operation of that will be.

Mr. GRIMES. The operation will be to give effect to exactly the purpose which the Senator from Wisconsin said he had in view, that where these officers already exist by law they shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. Do any of these officers exist by law? Are they specified in the statute?

Mr. GRIMES. I do not think the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin would reach the case which the friends of the Senator from Massachusetts desire to accomplish, to be frank with him. I understand the trouble in the Charlestown navy-yard is not that men of the Senator's political sentiments have been turned out and men of the adverse political party appointed, but that they have abolished certain offices and given the general supervision of the departments that have hitherto been under the charge of the master workmen to commissioned officers in the service, such as naval constructors. For example, Mr. Pook, the naval constructor there, has now the charge of the men who are employed as carpenters and as caulkers, and thereby two men have been turned out of office; and the purpose of the gentleman who offered this provision was to establish by law those offices. The Senate has decided against that on motion of the Senator from Wisconsin. Now, I want to make it clear that the provision is to apply only where ever these offices do exist, as they do, I suppose, at some navy-yards by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator state at what part of the proviso, as amended, he proposes to insert his amendment?

Mr. GRIMES. After the word "exist" in the part that has already been inserted on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would not be in order.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand it is not amendable now, but will be in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on striking out the proviso as amended.

Mr. GRIMES. Should the Senate refuse to strike out the whole proviso, will it be in order to strike out "sailmakers?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be in order in the Senate.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 25, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Nesmith, Patterson, Poland, Ross, Saulsbury, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Chandler, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Fowler, Howe, Morgan, Nye, Pomeroy, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Morrill, Norton, Ramsey, Riddle, Williams, and Yates—12.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move to insert in place of the proviso which has been stricken out these words:

Provided, That naval storekeepers shall hereafter be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think that is right, and shall vote for it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That no workingman in the navy-yards shall be required nor requested to contribute or pay any money for political purposes; nor shall any workingman be removed or discharged for political opinions; and any officer or employé of the Government who shall offend against this act shall be dismissed the service of the United States.

Mr. CONNESS. I simply rise to suggest that if a provision of that kind is to be adopted it ought to be gotten up with care. This amendment is very loose, and it ought not to be adopted in its present form. I think some legislation in that direction might be had, but certainly not in the form of that amendment.

Mr. HOWE. I think no legislation in that direction ought to be entered upon at all. We have already decided that these persons shall be the creatures—

Mr. SUMNER. The victims.

Mr. HOWE. The creatures of the head of the Department; and if he wants them to do one kind of work they shall do it; if he wants them to do another, they shall do it; if he wants them to black boots, they shall black boots; if he wants them to pay money, they shall pay money.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have not decided anything of the kind.

Mr. HOWE. Yes, we have decided that exactly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The majority of the Senate will not yield to the minority and of course the Senate is all wrong.

Mr. LANE. I move to amend the amendment so as to provide that the money heretofore collected shall be paid back, and no statute of limitations shall bar the claim. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President—

Several SENATORS. Withdraw your amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I do not choose to do it. If I vote alone I shall vote for it. I remember that a year ago last fall an effort was made to raise money in the navy-yards, especially at Brooklyn, for electioneering purposes, and the Secretary of the Navy positively forbade it. I thought he was right then. I have always been opposed to raising money from men who were employed as laboring men for the Government, or making any test of political opinions among them. Last autumn that same Secretary of the Navy, at that same yard, had the whole power of the Government brought to bear to force these laboring men, under pains and penalties, to vote for a certain political policy.

Now, sir, this amendment is a declaration of opinion that it is time this thing should stop. Whoever is in power, whoever has the government, let the laboring men of the country who go into Government employment feel that they can think, speak, act, and vote just as they please. If they desire to make a contribution for the support of their political friends let them make it; but let us provide against their being required to pay money or to give a certain vote on pain of dismissal.

As regards the manner in which the amendment is drawn, I drew it here at my desk, and submitted it to two or three Senators; and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] suggested the insertion of the word "requested," to make it a little stronger. I think that the language is clear, and that such a declaration should go out and should be lived up to, whoever has the government of the country.

Mr. CONNESS. An ordinary difference of political opinion such as exists or is developed by political parties should not forfeit any man's right to labor in a navy-yard. That is my opinion; but yet there may be political opinions held that would unfit a man for public employment in one of the navy-yards of the United States. A man may be there who is in favor of breaking up this Union. He should be dismissed. He should not be cherished nor kept there. I say, with great respect to the Senator, that this is a loose manner of legislating. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Under the present system the laborer is given a dollar or two more than is given him by all outside employments, and that pays for his vote for the parties who have the control of him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LANE. If it makes any division of opinion among my friends with whom I am so proud to act I will withdraw my amendment to the amendment. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment.

Mr. McDOUGALL. If this legislation could be carried through our entire system it would be a wise thing for our Government. It is a fact that our navy-yards, scattered as they are in different parts of our Union, can be employed and can be made useful for political purposes. It is true that they are taxed. It is true that there is not a custom-house from Maine to Florida and from Florida to California, throughout the whole country, where men are not taxed to carry out political sentiments, and where men are free. The idea of the amendment meets with my full concurrence. All that it lacks is having extension enough to embrace all these things; so that postmasters shall not be taxed; so that the various officers of customs shall not be taxed; so that the collectors of internal revenue shall not be taxed; so that no man shall be taxed to fight a partisan fight, as they have been mercilessly of late.

Sir, of all the evils under which we groan this thing of having our officers subsidized to maintain other men in office is one of the greatest. Such a policy is inconsistent with a republican form of government; it is inconsistent with our Government. It may be smiled at by those who have not thought; but to me, who have undertaken to think upon such questions, it is a matter of grave consideration. I think this proposition itself, as an initiative, is well, that men shall not be subsidized, and because they take a small office of fifty dollars per month have to pay five dollars, or $500 and have to pay fifty dollars, or $5,000 a year and have to pay $500. This has been the practice of our country, to our great demoralization, and unless it shall be retrieved by our going back to our first integrity, farewell to the institutions established in this Republic.

I have had occasion to remark, and I remark again, that republics in their foundations rest in virtue; monarchies, as Montesquieu says, rest in honor; tyrannies rest in force. When we cease to have virtue and to maintain virtue in office we must seek new institutions, not such as were contemplated by the men of 1787. There are, it seems, wiser men now than they were, better instructed in the history of nations, abler to organize systems; but the opinion that this is so has not come within my own contemplation.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts in the idea of his amendment, but it is not sufficiently extended. We are guilty of a lack of virtue in office, and I fear a lack of virtue among all officers. Our people are virtuous; but from the time a man becomes a scribe in a clerk's office, he only thinks of office; by the time a man becomes a county clerk, he only thinks of office as a ruse. There are exceptions to the rule: We have multiplied offices, and the multiplication of offices is what most demoralizes us. It would be well if we circumscribed offices by stringent law; and I should be well pleased if the Senator from Massachusetts would carry his present thought through the full source of legislation and make it a general law.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays on the amendment, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Fogg, Grimes, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Nye, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wilson—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Conness, Cowan, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Howe, Pomeroy, Willey, and Williams—9.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Cragin, Creswell, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morrill, Norton, Patterson, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, and Yates—23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The Chair will put the question on the amendments collectively unless a separate vote is demanded on any particular amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to except the amendment striking out the appropriation of $1,500 for an examiner of the naval archives.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to except the last amendment voted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those amendments will be excepted. The question is on concurring in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The Secretary read the first excepted amendment, which was on page 5, after line ninety-seven, to strike out the following clause:

For pay of some suitable person, appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, to examine the archives of the Department and other sources of information, and collect and collate the facts which may illustrate the history of the United States Navy, $1,500.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was to insert as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted, That no officer or employé of the Government shall require or request any workman in any navy-yard to contribute or pay any money for political purposes, nor shall any workingman be removed or discharged for political opinion; and any officer or employé of the Government who shall offend against the provisions of this act shall be dismissed the service of the United States.

Mr. WILLEY. I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to the application of the terms of that amendment. The language is, "any officer or employé of the Government who shall offend against the provisions of this act." It makes an offense against this "act" a cause for dismissal. That applies to the whole bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It ought to be "against the provisions of this section." The word "act" should be stricken out and "section" inserted.

Mr. WILSON. Very well, I will make that change in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification will be made unless there be objection. The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 598) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1126) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS of Pennsylvania, Mr. N. P. BANKS of Massachusetts, and Mr. SAMUEL SHELLABARGER of Ohio, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. JUSTIN S. MORRILL of Vermont, Mr. JAMES K. MOORHEAD of Pennsylvania, and Mr. JOHN HOGAN of Missouri, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1154) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

DUTIES ON WOOL AND WOOLENS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 793.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What is that?

Mr. SHERMAN. The wool bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. [Mr. POMEROY.] The Senator from Ohio moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 793) to provide increased revenue from imported wool, and for other purposes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] entered a motion the other day to reconsider a bill which had passed. I understand that he merely wished to get a vote on the bill, and I ask that that vote may be taken now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let this bill be taken up first, and then I shall not object.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I allude to the motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill providing for a department of education.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I understand that the Senator from Ohio will give way informally to allow the vote on that subject to be taken when this bill is taken up.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us take up this bill first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the bill is taken up it can be laid aside informally for the purpose of taking that vote.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to remind the Senate again that there are a large number of private claims pending here that ought to be acted upon. They have been passed by the House and must be passed by the Senate, or go back again, and although I am not interested in any of them myself, nor my constituents, other Senators are, and I should like to have the Senate act upon them at some time. I have waited until this hour, and I hope the Senate will allow me to take them up now.

Mr. GRIMES. Make a motion.

Mr. HOWE. I cannot make a motion, because this other motion is pending.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the question be taken on this.

Mr. HOWE. I cannot help the question being taken, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the condition of those bills; and if, in view of these facts, they vote to proceed with the consideration of this bill, of course I acquiesce as in duty bound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not believe that we ought to proceed with the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Ohio. I think at this stage of the session we ought not to open the tariff bill for its examination for the first time to-day; and we might just as well meet the question perhaps now as anywhere, whether we intend to undertake to change the system of tariff, of revenue from duties at this session at all. Both sessions have been to some extent occupied in the consideration of a tariff bill. The two Houses, after very full consideration of the questions, have been unable to agree upon any bill. Now, at a time when it is impossible for Congress properly to consider a bill, it is proposed to secure the passage of one which could not pass if there were time for its consideration. The very fact that there is not time is the reason given for passing this bill. This bill is not going to become a law providing merely for wool and woolen goods. Senators know the pending amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must remind the Senator that a discussion of the merits of the bill is not in order on a motion to take it up.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir; but on that I have a right to refer to the whole question, its general scope. I am discussing now what it is proposed to take up. Taking up this bill, as I said, is not taking up a proposition simply to provide for wool and woolen goods. The proposition which we propose to take up goes very much further, for we take up the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey. In that light I think it is proper for me to make the remarks I am suggesting.

Mr. President, I think there ought to be some stability in our system of taxation. It affects the values of property in the country. I think this practice of changing the revenue system every session of Congress is a most vicious one. I believe in the last four years we have had four or five or six tariff laws. To undertake to adopt a system at this stage of the session, it seems to me, is risking too much. We might just as well say now as at any other time of the session that we will not take up the bill for consideration, and then we can take up other bills which we can properly consider.

The motion of Mr. SHERMAN was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I now desire to call up this motion to reconsider, to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill regularly before the Senate can be laid aside informally by unanimous consent. Is there any objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it for debate, or simply for a vote?

Mr. TRUMBULL. For a vote, as I understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection if it is to be laid aside informally, and if there is to be no debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the question is on the motion to reconsider the vote of the Senate on the bill (S. No. 276) to establish a department of education.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I merely wish to say that I moved the reconsideration of this bill after its final passage for the purpose of having my vote recorded upon it. I desire to have the record made up.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the motion to reconsider will not be agreed to, and that will end the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I call for the yeas and nays on that question as a test vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called) said: I have paired off on this question with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. DIXON.] If he were here he would vote against the motion to reconsider, and if I were at liberty to vote I should vote in favor of the reconsideration.

The result was then announced—yeas 7, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Fessenden, Grimes, Hendricks, Nesmith, Saulsbury, and Van Winkle—7.
NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—28.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fogg, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Howard, Johnson, Norton, Patterson, Riddle, Ross, and Yates—17.

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

INHABITANTS ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. STEWART. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate (S. No. 532) for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns on the public lands, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration in order that it may go back to the House at once.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands was to add to the House amendment the following proviso:

And provided further, That no title shall be acquired under the provisions of this act to any mine of gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the House, as amended, was concurred in.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 1039, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1868, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1868, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out the words

"for first installment of annuity" and insert "for first of payments to be made during the pleasure of Congress," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from the second amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out the words "for first installment of annuity" and insert "for first of payments to be made during the pleasure of Congress," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from the third amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments: strike out the words "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "President;" strike out the word "fifteen" and insert the word "ten," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, striking out the word "ten" and inserting the word "five," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendment: add at the end of the section the following proviso: "Provided, That the Attorney General of the United States shall be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the condition of the funds held in trust by the United States for said tribes and for all other tribes of Indians, and what remedy exists for the security of the United States in respect to the non-paying stock so held, the value thereof, what stocks are non-paying, and what proceedings should be taken for the security of the United States in respect to the same, and report to Congress on the first Monday of December next," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out the words "for first installment of annuity" and insert in lieu thereof the words "for first payments to be made during the pleasure of Congress," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its tenth amendment.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the eleventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the word "Tamer," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Tama," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the twelfth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: strike out the words "Secretary of the Interior" and insert in lieu thereof the word "President;" strike out the word "seventy" and insert in lieu thereof the words "thirty-five," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the twentieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: strike out the words "seven thousand and two" and insert in lieu thereof the words "three thousand and six," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the twenty-eighth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: add at the end the following words: "except in case of extreme necessity, the facts of which shall be certified to the Secretary of War by the officer commanding that military district," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its thirty-second amendment.

That the Senate recede from its thirty-third amendment.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the thirty-fourth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendment: strike out all after the enacting clause of said House amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the sum hereinbefore appropriated to the Miamis of Indiana, or which shall hereafter be appropriated to them, shall only be paid to such persons as may be, upon the opinion of the Attorney General, legally entitled to the same under the provisions of the treaty with said Indians of June 5, 1854," and Senate amendments thereto, regardless of any subsequent legislation.

JOHN B. HENDERSON,
GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
L. M. MORRILL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN A. KASSON,
WILLIAM WINDOM,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion by Mr. FESSENDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. FESSENDEN, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. HENDERSON.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1126) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion by Mr. FESSENDEN,

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. LANE, and Mr. KIRKWOOD.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the second committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1868, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1868, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered one, two, three, four, six, eight, ten, and eleven.

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered nine, eighteen, twenty-eight, thirty-five, forty-five, and forty-seven, and agree to the same.

That the House of Representatives recede from their amendment to the forty-sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

The committee of conference further report that they are unable to agree upon the amendments numbered forty-four, forty-eight, and fifty.

JOHN SHERMAN,
LUKE P. POLAND,
C. R. BUCKALEW,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. F. FARNSWORTH,
F. E. WOODBRIDGE,
C. A. ELDRIDGE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. The points of disagreement still between the two Houses relate to the amendments with regard to the salaries of the district judges, with regard to the compensation of some of the employés of the Senate, and certain extra compensation voted by resolution of the House to their own employés. On these three points the conferees were unable to agree. There are but two courses to take: either that the Senate insist on these amendments and ask for another conference on these points, or that the Senate recede from all its other amendments and adhere to its action upon the points of disagreement. I do not know which would be the best course. This is the second committee of conference. The first having been unable to agree, the second have made only a partial agreement.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope whatever committee is appointed will be instructed to let each House settle the compensation of its own officers. I think it is discreditable to the two Houses to be disputing with each other, each House questioning the right of the other to fix the compensation of its own officers. I am willing that the House of Representatives should fix the compensation of its officers and take the responsibility of it, and we fix the compensation of our officers, and take the responsibility of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What motion does the Senator from Ohio make?

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that another committee of conference be asked for on the disagreeing votes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Had the report better not be accepted so far as an agreement has been had?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; I move that the report be concurred in so far as it goes.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the Senate insist on its action upon the amendments not disposed of by this report, and ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes.

Mr. ANTHONY. If it is in order, I wish to move that the conferees on the part of the Senate be instructed to agree upon the basis of allowing each House to settle the compensation to be paid to its own officers. We have had disputes session after session on this question, and I think it ought to be settled.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it will expedite matters in regard to the future course of this bill to make a statement of the points of difference. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] has had chief charge of the matter. The matter of the compensation of the judges, as I supposed, was agreed upon at one time; but it became a point of disagreement again. The real controversy is in regard to the various resolutions passed by the House of Representatives at the last session increasing the pay of their own employés. This controversy comes up at every session, and at the close of the last session we settled it by a law by which we increased the compensation of all the employés of both Houses twenty per cent. The House, however, by various resolutions passed at the last session, agreed to give some of their employés twenty, in some cases forty per cent. increase, and in some cases sixty per cent.; and now they insist that these resolutions shall be carried into effect. There are eight or ten or twelve of them. It is difficult to tell from reading them what compensation they do fix. These resolutions were in violation of law. They admit themselves that they were in violation of law; they admit that the practice is wrong; and the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, in view of the judgment of the Senate so strongly expressed against this practice, thought it ought to stop. It is expressly prohibited by law. It is true that the prohibition has been repealed two or three times to meet special cases; but still the House have continued to pass these resolutions, and now they seek to put authority for them in the appropriation bills.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is not in violation of any law if this law authorizes it.

Mr. SHERMAN. They now attempt to legalize it in this bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. This makes it legal. I propose to authorize each House to fix the compensation of its own officers at whatever it sees fit.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate conferees were perfectly willing to sit down and make a fair adjustment of the compensation of the officers of the two Houses, and they entered into that work. My own impression is that the best way to solve the whole matter is to adhere to our action on the second section of the bill which involves this question, and then to provide for a joint committee to adjust the compensation of the employés of the two Houses. I am satisfied that when the question is presented to the other House in that form they will agree to that. If there was any way of amending the second section so as to be in order, it might be well to do that. The Senator from Vermont had a very good section prepared as a substitute for section two, and perhaps it would be better to amend that section by agreeing to his substitute. If both Houses will agree to that it would solve the controversy without another conference; and if the Senator from Vermont has his section prepared and ready to offer he can now present it as an amendment to the second section; and perhaps the House will agree to it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Can we deal in this way with the report of a committee of conference?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am not familiar with such things; but it seems to me it is a very strange proceeding to take the report of a committee of conference in part. I thought it was an entirety.

Mr. SHERMAN. A committee of conference may report an agreement in part and a disagreement in part; and then, upon reporting a disagreement in part, the amendments upon which there is a disagreement are open, and we can now act upon them according to parliamentary law. Section two, being the section in regard to the extra compensation of the House employés, is a question of disagreement between the two Houses, and that is now open to us. We can amend it and send it back in an amended form by insisting upon our amendment with an amendment; or we can recede; or we can adhere; or we can insist simply. We can insist with an amendment, and modify the proposition in any form we choose.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to say a word if this matter is going to another committee of conference. The real point of difference in the last conference was in relation to the compensation to be paid to the House clerks. The House of Representatives having during the last session of Congress passed several resolutions providing for an increase in the amount of compensation of several of their clerks and employés, insist that they should now be paid according to those resolutions. In relation to the amendment that was made in the Senate raising the salaries of the district judges there was no substantial disagreement in reference to that. With a slight modification we agreed entirely on that point. There was no difference between the conferees of the two Houses in relation to raising the salaries of the district judges, provided we had been willing to accede to what they claimed in accordance with the idea of the Senator from Rhode Island. If we had been willing to accede to their claims, that an appropriation should be made to pay the clerks and other employés of the House according to their resolutions, they were perfectly ready to accede to the amendment of the Senate in relation to the salaries of the judges with a slight modification. I apprehend, therefore, that the real difference is not at all in regard to the question about the compensation of the judges; and if I may be allowed so to speak, that is viewed as mere leverage in aid of their claim for compensation to their clerks. The Senate may therefore understand that there is no occasion to peril the provision as to raising the salaries of the judges to help out the disagreement of the two Houses in reference to the compensation of the clerks of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will say a few words on this question before it is disposed of. During the last Congress the House of Representatives voted to increase the compensation of their own officers by resolution of that body alone. At the end of the session the question came up in a committee of conference, and the House insisted upon executing the resolution they had passed, which was in open contempt of a public statute. The Senate resisted it, but finally in the committee conceded the point. Under that resolution $40,000 or upward was added to the contingent fund of the House and distributed among the officers of the House. It was very reluctantly conceded on the part of the Senate, but under the pressure of circumstances those who represented this body gave way. That was voted upon the ground that the House was bound in honor to its own officers by the resolution which it had adopted. Those officers were then paid over forty thousand dollars, and not a dollar of extra compensation was given to the officers of the Senate. We supposed at that time that we were done with this mode of doing business. Gentlemen on the part of the House insisted that the subject had not been understood; but that the House having pledged its honor, we ought to allow it to execute its resolution, and we did so.

Last session, in defiance of the understanding which had been entered into when this large amount of money was paid to the House officers, the House adopted at various times a number of resolutions. It would seem that one and another member of the House, on different occasions, would get up and offer a resolution relating to some particular officer, and the House would vote it, and that was the end of it. These resolutions were accumulated, and I think there were more than a dozen in number by the end of last session. When our committees of conference met on the appropriation bill, they had a renewal of the scene of last year; they were met with the demand on the part of the House that we should allow these illegal resolutions to be carried out. It required the concurrence of the Senate in a law voting the money to cover them, because no money could be drawn from the Treasury for them unless we agreed to it. The result of the conference at that time was that the Senate agreed with the House to increase the compensation of the officers of both Houses twenty per cent. That was agreed to as a substitute for this irregular and illegal proceeding of passing resolutions in the House, and it covered the whole subject. The money was paid, and the officers received it. On that occasion our officers participated in the twenty per cent. increase, and they get it now; the officers of both Houses get it.

At the end of this session, for the third time in the appropriation bill, the House claim that we shall go back to the last session of Congress and take up these defunct resolutions, and pay these officers the whole amount of money for which they provided. One officer was increased by one of these extraordinary resolutions sixty-six per cent.; a number of others were increased forty to fifty per cent. At the same time other officers of the House, of the same rank and grade and merit, were not increased at all. Some of these resolutions commenced the gratuity to the officers from the commencement of the Congress; others commenced from the beginning of the fiscal year; others are limited in the duration of time over which they go, and others are not. In other words, it is a mass of confusion, of irregularity, of inequality; and these resolutions are the very ones upon which the arrangement for paying twenty per cent. at the last session was based.

Now, sir, the question is whether this system is to stop or go on. Our officers get their twenty per cent. under the law; the officers of the House get their twenty per cent. under the law; they are equal. If you undertake to pay these House officers under these old, unequal, and objectionable resolutions which were provided for last year and settled, then as a matter of justice you must go over all the Senate officers, and you must make up your mind to a similar system of confusion and irregularity here. It was the opinion of the committee who have just had this subject in their charge that the House ought to recede from that portion of the bill as they framed it, and allow this matter of the compensation of the officers of both Houses to go to a joint committee at the beginning of the next session next week, where it can be considered, and where you can have a principle of equality and justice between the two Houses. I do not know what may occur hereafter on this bill; but for one, I will never vote one dime or one copper upon these resolutions of the last session of the House of Representatives. We stand upon a law, a public law, known to the House, known to the country, in resisting this attempt after we have had this subject up for two years, and after we have expended $40,000 upon the House officers at the last Congress, after we have increased twenty per cent. by a permanent provision of law the compensation of the officers of both Houses. It is a system of favoritism, and if you yield on this occasion you will have to do it at the next session again. Nobody who represents the interests of the House can insist that this thing is right; nobody pretends that it is right. I have not heard any one make an argument in favor of it; but it is said we ought to do whatever the House asks. Under the circumstances, I am not willing to do what the House asks on this particular point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, that the Senate further insist upon its forty-fourth, forty-eighth, and fiftieth amendments to this bill, and ask for a further conference of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on those amendments.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, Messrs. TRUMBULL, EDMUNDS, and DAVIS were appointed.

DUTY ON WOOL AND WOOLENS.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 793) to provide increased revenue from imported wool, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the amendment which I offered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the Senate might be allowed to adjourn now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us pass this bill.

Mr. CATTELL. I move to amend the bill by adding as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That from and after ten days from the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, and merchandise, not herein provided for, imported into the United States from foreign countries, and now subject to duty under existing laws, an additional duty of one fifth or twenty per cent. of the duty, or rates of duty, including specific and ad valorem rates now imposed by law upon such goods, wares, and merchandise: Provided, That no additional duty shall be levied, collected, or paid on sugar, molasses, tea, coffee, salt, lumber, coal, dyewoods, soda-ash, and bleaching powders.

I do not propose to consume five minutes of the time of the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us adjourn, and hear the Senator's speech in the morning. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a quorum here, and I think we ought to go on.

Mr. CATTELL. I desire only to say that both Houses of Congress were engaged for many days in the consideration of a tariff bill; and the votes of both Houses, our own being near three to one, have settled the question that some additional duties on imports are demanded by the present condition of the industries and the wanted revenues of the country. And yet, on account of the shortness of the session, the tariff bill prepared with so much care is likely to fall; and it is now proposed that a bill sent to us from the other House, covering one of the most important branches of industry, the wool and woolen interest, shall be taken as it came from the House. I propose by the amendment which I offer to that bill to atone in some degree for the loss of the tariff bill by providing for a uniform advance of twenty per cent. upon the duties which are payable by present laws upon imported goods. This will do something to revive the depressed industries of the nation. It is not more than half the increased rate of duty provided by the bill which received the sanction of this body, and which has virtually received the sanction of the other House by a large majority, judging from several votes there taken.

I conceive that it is due to ourselves and to the country that we shall at least do something before we adjourn to revive the flagging industries of the nation. The amendment which I propose reaches this point and excepts from its provisions the great staples of tea, coffee, sugar, molasses, and coal, and one or two of the articles which furnish the base of our manufacturing industry, as soda-ash and bleaching powder. Such a proposition as this, I conceive, can hardly fail to meet the approbation of the Senate, for we have deliberately by a vote of nearly three to one decided that some further protection ought to be given to American industry. I sincerely trust that the amendment will be adopted and the bill itself passed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is manifest that we cannot sit all night and all day, too, and I think we had better adjourn to meet at eleven o'clock to-morrow; and if it meets the views of the Senate, I will move that the Senate now adjourn to meet at eleven o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at twelve o'clock and thirty minutes a. m.) the Senate adjourned to meet to-morrow at eleven o'clock a. m.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 2, 1867.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. GRIMES, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 1134, declaring and fixing the right of volunteers as a part of the Army.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 300) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue for the third collection district of California, have directed me to report it without amendment, and as this is merely to facilitate a settlement at the Treasury, I ask that it be taken up for consideration.

Mr. GRIMES. I object.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. It will not take a minute.

Mr. GRIMES. I have got a bill that will not take a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution cannot be considered on the day it is reported.

WILLIAM H. WEBB.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that prior orders be suspended, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 588) for the relief of William H. Webb. It will take but a moment, I think.

Mr. CONNESS. I suggest to the Senator to allow the unfinished business to lie over informally and proceed with the consideration of this bill. I am not willing that that shall be displaced.

Mr. GRIMES. Very well.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was going to suggest that we go into executive session and clear that docket now.

Mr. CONNESS. I leave that between the Senators.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It will take but a few moments to clear the galleries, and in a few moments we can get rid of our executive calendar.

Mr. WADE. There are a great many confirmations contested.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We would not take up the contested cases, but dispose of the others.

Mr. SUMNER. I will remind my friend that in the absence of so many Senators we can hardly tell what is contested.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They will be in by the time the doors are closed.

Mr. CONNESS. I would not ask for an executive session now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I only suggested it. I thought it would be a saving of time, and I believe it would be.

Mr. CONNESS. I understand the Senator from Iowa consents that the tariff bill shall be laid over informally for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill he has named.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first business in order is the reception of petitions and reports.

Mr. GRIMES. I must insist on my motion. I prefer to have a vote taken upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that upon the suggestion of the Senator from California the motion was withdrawn.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I make my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I am sure it will be a saving of time.

Mr. CONNESS. You cannot carry any motion that is contested now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Are you going to contest it?

Mr. CONNESS. Yes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Well, if you are going to contest it—

Mr. CONNESS. There is too light a Senate here now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. You will not find it too light a Senate for this business. I think we had better proceed to the consideration of executive business, and I insist on the motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that will not be pressed to a division. I am willing to consent that that bill shall be gone on with the present time provided the unfinished business is laid over informally. I think there will be no objection to that.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the unfinished business will not come up before one o'clock. We have all the intermediate time for the consideration of other measures.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope the Senate will give me some early hour to-day to dispose of the post route bill.

Mr. CONNESS. Not now.

Mr. RAMSEY. I am simply calling attention to the importance of disposing of it to-day. There are a great many amendments to be offered to it, which must go back to the House. It is a House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask for the decision of the Chair upon the question suggested as to whether the unfinished business will be displaced by this motion if carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no unfinished business now before the Senate. The unfinished business, by the rule of the Senate, comes up at the expiration of the morning hour. The first business in order is petitions, next reports, next bills, next resolutions.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I have no further objection to make to the motion.

The motion of Mr. GRIMES was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 588) for the relief of William H. Webb.

The Committee on Naval Affairs reported the bill with amendments. The first amendment was in line six, after the word "iron" to insert the word "clad."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line nine to strike out the words "ninety days," and to insert the words "one year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line ten, to insert the word "or" before the word "advanced," and after the word "advanced" to strike out the words "or expended."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eleven, after the word "order" to strike out the words "for and on account of vessel," and to insert "to said Webb on account of said contract."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to hear the bill reported as it now stands amended.

The Secretary read the bill, as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to release to William H. Webb, of New York, all right, title, interest, and demand of the United States in and to the iron-clad steamship Dunderberg, built by said Webb under a contract with the Navy Department, upon payment by said Webb into the Treasury of the United States, within one year from the passage of this act, of any and all sums of money paid or advanced by the Secretary, or by his order, to said Webb on account of said contract.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to inquire of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs whether we have not already made full provision for any extra allowance necessary to compensate Mr. Webb for the building of the Dunderberg in the bill which has been passed by Congress providing for the compensation to iron-clad constructors. I desire in this connection to say, while I am up, that I am in favor of either fully compensating Mr. Webb for his ship or releasing him; but I very much prefer compensating to releasing him, because this great engine of war, in my opinion, ought to remain in the possession of our Government and not put in the hands of any other.

Mr. GRIMES. Some three or four years ago the Government contracted with Mr. Webb for the construction of a vessel-of-war, for which he was to receive the sum of $1,250,000. There has been advanced to him nearly a million dollars. Something like nine hundred and fifty or nine hundred and seventy thousand dollars. The vessel has cost him in the neighborhood of two million. He thinks he can sell her to some Government that is at peace with this country and with all the world, and has sought an opportunity to do so, at a price not only greater than that which we contracted to pay, but that which it cost him; and in order to get an opportunity to do so he has proffered to the Secretary of the Navy to build another vessel of as large capacity and as good war qualities, as great speed, in every respect as perfect a vessel as this, for the sum of $1,250,000, the original price contracted for. If this bill passes, therefore, we shall be relieved from all claim of Mr. Webb upon us to make good the difference between $1,250,000, which we contracted to pay, and the cost of the vessel, which was a little upward of two million, probably. I am not prepared to state the exact amount which it has cost him accurately, but somewhere in the neighborhood of two million dollars. We would save three quarters of a million, and if the Secretary of the Navy chose, could have another vessel as good as this one, or we would save that amount of money to Mr. Webb. Under the bill to which the Senator refers it is not thought, I believe, that Mr. Webb will be able to secure much. The House committee have been very strenuous as to the provisions of that bill. Probably it would cover the case of the contractors of the other iron-clads, but I suspect it would not really be of much advantage to Mr. Webb.

Mr. CONNESS. I said when up before that I was in favor of fully compensating Mr. Webb; but I cannot help uttering here the opinion that this vessel ought not to pass out of our hands. It is suggested that she may be sold, profitably by the contractor or builder, to a Government with which we are at peace. I have no doubt of that. But suppose Mr. Webb should sell her to the Colombian Government, and the Colombian Government should then undertake to say we should not pass through its territory any longer? Why, sir, with the Dunderberg at Aspinwall she might defy our entire Navy. That may be said to be an improbable circumstance, but it is a circumstance entirely possible to occur. I think it is a very serious proposition to pass this vessel out of our hands. I think if the war capacities of the vessel were now known accurately to both branches of Congress—

Mr. GRIMES. Do you know them?

Mr. CONNESS. I believe I do know something of them—that they would hesitate before they would give this vessel to the contractor rather than pay him the full cost of her. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. GRIMES. I am perfectly indifferent as to the passage of the bill. It met the approval of the Department, and, so far as I know, of all naval officers who have examined the Dunderberg and know her capacity.

Mr. HOWARD. I understand the case to be exactly this: that the Government of the United States has employed Mr. Webb to build an iron-clad vessel-of-war, and that he has nearly completed the job and the Government has nearly paid him for it.

Mr. CONNESS. No, not half.

Mr. RAMSEY. Paid him the contract price.

Mr. HOWARD. We paid what we agreed to pay. We paid for it in part. Of course this is the property of the United States; and I am unable to understand the policy of building iron-clads at the expense of the United States and then selling them to foreign Governments.

Mr. GRIMES. We do not propose to sell it to any foreign Government.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator says we do not propose to sell it to any foreign Government; but in his speech just now he announced that it was quite probable that Mr. Webb, to whom we release all our claim, would immediately sell it to a foreign Government. Are we building vessels for this purpose; are we building iron-clads upon speculation, to enable the contractors to make a good speculation out of the jobs which we place in their hands; and are we thus to use the public money for the purpose, in effect, of building iron-clads and navies for foreign Governments? It seems to me this is a perfect anomaly in legislation, a sort of speculation which we ought to avoid.

Mr. CONNESS. I have only one more remark to make, and that is touching any intimation that Mr. Webb desires to speculate at the expense of the Government. I know the facts too well to allow that to be stated without contradiction. Mr. Webb simply desires as an honest citizen to be reimbursed for a great work that he has performed; and I am in favor of reimbursing him either as this bill proposes or otherwise.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to say a single word in reply to the Senator from Michigan. The Government does not propose to build vessels-of-war for other nations, but it has been the policy, I believe, of all maritime nations to encourage their citizens to construct vessels for foreign nations; and if he will visit the shipyards in France and England he will find today a great number of vessels in process of construction for foreign Governments. Now, we have contracted with Mr. Webb for this vessel. She has cost him about a million dollars more than the contract price. He claims that we shall reimburse him that million dollars. The question is, whether we will compel him to suffer that loss of a million dollars or allow him to take the vessel at his own risk, at his own cost, and refund us the money, and do just what he chooses with her? That is all there is of it. If we do not pass the bill, then Mr. Webb presents himself before us and says, he having in good faith carried out his contract, that in consequence of the depreciation of the currency and on account of the tariffs we have levied and the internal tax we have laid upon the articles that went into the vessel, we have caused her to cost him a million dollars more than he had reason to believe she would cost at the time he made the contract.

Mr. HOWARD. When was the contract made?

Mr. GRIMES. In 1862.

Mr. HOWE. What was the contract price?

Mr. GRIMES. One million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and she has cost him upward of two million dollars. Now we propose to let him repay to us all the money he has received, amounting to between nine hundred and fifty thousand and one million dollars and take the vessel. That is the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. It comes exactly to this: that, according to his statement, he has made a bad bargain, or rather a hard bargain with the United States, by which he is not likely to make money; and he now calls upon the United States to release to him all its title in the vessel which he has agreed to build for us for a particular sum on his refunding to the United States what he has received from the United States. That is the beginning, the middle, and the end of the transaction. The vessel then becomes his; he sells it to a foreign Government as a vessel-of-war; and thus the United States is made to become a sort of manufacturer of war vessels practically for other nations.

Mr. GRIMES. All I have got to say in reply to that is that there are a great many vessels belonging to the United States that I should like to hand over to anybody who would take them at what they cost us.

Mr. HOWARD. If this vessel is so imperfect in its construction—

Mr. GRIMES. I do not say that.

Mr. HOWARD. If it is in process of decay now or is likely to be soon, that presents another feature of the case; but the Senator does not declare any such thing. The vessel, so far as we know, is a good, sound vessel, and would be entirely fit for public service. Why should we sell it or allow him to sell it?

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 36, nays 4; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Patterson, Poland, Ramsey, Ross, Saulsbury, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wiley, Williams, and Wilson—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Howard, Sherman, Sprague, and Wade—4.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cowan, Doolittle, Fessenden, Guthrie, Lane, McDougall, Norton, Pomeroy, Riddle, and Yates—12.

So the bill was passed.

PETITIONS.

Mr. CATTELL presented the petition of the German Library Society of Philadelphia, the petition of the Apprentices' Library Company of Philadelphia, and the petition of the Wagner Free Institute of Science of Philadelphia, severally remonstrating against the imposition of the proposed duty on books, maps, and charts intended for the use of public libraries, colleges, schools, and other literary institutions; which were laid on the table.

RIGHTS OF VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. WILSON. I submit the following report from a committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. No. 1134) declaring and fixing the rights of volunteers as a part of the Army, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their amendments to the first and second sections of the bill, and that the House recede from their disagreement to the additional section of the Senate, and agree to the same.

HENRY WILSON.

J. M. HOWARD.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,

H. E. PAINE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to have an explanation of the report.

Mr. WILSON. The House bill originally provided for putting volunteer officers who go into the regular Army on the same footing as other officers, both in regard to rations and to rank. It counts the time of the service in the volunteers the same as though it had been in the regular Army, and puts the officers who have gone from the volunteers into the regular Army on the same footing in regard to their rank and in regard to their rations and time as the other officers, as if they had been in the regular Army.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is right.

Mr. WILSON. Then there is another portion of it which will save about five million dollars against a construction made by the Court of Claims.

Mr. HARRIS. What is that provision?

Mr. WILSON. In regard to increased commutation for servants.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. You save that, do you?

Mr. WILSON. That is in the bill, and is according to law, and I am utterly amazed that any body of men on earth should raise a question about it.

Mr. HARRIS. Is that all there is in the bill?

Mr. WILSON. That is all. The brevet part of it, which was in when it came from the House, has been stricken out.

The report was concurred in.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred the following joint resolutions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. No. 607) to arch the Tiber creek north of Pennsylvania avenue; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 135) relating to the supply of Potomac water to the Capitol.

Mr. CONNESS. I am instructed by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution of the Senate of the 10th of December last, instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Post Office Department to construct and operate telegraph lines along the principal mail routes, or as it may deem necessary to contract with such lines as may be already established if deemed more advisable, and establish offices at such points as may be determined upon; and also from further consideration of the resolution of the Senate of January 30, 1866, instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of a postal telegraphic system. I am also instructed to state in connection with this report that the committee regard the subject as a very important one, one that requires time to consider, more than the committee have been able to give to it, and that it is their disposition to consider it at another time. At present they ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

The report was agreed to.

POST ROUTE BILL.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1182. ["Oh, no."] It can be passed in fifteen minutes. It is the post route bill, and it must go back to the House, as there are a number of amendments reported to it. All the States are represented in it very largely.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1182) to establish certain post roads.

Mr. RAMSEY. I suggest that the amendments reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill, to save time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be pursued if there is no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the committee was to strike out line eleven, under the head of "California," as follows:

From Wilmington to Yuma, on Colorado river.

Mr. RAMSEY. I will simply remark that where words are stricken out the route has been heretofore established, and the reestablishment would be superfluous.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as line twelve, under the head of "California," the following:

From Havilah, via Rio Bravo Rancho, to Bakerfield.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines twenty-two and twenty-three, under the head of "Illinois," as follows:

From Rock Island, via Coaltown, Zuma, Canoe Creek, to Sterling.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line forty-three, under the head of "Illinois," the following:

From Rock Island, via Coaltown, Zuma, and Carver Creek, to Sterling.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line fifty-six, under the head of "Indiana," the following:

From Shelbyville to Winterrowd.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines fifty-nine and sixty-four, under the head of "Iowa," as follows:

From Waverly to Northwood.

From Denison to Ida.

And to insert after line sixty-six the following:

From Sioux Rapids, via Douglas and Lincoln, to Spencer.

From Chariton, via Freedom, Bixler's Grove, and Lancaster's Mills, to Corydon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line seventy-seven, under the head of "Kansas," the following:

From Troy, via Doniphan and Atchison, to Leavenworth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eighty-eight, under the head of "Michigan," to strike out the word "to" and insert "via," and after "Leonidas" to insert "and Colon to Burr Oak;" so that the clause will read:

From Climax Prairie, via Leonidas and Colon, to Burr Oak.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line ninety-two, under the head of "Michigan," to insert the following:

From Big Rapids, via Paris, to Manistee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines ninety-five and ninety-six, under the head of "Minnesota," as follows:

From St. Paul, via Minneapolis, Richfield, Bloomington, and Eden Prairie, to Shakopee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines one hundred and five, one hundred and six, one hundred and seven, and one hundred and eight, under the head of "Minnesota," as follows:

From Manketo, via Madelia and Jackson, to Sioux City.

From Blue Earth City, via Rose Lake, Fairmount, Jackson, and Sioux Falls City, to Yankton City, in Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and fourteen, after the word "from" to strike out "Madelia, Ashippem, and;" so that the clause will read:

From Jackson, Minnesota, and Spirit Lake, in Iowa, to Sioux City, Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and sixteen after the word "from" to strike out "Blue Earth City via;" so as to read:

From Fairmount, Fox Lake, Wooster, and Graham Lake, in Minnesota, to Yankton, in Dakota Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line one hundred and twenty-one, the following:

From Rushford, via Crossburg, Highland, Lenora, in Minnesota, and Burr Oak, to Decorah, in Iowa.

From Shakopee to Excelsior.

From Owatonna to Albert Lea.

From Mankato to Minnesota Lake.

From Paynesville, via James Tuttle's, Burbank City, Norway Lake, Limberey's Town, Glenwood, and Big Stone Lake, Minnesota, to Fort Wadsworth, Dakota Territory.

From Richmond, via Lake George, Big Grove, Grove Lake, White Bear Lake, Reno City, and Holmes City, to Chippewa.

From Geneva to Freeborn.

From Buffalo, via Frankfort, Hassan, Battineau Prairie, to Minneapolis.

From Paynesville, via Burbank and Norway Lake, to School Lake.

From Crow Wing to Fort Clark.

From St. Charles, via Quincy and Little Valley, to Plainview.

From Paynesville to Alexandria.

Missouri:

From Sedalia, via Osceola, Virgil City, Lamar, Carthage, and Granby, to Neosho.

From Osage, via Last Creek and Walton's Mill, to Potosi.

From Brems, via Cold Water and Moser's Hill, to Green.

From New London, via Madisonville, to Helleville.

From Danville, via Big Spring, Dry Fork Mills, Rhineland, Loutre Island, to Herman.

Nebraska:

From Plattsmouth, via Weeping Water, Stoor Creek, Shirley Station, Lancaster, Saline City, and Middle Creek, to Blue River.

From Beatrice, via Snow City, to Big Sandy.

New Mexico:

From Fort Cummings, via Fort Bayard, to Penos Altos.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line one hundred and sixty-one, under the head of "New York" to insert:

From Monticello, via Bushville, Stevensville, Briscoe, Jeffersonville, Falls Mill, and Calicoon, to Calicoon Station.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line one hundred and sixty-three the following:

North Carolina:

From Hillsdale to Greensboro'.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line one hundred and sixty-nine the following:

Oregon:

From Salem, via Howell Prairie, to Silverton.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line two hundred and four, under the head of "Pennsylvania," to insert:

From Mohrsville to Bernville.

From Dundaff to Uniondale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line two hundred and eleven the following:

Virginia:

From Trevilian's Depot to Green Springs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line two hundred and seventeen, under the head of "West Virginia," to strike out "and Maple Lawn" and to insert "Weisiger's and Brown's;" so that the clause will read:

From New Port, via Salt Pond, Weisiger's and Brown's, to Salt Sulphur Springs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line two hundred and twenty the following:

From Petroleum, via California House and Oil Rock, to Rathbone.

From Perryville, via Clear Fork, to Tug River Post Office.

Wisconsin:

From Milwaukee, via New Koeler, to Painsville.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I have a few other amendments that, under the instructions of the committee, I propose to offer. The first is to insert on page 7, after line one hundred and forty-one, under the head of "Minnesota," the following:

From Swan river, via Martins, Long Prairie, and Hadley, to Long Prairie river.

From Suak Centre, via Scott, Long Prairie, and Lamphar, to Bassett.

From West Union to Long Prairie.

From Minneapolis, via Richfield, Bloomington, Bloomington Ferry, and Eder Prairie, to Shakopee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. After line one hundred and fifty-nine I move to insert the following:

Nevada:

From Dayton, via Hot Springs, to Pine Grove.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. After line one hundred and sixty-three, under the head of "New York," I move to insert the following:

From Oswego City, via Oswego Centre, and North Hannibal, to Hannibalville.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. After line two hundred and six, under the head of "Pennsylvania," I move to insert the following:

From Salona to Lamar Mills.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. After line two hundred and twenty-six, under the head of "Wisconsin," I move to insert the following:

From Rural, via Waupaca, Ogdensburg, Little Wolf, North Royalton, and North Port, to New London.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I have one more amendment. It is to insert after line seventy-nine, under the head of "Kansas," the following:

Kansas:

From Salina, Saline county, via —, Ottawa county, up the Saline river valley to the mouth of Spillman's creek.

From Saline, via the Kansas Salt Company's Works, Oakland, Minneapolis, thence up the Solomon river valley, via Usher's creek, to the mouth of Oak creek.

A route from Carlyle, Allen county, to Geneva, Allen county.

A route from Fort Scott, Kansas, via Mapleton, Xenia, in Bourbon county, to Garnett, Anderson county.

From Cottonwood Falls to Junction City.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, if there be no objection to it. It is to add as additional sections the following:

And be it further enacted, That whenever the North Missouri Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized and incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri, shall erect or cause to be erected a bridge over the Missouri river at the town of St. Charles, in the State of Missouri, to be used in connection with or to form a part of a railroad belonging to said company, known as the North Missouri railroad, said bridge, when completed in accordance with the laws of the State of Missouri, and under the limitations and conditions hereinbefore provided, is hereby declared to be a lawful structure and a post road for the conveyance of the mails of the United States. And in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the district court of the United States of the State of Missouri.

And be it further enacted, That the bridge built under the provisions of this act may, at the option of the company building the same, be built as a drawbridge, with a pivot draw, or with unbroken or continuous spans: Provided, That if said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans it shall not be of less elevation in any case than fifty feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chord of the bridge, nor shall the spans of said bridge be less than two hundred and fifty feet in length, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river, and not less than three hundred feet in length: And provided also, That if the bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a drawbridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot drawbridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than one hundred and sixty feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining span to the draw shall not be less than two hundred and fifty feet; and said spans shall not be less than thirty feet above low-water mark, and not less than ten feet above extreme high-water mark, measuring to the bottom chord of the bridge, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly, upon reasonable signal, for the passage of boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the permanent spans of said bridge, except when trains are passing over the same; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw during or after the passage of trains.

And be it further enacted, That no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the bridge to be built under this act, and according to its limitations, of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroad or public highways leading to the bridge.

And be it further enacted, That the right to alter or amend this act, so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of said bridge, is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. RAMSEY. I trust the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his amendment. It is unusual to encumber the annual post route bill with any legislation other than itself. General legislation is very seldom indulged in or anything out of the line of post routes themselves. It is a bill that the Post Office Department and the post offices throughout the country have occasion to refer to very frequently, and it is printed and distributed among them; and if it is encumbered with matter of this kind I think it will be unusual and inconvenient. Otherwise, I should have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have been for some days trying to get the floor to call up this bill. It is a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri river at the town of St. Charles. The road has been completed and in operation for five or six years, and it is exceedingly important to the best interests of the country in north and west Missouri that the bridge should be constructed at an early day. An act of the Legislature of the State has authorized the company to build it, and they are collecting the materials now for constructing it. I thought it was appropriate to put it upon this bill because of the fact that the only legalization needed is to make it a post road. It is clearly within the limits of the State of Missouri and does not interfere with any other State at all. However, it will be necessary to get the authority of Congress to construct the bridge, because it is a navigable stream. I hope that the Senator will withdraw all objections to this bill as an amendment, because, as I understand it, it is unanimously reported by his own committee, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads; and I think it is quite germane to the matter now under consideration. It is strictly in accordance with the law of the last session of Congress authorizing the construction of bridges across the Mississippi river. It requires a span of one hundred and sixty feet, which is some thirty-two feet more than the bridge authorized the other day at Clinton, in Illinois. I hope that no objection will be made and that it will be adopted. It is quite germane, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the House bill No. 793.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the unfinished business will be allowed to lie over temporarily until we can get a vote on the post route bill; and I appeal to my friend from Missouri to withdraw his amendment. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, when they gave a favorable report to the bill of the Senator, did not expect that he would move to encumber this bill, which never excites opposition, and which, as was correctly stated by the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, is frequently printed in circulars for distribution, and involves nothing but post routes. I hope the Senator will withdraw his amendment, and I will aid him in taking up his bill and passing it at any time.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have occupied but very little of the time of the Senate. I have some eight or ten, perhaps fifteen bills, lying here now that I have attempted to get passed, a great many of them being for the interests of the people I represent. Now, at this late hour, after having unsuccessfully tried for the last five or six days to get the floor to have this bill passed, Senators, members of the committee, insist that I shall withdraw it. Sir, I now do so, and I do so feeling that at the next session of Congress I shall be just as helpless as I have been at the present session to get the floor in order to get business done. This proposition is perfectly germane. It is unanimously reported by the committee. It is making a bridge a post road; and for my life I can see no objection to it. It is entirely within the limits of my State. The whole question has been determined by previous legislation. The bridge is to be strictly in accordance with the bridges authorized over the Mississippi at the last session. I can see no possible objection to it; but if Senators insist upon it I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to amend is withdrawn.

Mr. CONNESS. Let us have a vote on the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to waiving the unfinished business if this bill will not excite debate.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By common consent the bill before the Senate will be proceeded with until its passage, if no objection be interposed.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. RAMSEY, it was Ordered, That John C. Jacobs have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POLAND. I ask leave to make a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to that until we dispose of the wool tariff bill. That report is on the bankrupt bill, which will give rise to debate, I know, and therefore I insist on the regular order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill named by the Senator from Ohio is the bill properly before the Senate, the morning hour having expired.

Mr. POLAND. I had supposed that this was a privileged matter, that took precedence. I do not apprehend there will be a word of debate upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not decided that it is a privileged question to such an extent as to overrule the special order. It has been the practice of the Senate, however, especially at this stage of the session, to receive reports from committees of conference. The Chair will not decide that it is such a question of privilege as to override the special order.

Mr. POLAND. I can assure the Senator from Ohio that there will be no debate upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. A gentleman near me says there will be debate upon it, and therefore I cannot waive the unfinished business.

Mr. POLAND. I move that this report be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the report named by him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before that question is put I desire to state to the friends of the wool-tariff bill that if this motion succeeds, as a matter of course it necessarily defeats that bill. I know that there will be debate on the bankrupt bill, because a Senator near me says he is determined to debate it; and now the tariff bill can be disposed of in fifteen minutes.

Mr. POLAND. This will be disposed of in one. I protest against its being put off on any such pretense.

Mr. SHERMAN. I assure the Senator it will not be disposed of in one minute nor in an hour, because a Senator near me says he intends to debate it.

The question being put, there were, on a division—yeas 11, noes 16.

Mr. POLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 13, noes 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Davis, Edmunds, Harris, Howard, Johnson, Norton, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Sumner—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morrill, Nesmith, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, and Wilson—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Grimes, Guthrie, Hendricks, McDougall, Morgan, Riddle, and Yates—12.

So the motion was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, requested the Senate to return to the House the bill of the Senate No. 32, to prevent the absence of territorial officers from their official duties, erroneously returned to the Senate yesterday as passed by the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, on the bill (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1868.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1134) declaring and fixing the rights of volunteers as a part of the Army; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

RETURN OF A BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the House of Representatives:

Ordered, That the Senate be requested to return to the House the bill of the Senate No. 32, to prevent the absence of territorial officers from their official duties, the same having been erroneously transmitted to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the request of the House be complied with.

The motion was agreed to.

DUTIES ON WOOL AND WOOLENS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill named by the Senator from Ohio, being the bill (H. R. No. 793) to provide increased revenue from imported wool, and for other purposes, is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the following amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. CATTELL:]

And be it further enacted, That from and after ten days from the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, and merchandise not herein provided for, imported into the United States from foreign countries, and now subject to duty under existing laws, an additional duty of one fifth, or twenty per cent. of the duty or rates of duty, including specific and ad valorem rates now imposed by law upon such goods, wares, and merchandise: Provided, That no additional duty shall be levied, collected, and paid on sugar, molasses, tea, coffee, salt, coal, crude dye woods, soda-ash, and bleaching powders.

Mr. WADE. Everybody knows that I should be for this amendment if I believed it was possible that it could pass the House of Representatives; but I am informed by members of that body who are well versed in its rules of proceeding that there is very little if any probability, if an amendment is put upon this bill, that it will pass at this session. I shall be compelled, therefore, in that view to vote against the amendment; for it is all-important, in my judgment, that this bill should be passed. This proposition may just as well be offered as a separate measure, and I shall be as much in favor of it as any member on this floor, and will aid and assist to put it through as soon as it can be done; but I hope it will not be ingrafted upon this bill so as to jeopardize the whole; for my opinion is that if we put the amendment upon this bill we shall lose everything.

Mr. STEWART. I hope no amendment will be made to this bill, but that we shall pass it as it came from the House. It is of great importance to the wool-growers of the West. I have voted very consistently for a general tariff all the way through, although the people I represent manufacture nothing, and they are only burdened by the protection afforded by a tariff. I did it for the general good of the whole country. But the House cannot agree upon any general bill. Any amendment to this bill will throw the whole question over and we shall lose it altogether. I shall therefore vote against any amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have always understood that it was not a very sound argument for one branch of a Government or legislative body to induce it to act or to abstain from acting in any particular direction on account of either hopes or fears as to what its coördinate branch would do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels called upon to say in justice to itself, not having previously spoken on this subject, that allusions to the action of the other House are clearly out of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very glad that the President has made that suggestion. I think it is a practice exceedingly dangerous to sound legislation, to say nothing of the taste of it, to undertake to control (with the best of motives, as I know my friend from Ohio [Mr. WADE] had in his anxiety that this bill should pass) our action by urging upon us any considerations touching what may or may not be the action of another branch of the Legislature. Therefore the question is, in my judgment, whether it is right, whether it is due to the country, whether it is due to other branches of industry than that which is provided for by this bill, as we have solemnly decided by a very heavy majority that it is, that we should advance the rates of the tariff upon the various articles that are imported and come into competition with our other industries. We have committed ourselves to that ground. Now, are we to be driven from it by any considerations except those that appeal to the real merit of the proposition? If in any other place there is difficulty or confusion, it is not our business to arrange that. It is due to the laborer, to the mechanic, to the manufacturer, to every American citizen that earns money by his labor and increases the wealth of the country by it to meet its burdens, that we should aid him as well as this special interest. It is true that the largest share of my constituents are interested in this special interest. I shall be glad to have it passed. I shall be still more glad if justice is done to the other interests of the country.

Mr. WADE. Except just at the last end of the session it is not well to speculate, perhaps, on what any branch of the Government will do; but we had better take a common-sense and practical view of this and all other questions. What induced me to allude to the House bill was this: we know the intricacy of their rules; we know sometimes that a thing is impossible to be done there, and we should not attempt impossibilities; and when the Speaker of the House, who is acquainted with their rules of proceeding, informs us that it will be fatal to put an amendment on the bill, it strikes me it is better for us to take what we can get and not attempt impossibilities. The bill is right so far as it goes; but it does not go by any means as far as I wanted it to go.

No Senator here is more anxious for that amendment to pass than I am. If you will put it in any form in which it will not jeopardize the whole, I am for it. It can be done by a separate resolution just as well as by jeopardizing this bill with it. If the House would pass the amendment, they would also pass a resolution backing up and making perfect this amendment, and do it without endangering the whole.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to say in one word that while I would be willing to go with the Senator from Vermont to adjust the tariff equitably and fairly in all its details—and I expect to stay here in the Senate long enough to do it—I do not believe the closing hours of this session to be the proper time, nor do I believe the manner of raising the revenue contained in this amendment would be the right way of doing it. Twenty per cent. on everything is not what would be equitable and just at all. Let us pass this bill. We can get this much if we pass it without amendment. If we try to get more we shall lose the whole; not because of the action of the House perhaps, but because of the fact that we are in the closing and dying hours of the session, and we cannot afford to risk it.

Mr. CATTELL. Mr. President, I am anxious that the amendment which I have offered shall be adopted. I do not like selecting one single department of industry in the country and protecting it while all others are left out in the cold. It does not agree with my sense of justice or of propriety. In answer to the objection of the Senator from Kansas, that this is an unjust and inequitable mode of raising the tariff, I will simply remark to him that it has been acted upon by the Congress of the United States on more occasions than one, and that its result, in my judgment, has been advantageous to the country in both the cases in which the Congress of the United States have acted in this direction.

Mr. GRIMES. When did they do so?

Mr. CATTELL. In 1863 and 1864.

Mr. GRIMES. And when at another time?

Mr. CATTELL. I am not sure. Perhaps I am wrong in saying that it was done more than once.

Mr. GRIMES. Only once.

Mr. CATTELL. My impression was that it was done in 1861 and in 1864.

Mr. GRIMES. It was done once, and then another joint resolution was passed extending the continuance of it.

Mr. CATTELL. Those are the two instances to which I referred.

Mr. GRIMES. And which have involved us in a labyrinth of trouble ever since.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better take the vote.

Mr. CATTELL. I believe I have the floor; and with all respect to the distinguished Senator from Ohio, I presume a vote can hardly be called while a Senator is on the floor. I object to this way of disposing without the slightest discussion of what I think as important a proposition as has been submitted to the Senate of the United States. I believe some increase of the tariff duties is demanded by the people of the country generally. It is a simple proposition. It is a proposition imposing a duty less by far than the average duty which, after full discussion, was decided upon in this Chamber. In my judgment it will be unwise for us to select one single department of industry in which the West is very largely interested, and which I am disposed to vote for myself. I believe it is right in itself; but it ought and should carry with it some regard for the other industrial interests of the United States. The proposition which I have offered is a simple one, one easily understood, and one which, in my opinion, will become a law if the Senate will adopt it. I do not feel disposed at this late hour of the session to take up time in discussion. I only express my regret at the indications that the friends of American industry are likely, just at this emergency, to allow this proposition to be overlaughed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I did not rise a few moments since to take the floor from the Senator from New Jersey. I rose for the purpose of asking him a question, which I will now put. I desire to inquire of him, as I suppose he is familiar with this whole subject of import duties, what was the average rate of increase in the bill which was recently passed by the Senate?

Mr. CATTELL. My opinion is that the increase was about fifteen per cent.—it is only an estimate, however—upon the dutiable amount of value, which would be equivalent to about seven per cent. on the duty.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Then do I understand that the Senator proposes in his present amendment an average rate of duty which will be considerably greater than the rate of duty contained in the bill which was passed by the Senate?

Mr. CATTELL. No.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I do not understand the Senator's answer exactly.

Mr. CATTELL. Will the gentleman permit me to explain? The twenty per cent. additional here is upon the duty, not upon the value of the goods. The fifteen per cent. was about the increase upon the value of the goods. This is but little more than half, in my judgment, of the increase proposed by the tariff bill passed by the Senate.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I now understand the Senator, and shall vote for the amendment. It seems to me rather an invidious thing—I will not say an odious thing—to select out one interest, which was provided for in the former bill, and by some skillful arrangement, or by good management I will say, pass a bill through both Houses for its advantages, leaving all other interests unattended to and undisposed of. I do not know any principle upon which this can be done, except that we should select an interest which is a little more powerful in Congress than any other, and which, therefore, in the closing hours of the session, can obtain a hearing when others cannot be heard. Upon principles of justice and fair treatment I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey as a temporary measure. I presume that some time during the next Congress this whole subject will be investigated, and we shall have a general law. In the mean time if we are to do anything, it seems to me more reasonable that we should do what we did two or three years ago: make a temporary arrangement by a horizontal increase of the duties generally rather than to select out one leading interest to which particular members of the two Houses may feel specially friendly, disregarding all other considerations. I object to this sort of legislation, and shall therefore vote for the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. GRIMES. I simply rise to repeat an inquiry that I am not confident I distinctly understood. Did I understand the Senator from New Jersey to say that this proposed increase of twenty per cent. is about one half of the increase proposed in the bill that was recently passed through the Senate and sent to the House of Representatives?

Mr. CATTELL. I answer by saying nearly; it is not quite half; and that this is upon the duty itself.

Mr. GRIMES. Then the bill that we passed was forty per cent.?

Mr. CATTELL. Between thirty and forty per cent. increase of duty.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope that the Senate will exercise their judgment, without regard at all to what the consequences are likely to be in the result of legislation, as to whether this proposition is just. It certainly is most unjust to select out one branch of industry and give that protection and let all the other industrial interests of this country suffer. The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] with great candor and sincerity, says that he will aid in having this measure advanced after the one proposed by his colleague is passed. But you see at once that there is a difference in the Senate. The Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Kansas demur to that proposition, and would not be in favor of adopting the amendment proposed by my colleague.

Sir, this is the most important measure to the people of anything we have had before us, and the people will require it of us; and I can say that if this Congress dissolves without giving protection to the industrial interests of this country results may accrue to this country which we do not at all now appreciate. I believe that the great projects that we as a party have in hand will be sacrificed by it. I believe that the people will have little confidence in a party that has two thirds of both Houses, and that, after sitting here for three months, could not give them any protection to their industry. They will seek that protection elsewhere. I do not imagine that the Senators from the western States realize the importance of this measure to the eastern States. We spend our time here week after week in laying taxes upon the industrial interests of the country, but cannot give them the protection which is absolutely necessary to their existence. Their factories are now discharging their hands, and work is being stopped for the want of this very protection. The people will require it of those who have had it in their power to give them this protection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is it in order to move to amend the amendments?

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senator from Michigan will let us take a vote on the amendment, and if it is adopted then the Senator can move to add to, change, or modify it in any form in the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was going to move to strike out all after "sugar, molasses, tea, and coffee."

Mr. SHERMAN. That can be done in the Senate in case the amendment is adopted. I trust we shall have a decisive vote, and take the sense of the Senate as to whether they will put on any amendments.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are the yeas and nays ordered on the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have not yet been demanded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot vote for this amendment, and I do not know that I can vote for the bill. The bill as it came from the House is obnoxious to the statement made by the honorable Senator from New Jersey, that it is legislating for a special interest that does not show any special claim for protection above others. It is obnoxious to that charge, and cannot commend itself, it seems to me, to those who are looking for general legislation for relief.

The wool and woolen interest in my State is a small interest comparatively. It is not an indifferent interest by any means, and it is not one to which I feel indifferent. I am disposed to do anything that I can here to foster it; but it is a minor interest comparatively; and therefore I cannot look upon this as a measure of relief.

The bill ignores the leading interests of my State, and the action of the House has been hostile to those interests. One of the leading interests of my State is ship-building. Everybody knows that that interest is absolutely prostrate and is in process of extinction. My State for the last ten years has built nearly half the sailing ships of the whole country, and in some years a little more than half. Now, sir, under the operation of the present laws and the condition of the times that interest is absolutely prostrate, and we cannot build a ship except at a great sacrifice. This Congress has been advertised of that fact. This branch of the Congress of the United States yielded to the argument, but the other House (if I may be permitted to allude to it) did not.

It comes back to us disfavored by that branch of Congress. We are not to have relief, and still we are asked to impose an additional burden on that interest of twenty per cent. The ship-building interest is in process of extinction under the present order of things, and no relief whatever is offered to it; and the question now put to me is, "Will you add twenty per cent. to the burdens under which that interest is staggering to-day?" I ask, what is the inducement? Why, "We will give you a protection on wool and woollens." Well, sir, the woolen interest in my State is not an inconsiderable interest, I admit, and I should be glad to extend it protection; but I cannot extend it that protection to the sacrifice of other interests that are absolutely prostrate, as that is not. Therefore I shall feel obliged to oppose any action of this Congress which does not look to the general protection of the industry of the country. A mere partial measure, one so partial as this is, does not commend itself to my judgment. I would rather forego all action at present than to adopt this.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have but one rule in regard to matters of this kind, and that is to accomplish as much good as I can, and only to attempt that which I can accomplish. Here is a bill which the House have passed, upon full and careful consideration, the result of mature deliberation; which we can now pass and make a law. We know that any amendment to this bill at this stage of the session necessarily defeats it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We do not know anything of the sort.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is absolutely so, without any reference to the proceedings of the other House; and the question is whether we will, by indirection, defeat a bill which has already received the sanction of the Senate by a vote of four to one. That is all there is about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think my friend is mistaken in saying "that is all there is about it." We are passing bills here every moment, day and night, covered with amendments that go back to the House. Are we to presume that this will meet any fate that they will not? We have no right to presume anything of the kind. There will be no difficulty, no danger on an amendment of this kind which we offer to this bill more than to any other. We are bound to presume that it will receive justice. We have a right to presume nothing else. Therefore I think it unjust to say that it is certain that this amendment defeats the bill. If amendments do not defeat other bills, why should an amendment defeat this if it is right?

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Johnson, Morgan, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Sprague, and Van Winkle—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Davis, Dixon, Fogg, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ross, Saulsbury, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—28.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cowan, Doolittle, Fowler, Guthrie, Riddle, and Yates—7.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the vote is taken, I simply desire to say that this is an illustration to our eastern friends of the workings of the tariff. This is tariff to satiety. This perhaps is an overdose. This is commending to them the poisoned chalice. As my friend from Rhode Island just now said, we are delivered into the hands of the Philistines.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 31, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Dixon, Edmunds, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Yates—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Creswell, Davis, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Patterson, Saulsbury, Sprague, Sumner, and Wilson—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cowan, Doolittle, Fessenden, Guthrie, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, and Riddle—9.

So the bill was passed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of February 13, 1867, a report of the Quartermaster General respecting a military commission sitting at Nashville, Tennessee, during the war, for the adjudication of claims of loyal citizens of Tennessee; which was ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a report of the Postmaster General, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 28th ultimo, calling for information relative to mail contracts with Mr. A. D. Trotter, of Staunton, Virginia, the amount of money paid him on said contracts without his taking the oaths prescribed by act of Congress; which was laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a detailed statement of the payments from the contingent fund of the Senate for the year ending December 3, 1866; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a copy of a correspondence between the Secretary of State and G. V. Fox, Esq., relative to the presentation by the latter to the Emperor of Russia of a resolution of Congress expressive of the feelings of the people of the United States in reference to the providential escape of that sovereign from an attempted assassination; which, on motion of Mr. SUMNER, was ordered to be printed and lie on the table.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate twenty thousand additional copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1866, and the accompanying documents, and three thousand additional copies of the same for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose the resolution will go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing have had the matter under consideration and are in favor of the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then it might as well be passed at once. It is in the usual form.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BANKRUPT BILL.

Mr. POLAND. I now submit the report of the committee of conference on the bankrupt bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States (H. R. No. 598) having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their amendment numbered twenty-six to the thirty-third section of said bill.

That the House recede from its non-concurrence with the Senate in the other amendments made to said bill by the Senate, and concur in the same.

LUKE P. POLAND.

EDWIN D. MORGAN.

JAMES A. McDOUGALL.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

THOMAS A. JENCKES.

HENRY L. DAWES.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LANE. I ask for the yeas and nays on concurring in the report of the committee.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Freling-huysen, Harris, Howard, Howe, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Morton, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, and Van Winkle—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cragin, Davis, Fogg, Fowler, Henderson, Hendricks, Lane, Morrill, Nesmith, Patterson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Cowan, Doolittle, Grimes, Guthrie, Kirkwood, and Riddle—8.

So the report was concurred in.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 1220 to provide ways and means for the payment of the compound-interest notes.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 1220, entitled "An act to furnish ways and means for the payment of the compound-interest notes," after a full conference have agreed that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: strike out "one hundred" in last line of first section of said amendment and insert "fifty," and strike out the second section of said amendment; and that the Senate agree to the said amendments to their amendment.

JOHN SHERMAN.

REVERDY JOHNSON.

WILLIAM SPRAGUE.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

HIRAM PRICE.

THEODORE M. POMEROY.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. The effect of this is to authorize a loan of $50,000,000 instead of $100,000,000. The second section the House objected to, and we receded from it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. What was the second section?

Mr. SHERMAN. The second section prohibited national banks from receiving and paying interest, and also denied them the right to use the compounds as reserves. The House objected to that strenuously, and we thought it best to abandon it.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, further insisted upon a disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to that bill, and asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ROSCOE CONKLING of New York, Mr. ROBERT C. SCHENCK of Ohio, and Mr. HIRAM McCULLOUGH of Maryland, managers of the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

A bill (S. No. 128) authorizing limited partnerships in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 264) to grant certain privileges to the Alexandria, Washington, and Georgetown Railroad Company, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 470) to authorize the change of a name;

A bill (S. No. 477) to amend an act entitled "An act to continue, alter, and amend the charter of the city of Washington," approved May 17, 1848;

A bill (S. No. 493) supplemental to "An act to establish the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1789;

A bill (S. No. 529) to incorporate the Howard University in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 534) to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal of the Supreme Court;

A bill (S. No. 570) extending the time for the completion of certain street railways;

A bill (S. No. 589) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Theological Institute," and to define and extend the powers of the same; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 160) for the relief of Dempsey Reece, of Indiana.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to expedite business, I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments to the bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. I will state that this proceeding is rather a singular one. The Senate asked for a committee of conference last night and appointed conferees, but the House have overlooked it and asked for a committee of conference themselves. I suppose the shortest way is to grant their request and appoint the same committee that was appointed last night.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. TRUMBULL, Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. DAVIS.

INDEMNITY TO MILITARY OFFICERS.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 859. It is a bill to indemnify the officers of the Government for acts done in the suppression of the rebellion. It is a House bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOWE. I want to call the attention of the Senate once more to the private claims that are pending. I am urged constantly by members of this House and of the other to bring forward certain bills in which they are particularly interested. I cannot bring them forward without the consent of the Senate. I am interested in none of them myself.

The motion of Mr. TRUMBULL was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 859) to declare valid and conclusive certain proclamations of the President, and acts done in pursuance thereof, or of his orders, in the suppression of the late rebellion against the United States.

All acts, proclamations, and orders of the President of the United States, or acts done by his authority or approval after March 4, 1861, and before July 1, 1866, respecting martial law, military trials by courts-martial or military commissions, or the arrest, imprisonment, and trial of persons charged with participation in the late rebellion against the United States, or as aiders or abettors thereof, or as guilty of any disloyal practice in aid thereof, or of any violation of the laws or usages of war, or of affording aid or comfort to rebels against the authority of the United States, and all proceedings and acts done or had by courts-martial or military commissions, or arrests or imprisonments made in the premises by any person by the authority of the orders or proclamations of the President, made as aforesaid, or in aid thereof, are declared to be approved in all respects, legalized and made valid, to the same extent and with the same effect as if the orders and proclamations had been issued and made, and the arrests, imprisonments, proceedings, and acts had been done under the previous express authority and direction of the Congress of the United States, and in pursuance of a law thereof previously enacted and expressly authorizing and directing the same to be done. And no civil court of the United States, or of any State, or of the District of Columbia, or of any district or Territory of the United States, is to have or take jurisdiction of, or in any manner reverse any of the proceedings had or acts done, nor is any person to be held to answer in any of the courts for any act done or omitted to be done in pursuance or in aid of the proclamations or orders, or by authority or with the approval of the President within the period aforesaid, and respecting any of the matters aforesaid; and all officers and other persons in the service of the United States, or who acted in aid thereof, acting in the premises shall be held prima facie to have been authorized by the President; and all acts and parts of acts heretofore passed, inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to strike out all of the bill after the word "done" in the twenty-sixth line to the word "President" in the thirty-eighth line, in these words:

And no civil court of the United States, or of any State, or of the District of Columbia, or of any district or Territory of the United States, shall have or take jurisdiction of, or in any manner reverse any of the proceedings had or acts done as aforesaid, nor shall any person be held to answer in any of said courts for any act done or omitted to be done in pursuance or in aid of any of said proclamations or orders, or by authority or with the approval of the President within the period aforesaid, and respecting any of the matters aforesaid; and all officers and other persons in the service of the United States, or who acted in aid thereof, acting in the premises shall be held prima facie to have been authorized by the President.

Mr. President, I have very great doubt whether we can pass that part of the bill which I do not propose now to strike out, at least in one particular. The Supreme Court have decided that, as the laws now stand, or did stand at the period when the prosecutions to which I am about to refer were instituted, there was no law which authorized a trial by military court of any description of a citizen who was not a soldier. They were unanimous in so thinking. The only difference between the judges was, that a majority thought it was not in the power of Congress to provide for the trial of a citizen charged with an offense by a military court in a State where the civil courts were in the exercise of their ordinary jurisdiction; but the whole court say that under the act which was supposed to authorize these military commissions they were illegally held. I have some doubt, therefore, whether this act of indemnity would be sanctioned by the judges; but I am perfectly willing to leave that to the determination of the courts if the question should be presented before them. What I object to is, that we undertake, if we pass this bill, to prohibit the courts from entertaining any jurisdiction at all, from hearing the case.

I admit that we should go to the very verge of the Constitution in protecting the officers who have acted under the authority of the Government, in all acts which they honestly believed were necessary to preserve the Government from the effort which was then being made to destroy it; but this bill goes much further than that. It provides that wherever a person has acted in point of fact under the authority of the President, no matter how he acted, no matter in what manner he performed the duty which the President's proclamation or order authorized, no matter how cruelly, with what unnecessary severity, he executed the order, the citizen who may have been injured shall be debarred the privilege of having the propriety of his arrest or the propriety of the manner in which the arrest was conducted examined by a civil tribunal. It therefore assumes, by prohibiting, that there might be cases which the courts would hold were not justified by any orders of the President, because there was no authority to issue such orders, or cases in which there would be no justification under the orders, because of the manner in which the orders had been carried out. I have heard of very many cases of most unnecessary hardship, uncalled for severity on the part of agents of the Government in the exercise of what they supposed to be the orders of the President of the United States.

If this bill passes, and is regarded, (and we should pass no bill that we do not think will be regarded,) the question of the validity of the President's orders, or the question as to the legality of the manner in which the orders have been executed can never be brought before the courts of the United States for investigation, because we say:

And no civil court of the United States, or of any State, or of the District of Columbia, or of any district or Territory of the United States, shall have or take jurisdiction of, or in any manner reverse any of the proceedings had or acts done as aforesaid, nor shall any person be held to answer in any of said courts for any act done or omitted to be done in pursuance or in aid of any of said proclamations or orders, or by authority or with the approval of the President within the period aforesaid, and respecting any of the matters aforesaid.

So that, no matter how unconstitutional those orders of the President of the United States may have been in the judgment of the judiciary, the Supreme Court of the United States as the ultimate tribunal, no matter how illegal—even if the orders of the President were legal—may have been the manner in which those orders have been executed, the party suffering, if the Constitution prohibited the orders or the law prohibited the manner in which the orders were executed, can in no possible way bring his case for redress before the courts of the United States. The Congress of the United States by this law assumes for itself to decide that these acts and proclamations are all legal, and that the manner in which they have been performed is legal, and proposes to deny to the courts jurisdiction over any cases arising under this law in the exercise of what it evidently seems to suppose is its paramount authority under the Constitution to interfere with what would otherwise be the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States. It is in my view, therefore, neither more nor less than an assumption on the part of Congress, if the bill should pass, first to pass a law, and secondly to say that that law shall never be disputed, no matter how absolutely without authority under the Constitution Congress may have been to pass it. It is too late to discuss the question. I shall content myself, therefore, with offering to amend it by striking out that part of the bill which the amendment covers and calling for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the English Parliament claims to be omnipotent, and so it is. It may legalize any act, however wrongfully committed, and there is no remedy, because, according to the theory of the British Constitution, there is no power that can review the decisions of that body. This, however, is the first time in the history of the Government of the United States when a majority in Congress have solemnly committed themselves in the form of a bill to the doctrine that they possess omnipotence under the Federal Constitution. I know that bills like this have been passed in England when the Crown has been guilty, in times of great public danger, of doing that which was forbidden by the constitution of Great Britain; but I never expected to live to see the day when the Federal Congress, acting under a written Constitution, should claim for themselves this omnipotence of power. I have seen, it is true, during the last few years step by step being taken in this direction by Congress; but now we have it in the form of a bill, boldly avowed to the whole world, that this American Congress, whose powers are defined and limited by a written Constitution, and which is only a coordinate branch of the Government, possesses all power under the Federal Constitution, that its will is law, and that neither constitutions nor anything else can bind that will. Why, sir, what does this bill propose? It proposes to ratify, legalize, and make valid—

All acts, proclamations, and orders of the President of the United States, or acts done by his authority or approval, after the 4th of March, A. D. 1861, and before the 1st day of July, A. D. 1866, respecting martial law."

Yes, sir, if he declared martial law throughout the whole United States, over that portion of the United States where there was no invasion or rebellion, where he had no authority to do it, where you, the Congress of the United States, had no authority to declare it, where no officer or department of the Government had authority to declare it, you, in your assumed omnipotence of authority, undertake to say the wrong thing was all right: "It was wrong when it was done; but we, the omnipotent masters of the people of the United States; we, who derive our powers, it is true, under a written Constitution, but who are superior to all written constitutions, now proclaim that we will that it shall be all right, and our will shall not be questioned." Yes, sir, even the mouths of the Federal courts, to whom, under the Constitution of the United States, is committed exclusively the power of determining all questions of law and equity arising under the Constitution, are to be shut; the voice of justice and right is not to be heard in her own temple; the omnipotence of the Congress of the United States is to say that outrage and wrong are right, that injustice is justice. We, who in our omnipotence of power have proclaimed to the American people and before the world that black is white, now proclaim that wrong is right:

"Military trials by courts-martial or military commissions."

A thing unknown to your Constitution, and which you have no power to ordain! Military commissions to try citizens of the United States whose rights are secured by a written Constitution! Military commissions to try persons not connected with the Army and Navy of the United States! If the courts of justice were open, and if justice could be impartially administered, every member who has sat on such tribunals would be liable to be tried and hanged for every murder committed by them. In England—call it a monarchy if you will—men have been tried and hung for being guilty of the very acts which you propose to legalize. Even the omnipotence of Parliament was not invoked to shield them, after the lapse of twenty years, against their murderous acts.

"Or the arrest, imprisonment, and trial of persons charged with participation in the late rebellion against the United States, or as aiders or abettors thereof, or as guilty of any disloyal practice in aid thereof."

"Any disloyal practice!" What is it? Have you defined it by law? Did you proclaim to any citizen of the United States before these unjustifiable proclamations were issued, before martial law was declared, what a "disloyal practice" was? Its definition can be found in no law-book in England, in America, or throughout the civilized world. And yet now, if a little petty officer has arrested any man because he charged him with having been guilty of a disloyal practice, you propose to legalize his acts; and if the injured citizen appeals to your courts of justice for redress, though the wrong he has suffered may have been the most grievous and outrageous, you say to him that he shall have no redress; that neither the Federal nor the State courts shall be open to his complaint. Ay, you do more: you reverse all the law of evidence in order to carry out the abominations of this bill. According to the theory, both of British and American law, every man is presumed to be innocent until he be proved to be guilty; and heretofore it has been held throughout the civilized world that where an act was done for which authority of law was claimed that authority must be shown; but you step in, in the exercise of that omnipotence of power which you unwarrantably claim, and you say before men and in the presence of high Heaven that all this shall be reversed, and however illegal, and however outrageous the act may have been which has been committed, it shall prima facie be presumed that it was done under the order of the President of the United States.

Sir, what are some of these "disloyal practices?" Some of us have heard of them. A respectable citizen of my own State, but not a member of your party, was on the day of the election, before the polls were opened, dragged away from his native State and imprisoned in a Federal den—if it is a den located on the borders of my State, Fort Delaware—and I should shed no tears if it and Fort McHenry and Fort Warren and Fort La Fayette were demolished, and ships were sent to the desert of Sahara for sand to cover them and blot them out from the human eye. This man was held till the election was over; and he was then permitted to learn the "disloyal practice" of which he had been guilty, and lo and behold! it was that he was a man "dangerous to the neighborhood." That was the written charge, and he was not allowed to see it until he was about to leave the fort. You by your bill say that if he seeks redress in a court of law it shall be presumed prima facie that the act was done under the authority of the President of the United States.

Sir, even if the President of the United States had authorized such acts, where did he get the power to authorize them? His power is limited by a written Constitution as well as yours. He has no more right in time of war to transgress the powers delegated to him than he has in time of peace; and neither has Congress.

Again, sir, a peaceable, quiet citizen in the county in which I reside was arrested by a petty, sub-provost marshal, carried to Baltimore, denied a hearing, and banished beyond the lines under the penalty of death if he dared return, when Maryland, once proud, glorious Maryland, by the side of whose sons the sons of my native State fought for that liberty which this Congress is transgressing, was trodden under foot and crushed to earth by a little petty military official that never won a battle and never will win one. One of your petty provost marshals took into his head that possibly he might have returned, and that one night he was about his house. So, in the exercise of his unlimited authority, he summoned a set of willing instruments, and they surrounded that man's house at the hour of midnight; with guns and weapons of every kind they demanded entrance into the house; frightened the man's wife, who was there with her little child; gained admission, and ate and drank to their heart's content, and no one was to be found there but a helpless wife and an infant child. Against every one of these trespassers, as counsel for that man, I brought an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, and if there could be any more horrible names attached to the writ I would have added them. I will try those cases; and when your miserable bill, that is not worth the paper it is written upon, is produced in the courts of Delaware as a justification for that act, and I am called upon to prove that the act was not done by authority of the President of the United States, I will tell that court that I do not care whether it was done by his authority or not. I do not recognize, and I do not believe the courts of my State will recognize, the fact that we had any legal despot in the United States, however despotic his acts were; and they will not, in my judgment, recognize the omnipotence of the Congress of the United States. If they do, I shall submit peaceably and quietly, as a law-abiding citizen, to their decision; but the question must be heard before the legal tribunals.

If the provost marshal undertakes, from envy, hatred, or malice, to surround my house at midnight, to break open my dwelling, and commit not only trespass vi et armis, but trespass quare clausum fregit, what right have you to say that the State of Delaware shall not have jurisdiction of actions for the violation of her own criminal law or for trespass committed against her citizens? Who gave you the right to oust a State court of its jurisdiction?

But, Mr. President, there is something in your bill after all: it declares that these acts are "legalized and made valid to the same extent" as if they "had been done under the previous express authority and direction of the Congress of the United States, and in pursuance of a law thereof previously enacted." Now, suppose in time of war you had passed an act authorizing military officers to go to my house, to break into my close, to tread down my grass, to dig up my soil, to beat and assault me, would you have had any right to do it?

If you have any such power I should like some of the legal gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber to tell me where in the Constitution that authority is delegated to Congress. If one of your military officers went to the house of a peaceable, quiet, unoffending citizen, broke his close, trod down his grass, dug up his soil, broke open his doors, destroyed his furniture, would you have a right to say that the courts of Delaware should have no jurisdiction over that matter, but that it is justified under your authority, because you passed an act authorizing him to do it?

There is one sovereign remedy for all the evils which this bill contemplates; and that is the provision in it that the acts referred to are legalized to the extent that they would be authorized if they had been made valid by an act previously passed by Congress. Then if Congress would have had no right under the Constitution to pass such an act, what becomes of the legalization of these acts when committed by authority of a President's proclamation or otherwise? Mr. President, this is only one more step in the utter destruction and subversion of constitutional civil liberty, in the overthrow of that Federal system of government adopted by our fathers. Did I say "one more step?" Ah, sir, let me recall the expression. That "one more step" it is not possible to take. You have already done it; you have dissolved the Union; you have destroyed the Federal Constitution; you have left nothing of constitutional liberty, liberty regulated by law, but a name. There is but one hope as against your unconstitutional acts. When armed men by hundreds of thousands trod your soil, and who could be commanded by military authority to do as you suggested, you proclaimed yourselves to be Union men, friends of the Constitution, men who were prosecuting a war, as you proclaimed, simply to preserve the Union and restore the Constitution; but now that that armed soldiery no longer in such numbers treads your soil, you are proving every day that you yourselves are the real disunionists. The words "Copperhead" and "traitor" you rolled as a sweet morsel under your tongues. It seemed to delight you to boast that you in patriotism were superior to your neighbors. Oh, to question then the rightfulness of any opinion of your chosen chief was disloyalty. To question then the constitutionality of your action as a Federal Congress was evidence of being a Copperhead. Now, that you have it in your power to restore the Union which you have dissevered, and to bring into one loving fold all the people of this country, vast and extensive as it is, you show your devotion to the Union of these States by saying to ten of them, "Stay away from your father's house; you have no part or lot in our heritage." You evince your love of the Constitution and fidelity to the Union by levying taxation and denying representation. You evince your love of liberty and your high regard for the Constitution by passing a bill delegating the power to suspend the writ of habeas corpus over these States, of denying their citizens every constitutional right. But not content with that, not content with what you have done in reference to the southern States, you propose now by this bill to close the courts of justice to my appeal if a man pretending to act under Federal authority has come into my peaceful State, outraged my rights, and done me most grievous wrongs.

Sir, there is but one hope that I see against your action, and that is an appeal to the great thinking mass of this country. I hope that judgment has not wholly fled to brutish beasts, that men are not wholly lost to reason; and if there is one particle of judgment left or one spark of reason left, I hope that such bills as this will be a powerful appeal to that judgment and that reason, and that ere long the American people in their majesty will rise up and pronounce your acts violative of all that is dear to the human heart and all that is sacred to the ideas of constitutional liberty.

Mr. STEWART. I think the whole effect of this bill is misunderstood. This is an amnesty bill—amnesty to the officers and soldiers who have preserved this Union by their valor and by their devotion to the country. It simply says that they shall not, for their good conduct, be annoyed by law-suits growing out of the war; that they shall have peace. I did not suppose that those who are so very desirous that rebels should have immunity from punishment, those who are so strenuously opposed to every measure adopted for security lest in some way it might circumscribe the claims of rebels, those who have been so fiercely opposed to what has been deemed absolutely necessary for the preservation of peace and order, would be so violently opposed to giving this small boon to the loyal soldier engaged in this war, that after they have risked their lives for the preservation of their country and have preserved its liberty, they shall not be subjected to law-suits growing out of their obedience to the orders of the President.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to know for whom this bill is an act of amnesty unless it be somebody who has transgressed the law? To whom does it propose to extend amnesty except to the violators of law?

Mr. STEWART. I will answer that. Every time a rebel brings suit against our men it relieves them from the necessity of being harassed by going back to get the evidence that they were acting in pursuance of law, and it throws the onus on the party who desires to bring this great contest into the courts of showing that he did not have the order of the President and was not acting according to law.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Suppose these illegal acts were committed against persons who were not rebels nor disloyal, as you call it; against men whom you yourselves call loyal, would you close the courts of justice against such men?

Mr. STEWART. I reckon there was no order of the President to take a person because he was loyal. But, as I said before, the whole scope and purpose of this bill is an amnesty to the loyal; and we who have been in favor of amnesty to the disloyal certainly must be in favor of amnesty for the loyal, for there is no greater annoyance than to be afflicted with all sorts of vexatious law-suits every time a man who has fought for his country happens to be caught in the vicinity where he was compelled to fight.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall say but a very few words in reply to what has been said on this bill. Congress has been legislating for several years to protect persons who were engaged in the suppression of the rebellion from prosecutions and suits for acts which were done in the line of their duty and in obedience to the orders of the President of the United States and those acting under his authority. Several statutes have been passed on that subject. The first, I think, was on the 3d of March, 1863; and we passed an amendatory act on the 11th of May, 1866, protecting all officers from having to pay damages in consequence of such acts as are recited in this bill and in the acts to which I have referred; but those statutes went no further than to authorize the party who was sued to transfer his case from the State to the Federal court, and to make the orders of the President, or the fact that the party acted under a color of law in the suppression of the rebellion, a defense to the suit. This statute goes very little further. It authorizes the party to make this defense in the preliminary stages of the action, to plead to the jurisdiction of the court.

The Senator from Maryland, by moving to strike out the latter part of the bill as it stands, recognizes, as I understand, the authority to pass the first portion of this bill. Now, what is it? It declares that these parties shall be protected to the same extent that they would have been protected by an existing law at the time the acts were done. Is there any Senator here who is not willing to go that far?

Mr. NORTON. Allow me to ask if this does not really go further, and go to the extent of preventing a court from reviewing a judgment of a military commission when a person may perhaps be suffering imprisonment under the sentence of a military commission?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It goes that far if an act of Congress existing at the time would have protected the party. The clause which it is proposed to strike out, which is that "no civil court of the United States," &c., shall "take jurisdiction of or in any manner reverse any of the proceedings had or acts done as aforesaid," merely authorizes the party to plead to the jurisdiction. You may bring the suit; but if the fact is made to appear to the court that it is a case coming within this law, and this law is constitutional, then the court would proceed no further in the case. Now, is not the Senator from Minnesota and are not all of us prepared to go to the full extent we can go to protect all persons who took part in putting down this rebellion? I presume so.

Mr. NORTON. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that I am entirely willing and I am very anxious to vote for a bill that will protect and relieve persons who acted in the discharge of their duty, under the orders and proclamations here referred to, from all civil or personal liability for their acts; but the question with me is, whether this does not go to the extent of preventing a court from reviewing in any manner, even by habeas corpus, the proceedings of a court-martial or military commission, so that if a person was illegally imprisoned he could not be enlarged. If it goes to that extent, I should dislike very much to vote for this bill; but if it does not go that far, and is only for the protection of our officers in acts done under presidential orders and proclamations, I shall be very willing to vote for it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As I understand the bill, it intends to go thus far and no farther: to protect the party just as far as it would have been competent for Congress to have protected him had a law previously existed. Suppose Congress had passed a law authorizing a military commission, if you please, as the Senator refers to that: if the existence of such a law at the time would have warranted the commission, then the commission having been held without that law, and the parties having acted in obedience to orders who sat upon that commission, the effect of this bill is to protect them. I presume the Senator from Minnesota desires to protect them. It protects them although the act had no warrant of law at that time. If Congress could have given the warrant, then we want to give it now.

Mr. NORTON. I certainly do, and the doubt in my mind arises out of the provision that no court "shall have or take jurisdiction of or in any manner reverse any of the proceedings had or acts done as aforesaid." And it certainly would be a reversing of the proceedings of a court-martial or military commission to reverse the sentence or to declare it illegal and discharge the person from imprisonment; but so far as the protection of the members of the court or persons acting under those orders is concerned, I am entirely willing to go as far as the Senator from Illinois; but I do think that if persons are under imprisonment by the sentence of a military commission, and in the judgment of the courts that is illegal, the persons ought to have their liberty.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Does not the Senator see that the bill does not go to the extent that he proposes?

Mr. NORTON. That is the question.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The first part of the bill does what? It declares "that all acts, proclamations, and orders of the President of the United States, and acts done by his authority" upon military commissions and otherwise "are hereby approved in all respects, legalized, and made valid." How? Made valid "to the same extent and with the same effect as if said orders and proclamations had been issued and made, and said arrests, imprisonments, proceedings, and acts had been done under the previous express authority and direction of the Congress." The object of this bill is to legalize to some extent, if we can. They are to have the benefit of this protection. Then what follows? No civil court shall reverse what? "Shall reverse any proceeding which would have been valid if we had had the authority to order it." That is all. They shall not take jurisdiction. Now, when shall they not take jurisdiction? They shall not take jurisdiction when the state of the case is made to appear in the court. You may go into the court with your case, and when the case comes up your defendant pleads, what? That he did this act complained of under the authority of an order of the President, if you please; he refers you to this statute that that order of the President is a protection to him, provided a law of Congress, had it existed at the time, would have protected him. The court is of opinion that a law would not have protected him. Then your case is not within the law, and the court would go on with its jurisdiction; or, if the court believe this law to be unconstitutional, it would proceed to hear the case. After all, the court is to decide it; but you authorize the party to meet the prosecution or the suit at the threshold and plead to the jurisdiction of the court.

I think, and I have always thought, that we should go to the very extent of our power in protecting parties for acts done in the suppression of the rebellion. Let the waters of oblivion wash over and bury out of sight and out of remembrance, if it were possible, all the acts connected with this terrible war. I wish to protect these parties as far as we can. I was as much opposed as the Senator from Minnesota to the exercise of unwarranted power, and regret that it ever should have been resorted to; but where authority was exercised without the direct sanction of law at the time, if it was exercised in the preservation of the Union and for the country, I want to protect the party as far as I can. Most of these cases would be protected by the laws as they exist. This remedy, or the protection afforded by this bill, is a little more summary. I think in that is the chief distinction between what this bill proposes and the protection which parties have under existing statutes. We passed a law in 1863 limiting to two years suits in this class of cases. That act of limitation would be a protection to most of the officers, but perhaps not to all; and it was thought important by the House of Representatives to pass this bill. I am so unwilling at this stage of the session, with the important measures which are pressing upon us, to take up time, that I shall not discuss this matter further than merely to state the reasons, as I understand, for the law, and leave it to the Senate to determine whether they will pass it or not.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I had intended to speak briefly on the subject of this bill when it was called up; but I shall refrain, and content myself with saying that after looking it over as carefully as I can at my seat, I am satisfied that there is no clause in it which is unconstitutional, and that in my opinion it ought to pass for the purpose, as announced by the honorable Senator from Nevada, of enacting at least an amnesty to the Union soldiers and officers who have carried us through this war. I am unwilling that henceforth there should be outstanding against them, either in the North or the South, any causes of litigation by which they may be harassed and put to trouble and expense. I regard it as a simple duty that Congress should establish and enact this most necessary bill of indemnity in favor of all persons who have been concerned necessarily in the prosecution of this war.

I will say further, that this bill does not in any of its clauses cover the case of a private trespass which seemed to exercise the imagination and the feelings of the honorable Senator from Delaware. It does not relate to any case of a mere private trespass, but only to such orders as have been issued by the President of the United States or by his authority, and to acts which have been done colore officii under that authority. Thus far we surely have the right to go, and there I am content.

Mr. NORTON. The Senator from Illinois certainly cannot be more anxious to accomplish the object he proposes to accomplish by this bill than I am, and I felt that the Senator did not really understand the suggestion that I made. I am entirely willing, as I said before, to afford all protection that we can to persons who have acted under these orders or proclamations; but the difficulty in my mind grows out of the first clause of that part of the bill proposed to be stricken out. I will read it:

And no civil court of the United States, or of any State, or of the District of Columbia, or of any district or Territory of the United States, shall have or take jurisdiction of or in any manner reverse any of the proceedings had or acts done as aforesaid.

These acts done were acts done by military commissions, among others, and those proceedings this part of the bill proposes shall not be reversed, and in order to prevent their reversal it provides that no court shall take jurisdiction of any suit or action or proceeding to reverse the proceedings of a military commission. Now, suppose that a person in prison under sentence of a military commission applies to a court or a judge for a writ of habeas corpus to test the legality of his imprisonment; the question I put to the Senator from Illinois is whether that court under this provision would not at once refuse the writ, giving effect to this provision, because Congress had deprived the court of jurisdiction of a proceeding or an action which should reverse proceedings of that military commission? The consequence would be that the person imprisoned would have no means of testing the legality of his imprisonment, and he would have to serve out that term of imprisonment imposed by the military commission. I do not think we ought to deprive persons who are serving their term of imprisonment under the sentence of a military commission of all access to the courts to determine the legality of their imprisonment. That is the objection I make, if it be an objection which is well founded; but outside of that, and in view of the purpose of the bill as stated by the Senator from Illinois, I am willing to go as far as he proposes to protect every person from all civil or criminal liability by reason of any acts done under any of those orders or proclamations. The only difficulty in the way of my supporting the bill is the doubt in my mind as to whether this provision does not go to the extent I have stated. If it be true that the bill does not go to that extent I should vote for it cheerfully.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understand that no court has ever had authority to revise the proceedings of a court-martial and discharge the person—

Mr. NORTON. This applies to military commissions as well.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Military commissions are just as legal as courts-martial, where they were properly authorized. There has been no decision that you cannot try a person by military commission. The decision was that a particular military commission in a certain State, under the peculiar circumstances of that case, was not authorized to try the party, but military commissions in the disloyal States have never been pronounced to be illegal.

Mr. NORTON. There may be other military commissions similarly circumstanced to that which was decided to be illegal.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There may be, and I do not suppose that this bill would prevent a court from acting if the court believed that the law forbidding it to act was unconstitutional. That would be a question for the court to decide; but I suppose that this bill would prevent the court from going behind the conviction, and I think it ought.

Mr. NORTON. I assume that this bill is constitutional, and that the courts will act upon it as such.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall vote against this bill. I think it is without the least authority on the part of Congress to pass it, and it is eminently impolitic. I think that this Congress is now engaged in forging and has forged more weapons for the subversion of the liberties of the people of this country than all the other powers that have ever existed in it. When the scepter of power shall have changed from the party now holding it and gone into the hands of another, and that other and triumphant party turns the precedents and principles established by the present party upon it, it will want no other authority for the perfect subjugation and slavery of the present dominant party.

This is a bill of indemnity as it is called. There are various modes of indemnity. We have two systems of government in our country; the one is national and the other State. For the violation of the national penal laws the President of the United States is clothed with the entire power of granting indemnity either by special pardon or by a general proclamation of indemnity. As to violations of the penal laws of a State, there is no power that can indemnify for such violations except the Governor of the State where the violations have taken place; and I deny utterly that Congress can pass any law whatever that will exempt a citizen of the United States from his responsibility for a wrong and a trespass against the laws of Congress or of a State. Such wrongs are in the nature of private wrongs; they are not public offenses or crimes; and the power of the Executive of the United States and of the States to grant pardon and amnesty for these private trespasses and wrongs does not exist.

Mr. President, an officer or a person in the employment of the United States may commit a crime against the laws of a State, and where he does he becomes a criminal against the laws of that State, and neither the President of the United States nor Congress has any power whatever to exempt him from his liability as a criminal against the laws of a State which he has violated. When indemnity or pardon is asked for an individual or for a class of persons for having violated the laws of the United States, the appropriate power for indemnity, for pardon and amnesty for the violation of penal laws is the President of the United States. So, sir, in relation to violations of the State laws there is no Federal authority, congressional or executive, that can release any individual whatever as a criminal against State law. The authority to grant that pardon belongs to the State Executive.

Congress has power to create courts; that power has been exercised. Congress has power to vest, to increase, to withdraw the jurisdiction of these courts; but Congress has no power whatever over the jurisdiction of State courts. It cannot vest any jurisdiction in State courts; it cannot create any jurisdiction in State courts; it cannot divest any jurisdiction of State courts; such powers are exercised by the State authorities under the constitutions of the States without any regard to the powers of Congress, and Congress has no power whatever to revise the investment of jurisdiction in courts by the Legislatures of the States nor the exercise of that jurisdiction by State courts.

The only indemnity which Congress can give to a President even, or to any man acting under the order or authority of a President, is in the form I have stated. The President has power to grant pardon for all violations of the Federal laws; but he has no power whatever to grant pardon for violations of State laws; and Congress has no power to pass laws to authorize him to exercise any such power; and if it did pass such laws they, tested by the Constitution, would be nugatory and void.

There is no power in the United States in time of war or peace that can legitimately and constitutionally try a civilian who is not in the naval or military service of the United States, or in the militia of a State in the actual service of the United States, by a court-martial or by a military commission. It is a usurpation, and a flagitious usurpation of power for any military court to try a civilian; and if any military court tries a civilian and sentences him to death, and he is executed under the sentence, the whole court are nothing but murderers, and they may be indicted in the State courts where such military murders are perpetrated; and if the laws were enforced firmly and impartially every member of such a court would be convicted, sentenced, and punished as a murderer.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kentucky if he would be willing to punish any of those men as murderers who acted upon those courts under orders.

Mr. DAVIS. I am arguing the principle and the power.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The object of this bill is to protect such persons.

Mr. DAVIS. There are some that I would be willing to try and execute as murderers, and in regard to whom I should like to have it done.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Would you try and execute as a murderer a man who sat upon the military commission here that tried the assassins of the President?

Mr. DAVIS. I am not saying anything about that. I am testing the principle of the Constitution; I am testing the powers of the General Government; I am appealing to the principles of the Constitution that protect the liberties of this people.

I am not talking in the interest of any party or of any faction or for the protection of any party or any faction. I am speaking in the name of the liberties of my countrymen against present abuses of power and all future abuses of power. I regard the constitutional liberties of this country as of inestimable value. I regard the great principle of trial by jury of all civilians, according to the course of the common law, as of inappreciable value to the people, present and future, of the United States; and never would I sanction any violation, any infraction of that right, or of the principles of the Constitution which secure it to the people. I have no objection to amnesty, to the oblivion which the honorable Senator wishes to pass over those acts which have taken place. In my State, the Governor and Legislature of Kentucky have both acted with a view to this amnesty, this pacification and peace, and their action receives my full approbation; but I say that when such acts are attempted and passed, they ought to be by the appropriate constitutional power.

I say in addition that this principle, this precedent of trying a civilian by a military court in times of war or peace, is a usurpation of power, and there is no constitutional sanction for it. I say that the principle of constitutional law by which it is to be tested would make every man who is concerned in such trials and sentences and their execution a murderer. Such is the law of England. It has been administered there; it was administered there sixty or seventy years in the case of Governor Wall that has been so often cited. My purpose in rising was not to express any dissent from the oblivion, the amnesty, the peace and forgiveness proposed. Everything of that kind receives the sanction of my reason and of my heart. But I do not want the Constitution and its great principles to be trampled under foot in the forms of administering this mercy. I think, Mr. President, that the only indemnity that can be granted to these men, outside of the laws of Congress and the courts, is simply the power of Congress where they are sued and are mulcted in fines and judgments to appropriate the money necessary for their indemnity. If there is anything on earth that I worship, it is liberty according to law; and of all the great principles that secure liberty according to law there is nothing that commands so much of my deep idolatry as trial by jury, as the subjecting of civilians to trial by civil courts and by juries alone. That is the constitutional principle to which I give in my adhesion, and which I will never cease to support. I want every mercy, every justice, every liberality extended toward the parties that have been engaged in this war, but I want it done by the appropriate authorities, State and Federal, and I do not want the Congress of the United States to usurp powers even to do this act of forgiveness and mercy. It has been amply done in my State with regard to all our people and all our citizens, and I approve of it; and instead of Congress passing this measure, a good portion of it and of the effects that it is intended to have ought to be given over to the States, in my judgment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I believe there are very extensive provisions already made by law for the protection of officers of the United States and of citizens who have assisted them in all cases where they have executed the orders of the President of the United States, or have performed any legal duty under the laws of the country. I do not, therefore, understand why this measure is introduced. In the debate, so far as the affirmative is concerned, the argument has been exclusively upon the condition of things existing in the States which were in insurrection, and it is alleged that this measure is to afford further additional security to loyal men in that portion of the Union against the actions which may be instituted against them by persons who were opposed to the Government in the late war. But, sir, the bill itself has no such restricted operation. It is general in its provisions and applicable to all parts of the country, North and West as well as South.

Mr. President, there is an inconvenience attending the consideration of this bill. It is introduced for actual consideration on the last day of the present session when we are crowded with other engagements, and when it is impossible to investigate carefully and critically the propositions which it contains, and to examine the former legislation upon this subject with care and with exactness. But, sir, the debate so far as it has progressed, has exhibited to us several salient points which cannot escape attention. In the first place, the motion of the Senator from Maryland covers the latter portion of the bill, and can be considered distinctly from the other portions of the bill and the former laws. This bill for the first time, as I understand, in our history forbids the courts of the country to look into or investigate a case introduced or brought before them by a citizen. We may have had some such measures during the war within portions of the country and with reference to military operations; but I believe it has never been proposed to place upon the statute-book of the United States a law forbidding our courts and forbidding all courts in the country from taking cognizance of a case brought regularly before them in the usual and accustomed manner by a citizen. I may be mistaken upon this point, but I believe I state the fact correctly. Whether it be an unexampled provision or not, it is one, in my judgment, objectionable in the highest degree, one which ought not to receive the sanction either of the Senate or of the people of this country.

By the law of the 11th of May, 1866, very large and extensive provisions were placed upon the statute-book with reference to this general subject. That law provided that in case of any prosecution or action for any arrest, imprisonment, or other proceeding to the injury of the citizen, a defense that the act done or committed was under an order of the President of the United States or by his authority should be a sufficient defense. Nay, sir, that law went so far as to provide that even verbal authority from the President, directly or through any head of a Department, or other official authorized by him, should be sufficient upon the defense. Certainly that was a very remarkable and a very extensive provision for the protection of the class of persons covered by the law.

I need not refer to other provisions contained in that and in other laws which are likewise very extensive and protective in their character; but that law did not close the doors of the courts. That law left them wide open to the citizen. He could go into court, but he would be deterred from going (although he had the liberty of approach) in any case where public authority had in due form sanctioned the proceeding against him. Even parole authority was made sufficient to the vindication of the officer and all who assisted him.

What more did we do by former laws? I believe there are two or three statutes on the subject. We have provided that where a suit is instituted in a State court in any part of the country it may be removed into the courts of the United States. We have most extensive and most stringent provisions drawing within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and within the protection of the United States laws all cases whatsoever arising under military jurisdiction or under alleged authority, military or civil, proceeding from the United States. Now, what more can be asked for the protection of all those who have served the Government either in a military or in a civil capacity, either as officers or citizens, in any possible case which has arisen or can arise? Sir, I am opposed to closing the courts of the country; I am opposed to a flat, open, shameless denial of justice to the citizen; I am opposed to closing the mouth of any complainant in any part of the country who in a regular, orderly, peaceful, and lawful manner approaches any tribunal of justice demanding an investigation of a complaint which he has to prefer against either officer or citizen. Is it not sufficient when with all your power you arm your officer and the citizen who has assisted him with the right of defense in a regular, in a legal, in a usual, and ordinary manner?

Besides, sir, if there should be some omission in former laws, we might adopt new provisions hereafter; or if some officer or citizen of merit who has acted bona fide should happen to be cast in damages in the performance of a duty, which we think was laudable or which was innocent, under color or pretense of authority, we may step forward and rescue him. I do not know that any such case can arise under existing laws, but if it should we could indemnify the officer upon the ordinary and usual principle which has prevailed in other countries as well as this. The present bill, however, which proposes to close the courts of justice and forbid the citizen to approach a tribunal where the laws will be administered, ought at least to stand condemned and be rejected.

Mr. President, there were in the adhering States—by which I mean the States that were represented in Congress during the war, that participated in the legislative department of the Government by their Senators and Representatives—there were in the adhering States during the war, and even since the war to some extent, cases of gross outrage and of injustice committed upon the citizen, and that, too, under pretense of Federal authority where there was no authority in point of fact. This bill contains a provision which is justly odious, justly obnoxious to censure, if not to contempt. It is that persons who have been aggrieved, really and truly aggrieved, who have been oppressed, who have not only been insulted, but oppressed, plundered, or imprisoned without any legitimate authority, without any good cause whatever, shall, when they come into court with their cases, be obliged to prove a negative. Why, sir, what a monstrous proposition that is; how much opposed to all ideas of justice; how flatly it contradicts a legal principle which is not only found in the common law, but recognized by statute law both in this country and abroad. How is it possible for the party who comes into court to prove that an officer who has oppressed him had no authority? Written authority is sufficient; parole authority is sufficient under the law. How can he prove a negative? The thing is simply impossible; and yet that is one of the provisions of the bill, and it is included, I believe, in that portion which the Senator from Maryland proposes to strike out.

The bill provides that where an officer or a citizen who assisted him has committed an illegal act, an act of outrage, of oppression, and of wrong upon the citizen, the presumption shall be that all that was done was authorized, and the opposite party is required in the first instance to prove what is impossible, to wit: that he had no authority for the proceeding which is complained of or objected to. Both these points of which I have spoken are covered by the amendment of the Senator from Maryland—the closing of the courts in a large mass of cases, and then where they are open, throwing upon the party who complains of an injury the burden of proving that the person against whom he complains had no authority for doing the act or thing for the committing of which the suit is instituted.

I shall go no further into this debate than I have already gone—the statement of considerations applicable to the amendment which has been proposed. If time permitted, if we had the leisure to look into the existing laws, to scan carefully the provisions of this bill, it might perhaps be profitable to enter more fully into the debate; it might be advantageous to search very carefully into the various clauses of this bill for the intention with which it is proposed, for the object in view in its enactment. As at present advised, I can see no good reason for the passage of any such bill, while I see strong, powerful, insuperable objections, at all events, to that portion of it which is covered by the motion to strike out, submitted by the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland; upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 9, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, and Saulsbury—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Patterson, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—30.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Creswell, Deo-little, Fogg, Guthrie, Harris, Poland, Pomeroy, Riddle, Sprague, Van Winkle, and Wade—13.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORTON. I move to amend the bill by striking out in the twenty-ninth line the words "or in any manner reverse any of the proceedings had or," and to insert "any civil action, suit, or proceeding founded upon any such," so as to make the provision read that no civil court "shall have or take jurisdiction of any civil action, suit, or proceeding founded upon any such acts done as aforesaid."

I will state that my object in moving this amendment is to relieve the bill from any doubt as to the jurisdiction of the courts to test the regularity of the sentences as judgments of military commissions, and of affording full protection to the persons against whom civil suits may be instituted for the recovery of damages by reason of any acts done under these orders or proclamations. I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 9, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, and Saulsbury—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Dixon, Edmunds, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Morrill, Nye, Patterson, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Creswell, Deo-little, Fessenden, Fogg, Guthrie, Harris, Lane, Morgan, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, and Riddle—14.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the vote is taken on this bill, I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois, who has charge of it, if the effect of it would be to prevent the courts from releasing upon a writ of habeas corpus persons occupying the position of Bowles and Milligan, whose cases were recently decided in the Supreme Court. Those persons the Supreme Court held, I believe unanimously, should be tried by a civil tribunal, and could not be tried by a military tribunal on account of the act of March 3, 1863.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is a question for the courts to decide. There is a difference of opinion as to whether Congress could have authorized military commissions or not. This bill undertakes to make valid whatever military commissions did to the same extent that they would have been valid if a law had existed at the time authorizing them. If an act of Congress authorizing a military commission in the Bowles case had existed at that time, according to this bill the action of the military commission would have been valid. What the courts may hereafter decide on that point I cannot say.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. McDUGALL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DIXON. It is one thing to establish military commissions for the future; it is another to legalize so far as we can the action of those which were ordered during the war. I am willing to vote to legalize what has been done.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 36, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Norton, and Saulsbury—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Creswell, Fessenden, Guthrie, Henderson, Nesmith, Poland, and Riddle—8.

So the bill was passed.

TENURE OF OFFICE—VETO.

Mr. W. G. MOORE, Secretary to the President of the United States, appeared below the bar and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to return to the Senate, in which House it originated, the bill (S. No. 453) entitled "An act regulating the tenure of certain civil offices," with his objections thereto in writing.

THANKS TO BRAZILIAN CHAMBERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. SUMNER. Before the reading of that paper is commenced I appeal to the Senate, and ask them to pass unanimously a resolution responsive to resolutions that passed the Parliament of Brazil unanimously, expressing condolence with us in the death of the late President Lincoln. It has been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to entertaining the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 183) thanking the Chambers of Senators and Deputies of Brazil for their resolutions of sorrow and sympathy on the death of President Lincoln, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is in these words:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress of the United States has received with respect and gratitude the resolutions of sorrow and sympathy which the Chambers of Senators and Deputies of Brazil have adopted on the death of President Lincoln, and hereby tenders to those Chambers the thanks of the people of the United States.

Sec. 2. And be it further resolved, That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to forward a copy of these resolutions to the Emperor of Brazil, with a request that it be communicated to the two Chambers.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENURE OF OFFICE—VETO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message of the President of the United States will now be read.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the message lie on the table, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 483.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I insist that the message be read in the regular order, and that we then dispose of the question. It is of considerable importance to the country that it should be disposed of, and we had better do it now. I hope the Senate will not agree to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HOWE. Some time or other I shall have to get the sense of the Senate upon considering some bills from the Committee on Claims. I am just as much in favor of the consideration of that message as any other member of the Senate I suppose, and recognize the importance and the necessity of its being taken into consideration; but I shall have to take the sense of the Senate as to whether they will consider these other bills or not. I have raised the question ever since I was a young man, and against almost every bill that has come up since, and I have not received any favor yet. I propose to pursue the endeavor.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope the Senate will permit the bills referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin to be taken up. The chairman of the Committee on Claims has been endeavoring to get them up from time to time. Other committees have had their opportunity. It will take but a little while, and then they will be out of the way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am on both these committees, and I am anxious that the chairman of the Committee on Claims should have the bills of which he has charge taken up; but it seems to me that it is of great importance that we should dispose of this veto message at this time, so that the bill may go back to the House and be acted on there. After the vetoes are out of the way I think I shall be ready to support the chairman of the Committee on Claims in his applications against any measure that may then be brought up.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the chairman inform me what the question is?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Wisconsin is that the message of the President of the United States be laid on the table, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the bill?

Mr. HOWE. A private claim.

The motion was not agreed to.

The message was read, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I have carefully examined the bill to regulate the tenure of certain civil offices. The material portion of the bill is contained in the first section, and is of the effect following, namely:

That every person holding any civil office to which he has been appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and every person who shall hereafter be appointed to any such office, and shall become duly qualified to act therein, is and shall be entitled to hold such office until a successor shall have been appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and duly qualified; and that the Secretaries of State, of the Treasury, of War, of the Navy, and of the Interior, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General, shall hold their offices respectively for and during the term of the President by whom they may have been appointed, and for one month thereafter, subject to removal by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

These provisions are qualified by a reservation in the fourth section, "that nothing contained in the bill shall be construed to extend the term of any office the duration of which is limited by law." In effect the bill provides that the President shall not remove from their places any of the civil officers whose terms of service are not limited by law without the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States. The bill, in this respect, conflicts, in my judgment, with the Constitution of the United States. The question, as Congress is well aware, is by no means a new one. That the power of removal is constitutionally vested in the President of the United States is a principle which has been not more distinctly declared by judicial authority and judicial commentators than it has been uniformly practiced upon by the legislative and executive departments of the Government. The question arose in the House of Representatives so early as the 16th day of June, 1789, on the bill for establishing an executive department, denominated "The Department of Foreign Affairs." The first clause of the bill, after recapitulating the functions of that officer and defining his duties, had these words: "To be removable from office by the President of the United States." It was moved to strike out these words, and the motion was sustained with great ability and vigor. It was insisted that the President could not constitutionally exercise the power of removal exclusive of the Senate; that the Federalist so interpreted the Constitution when arguing for its adoption by the several States; that the Constitution had nowhere given the President power of removal, either expressly or by strong implication; but, on the contrary, had distinctly provided for removals from office by impeachment only. A construction which denied the power of removal by the President was further maintained by arguments drawn from the danger of the abuse of the power; from the supposed tendency of an exposure of public officers to capricious removal, to impair the efficiency of the civil service; from the alleged injustice and hardship of displacing incumbents, dependent upon their official stations, without sufficient consideration; from a supposed want of responsibility on the part of the President, and from an imagined defect of guarantees against a vicious President, who might incline to abuse the power.

On the other hand, an exclusive power of removal by the President was defended as a true exposition of the text of the Constitution. It was maintained that there are certain causes for which persons ought to be removed from office without being guilty of treason, bribery, or malfeasance, and that the nature of things demands that it should be so. "Suppose," it was said, "a man becomes insane by the visitation of God, and is likely to ruin our affairs: are the hands of Government to be confined from warding off the evil? Suppose a person in office not possessing the talents he was judged to have at the time of the appointment, is the error not to be corrected; suppose he acquire vicious habits and incurable indolence, or totally neglect the duties of his office, which shall work mischief to the public welfare, is there no way to arrest the threatened danger? Suppose he become odious and unpopular by reason of the measures he pursues, and this he may do without committing any positive offense against the law, must he preserve his office in despite of the popular will? Suppose him grasping for his own aggrandizement and the elevation of his connections by every means short of the treason defined by the Constitution, hurrying your affairs to the precipice of destruction, endangering your domestic tranquility, plundering you of the means of defense, alienating the affections of your allies, and promoting the spirit of discord, must the tardy, tedious, desultory road, by way of impeachment, be traveled to overtake the man who, barely confining himself within the letter of the law, is employed in drawing off the vital principle of the Government?" The nature of things, the great objects of society, the express objects of the Constitution itself require that this thing should be otherwise. To unite the Senate with the President "in the exercise of the power" it was said, "would involve us" in the most serious difficulty. "Suppose a discovery of any of these events should take place when the Senate is not in session, how is the remedy to be applied? The evil could be avoided in no other way than by the Senate sitting always." In regard to the danger of the power being abused if exercised by one man, it was said "that the danger is as great with respect to the Senate, who are assembled from various parts of the continent, with different impressions and opinions;" that such a body is more likely to misuse the power of removal than the man whom the united voice of America calls to the presidential chair. As the nature of Government requires the power of removal, it was maintained "that it should be exercised in this way by the hand capable of exerting itself with effect, and the power must be conferred on the President by the Constitution as the executive officer of the Government." Mr. Madison, whose adverse opinion in the Federalist had been relied upon by those who denied the exclusive power, now participated in the debate. He declared that he had reviewed his former opinions, and he summed up the whole case as follows:

"The Constitution affirms that the executive power is vested in the President. Are there exceptions to this proposition? Yes, there are. The Constitution says that in appointing to office the Senate shall be associated with the President, unless in the case of inferior officers, when the law shall otherwise direct. Have we (that is, Congress) a right to extend this exception? I believe not. If the Constitution has invested all executive power in the President, I return to assert that the Legislature has no right to diminish or modify his executive authority. The question now resolves itself into this: is the power of displacing an executive power? I conceive that if any power whatever is in the Executive, it is in the power of appointing, overseeing, and controlling those who execute the laws. If the Constitution had not qualified the power of the President in appointing to office by associating the Senate with him in that business, would it not be clear that he would have the right by virtue of his executive power to make such appointment? Should we be authorized, in defiance of that clause in the Constitution—the executive power shall be vested in the President—to unite the Senate with the President in the appointment to office? I conceive not. It is admitted that we should not be authorized to do this, I think it may be disputed whether we have a right to associate them in removing persons from office, the one power being as much of an executive nature as the other; and the first is authorized by being excepted out of the general rule established by the Constitution in these words: 'The executive power shall be vested in the President.'"

The question thus ably and exhaustively argued was decided by the House of Representatives, by a vote of 34 to 20, in favor of the principle that the executive power of removal is vested by the Constitution in the Executive, and in the Senate by the casting vote of the Vice President. The question has often been raised in subsequent times of high excitement, and the practice of the Government has nevertheless conformed in all cases to the decision thus early made.

The question was revived during the Administration of President Jackson, who made, as is well recollected, a very large number of removals, which were made an occasion of close and rigorous scrutiny and remonstrance. The subject was long and earnestly debated in the Senate, and the early construction of the Constitution was nevertheless freely accepted as binding and conclusive upon Congress.

The question came before the Supreme Court of the United States in January, 1839, ex parte Hennen. It was declared by the court on that occasion that the power of removal from office was a subject much disputed, and upon which a great diversity of opinion was entertained in the early history of the Government. This related, however, to the power of the President to remove officers appointed with the concurrence of the Senate, and the great question was whether the removal was to be by the President alone or with the concurrence of the Senate, both constituting the appointing power. No one denied the power of the President and Senate jointly to remove where the tenure of the office was not fixed by the Constitution, which was a full recognition of the principle that the power of removal was incident to the power of appointment; but it was very early adopted as a practical construction of the Constitution that this power was vested in the President alone, and such would appear to have been the legislative construction of the Constitution, for in the organization of the three great Departments of State, War, and Treasury, in 1789, provision was made for the appointment of a subordinate officer by the head of the Department, who should have charge of the records, books, and papers appertaining to the office when the head of the Department should be removed from office by the President of the United States. When the Navy Department was established, in the year 1798, provision was made for the charge and custody of the books, records, and documents of the Department in case of vacancy in the office of Secretary, by removal or otherwise. It is not here said "by removal of the President," as is done with respect to the heads of the other Departments; yet there can be no doubt that he holds his office with the same tenure as the other Secretaries, and is removable by the President. The change of phraseology arose probably from its having become the settled and well-understood construction of the Constitution that the power of removal was vested in the President alone in such cases, although the appointment of the officer is by the President and Senate. (13 Peters, page 139.)

Our most distinguished and accepted commentators upon the Constitution concur in the construction thus early given by Congress, and thus sanctioned by the Supreme Court. After a full analysis of the congressional debate to which I have referred, Mr. Justice Story comes to this conclusion:

"After a most animated discussion, the vote finally taken in the House of Representatives was affirmative of the power of removal in the President without any cooperation of the Senate, by the vote of 34 members against 20. In the Senate the clause in the bill affirming the power was carried by the casting vote of the Vice President. That the final decision of this question so made was greatly influenced by the exalted character of the President then in office was asserted at the time, and has always been believed; yet the doctrine was opposed as well as supported by the highest talent and patriotism of the country. The public have acquiesced in this decision, and it constitutes perhaps the most extraordinary case in the history of the Government of a power conferred by implication on the Executive by the assent of a bare majority of Congress, which has not been questioned on many other occasions."

The commentator adds:

"Nor is this general acquiescence and silence without a satisfactory explanation."

Chancellor Kent's remarks on the subject are as follows:

"On the first organization of the Government it was made a question whether the power of removal in case of officers appointed to hold at pleasure resided nowhere but in the body which appointed, and, of course, whether the consent of the Senate was not requisite to remove. This was the construction given to the Constitution while it was pending for ratification before the State conventions by the author of the Federalist. But the construction which was given to the Constitution by Congress, after great consideration and discussion, was different. The words of the act (establishing the Treasury Department) are: 'And whenever the same shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, or in any other case of vacancy in the office, the assistant shall act.' This amounted to a legislative construction of the Constitution, and it has ever since been acquiesced in and acted upon as decisive authority in the case. It applies equally to every other officer of the Government appointed by the President, whose term of duration is not specially declared. It is supported by the weighty reason that the subordinate officers in the executive department ought to hold at the pleasure of the head of the Department, because he is invested generally with the executive authority, and the participation in that authority by the Senate was an exception to a general principle and ought to be taken strictly. The President is the great responsible officer for the faithful execution of the law, and the power of removal was incidental to that duty, and might often be requisite to fulfill it."

Thus has the important question presented by this bill been settled, in the language of the late Daniel Webster, (who, while dissenting from it, admitted that it was settled,) by construction, settled by precedent, settled by the practice of the Government, and settled by statute. The events of the last war furnished a practical confirmation of the wisdom of the Constitution as it has hitherto been maintained in many of its parts, including that which is now the subject of consideration. When the war broke out rebel enemies, traitors, abettors, and sympathizers were found in every department of the Government, as well in the civil service as in the land and naval military service. They were found in Congress and among the keepers of the Capitol, in foreign missions, in each and all of the Executive Departments, in the judicial service, in the Post Office, and among the agents for conducting Indian affairs; and upon probable suspicion they were promptly displaced by my predecessor, so far as they held their offices under executive authority, and their duties were confided to new and loyal successors. No complaints against that power or doubts of its wisdom were entertained in any quarter. I sincerely trust and believe that no such civil war is likely to occur again. I cannot doubt, however, that in whatever form and on whatever occasion sedition can rise, an effort to hinder or embarrass or defeat the legitimate action of this Government, whether by preventing the collection of revenue, or disturbing the public peace, or separating the States, or betraying the country to a foreign enemy, the power of removal from office by the Executive, as it has heretofore existed and been practiced, will be found indispensable.

Under these circumstances, as a depository of the executive authority of the nation, I do not feel at liberty to unite with Congress in reversing it by giving my approval of the bill.

At the early day when this question was settled, and indeed at the several periods when it has subsequently been agitated, the success of the Constitution of the United States as a new and peculiar system of free representative government was held doubtful in other countries, and was even a subject of patriotic apprehension among the American people themselves. A trial of nearly eighty years, through the vicissitudes of foreign conflicts and of civil war, is confidently regarded as having extinguished all such doubts and apprehensions for the future. During that eighty years the people of the United States have enjoyed a measure of security, peace, prosperity, and happiness never surpassed by any nation. It cannot be doubted that the triumphant success of the Constitution is due to the wonderful wisdom with which the functions of government were distributed between the three principal departments—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial—and to the fidelity with which each has confined itself or been confined by the general voice of the nation within its peculiar and proper sphere.

While a just, proper, and watchful jealousy of executive power constantly prevails, as it ought ever to prevail, yet it is equally true that an efficient Executive, capable, in the language of the oath prescribed to the President, of executing the laws within the sphere of executive action, of preserving, protecting, and defending the Constitution of the United States, is an indispensable security for tranquility at home, and peace, honor, and safety abroad. Governments have been erected in many countries upon our model. If one or many of them have thus far failed in fully securing to their people the benefits which we have derived from our system, it may be confidently asserted that their misfortune has resulted from their unfortunate failure to maintain the integrity of each of the three great departments while preserving harmony among them all.

Having at an early period accepted the Constitution in regard to the executive office in the sense in which it was interpreted with the concurrence of its founders, I have found no sufficient grounds in the arguments now opposed to that construction or in any assumed necessity of the times for changing those opinions. For these reasons I return the bill to the Senate, in which House it originated, for the further consideration of Congress, which the Constitution prescribes. Inasmuch as the several parts of the bill which I have not considered are matters chiefly of detail, and are based altogether upon the theory of the Constitution from which I am obliged to dissent, I have not thought it necessary to examine them with a view to make them an occasion of distinct and special objections. Experience, I think, has shown that it is the easiest, as it is also the most attractive, of studies to frame constitutions for the self-government of free States and nations.

But I think experience has equally shown that it is the most difficult of all political labors to preserve and maintain such free constitutions of self-government when once happily established. I know no other way in which they can be preserved and maintained except by a constant adherence to them through the various vicissitudes of national existence, with such adaptations as may become necessary, always to be effected, however, through the agencies and in the forms prescribed in the original constitutions themselves. Whenever administration fails or seems to fail in securing any of the great ends for which republican government is established, the proper course seems to be to renew the original spirit and forms of the Constitution itself.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, March 2, 1867.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill returned by the President is, by the provision of the Constitution, now reconsidered, and the question before the Senate is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 35, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Connors, Cragin, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Hendricks, Johnson, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, and Saulsbury—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Creswell, Guthrie, Howe, McDougall, and Riddle—6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two thirds of the Senators present having voted for the passage of the bill, the bill is passed notwithstanding the objections of the President.

On motion by Mr. EDMUNDS, it was Ordered, That the message of the President of the United States returning the bill (S. No. 453) regulating the tenure of certain civil offices to the Senate with his objections be printed.

RECESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that at five o'clock to-day the Senate take a recess till half past seven p. m.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN SEDGEWICK.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 300, which I reported this morning from the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 300) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of John Sedgewick, collector of internal revenue for the third collection district of California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is an authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of John Sedgewick, collector of internal revenue for the third collection district of California, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, as to him may appear just and equitable.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the difficulty in the settlement of these accounts?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I have before me a letter from Mr. Rollins, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who says legislation on this subject is necessary, and he explains the grounds of action and the nature of the case. The expenses there have exceeded the amount fixed by law, and it is necessary to legislate to enable the expenses to be paid above that sum.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will send that short letter up to the desk, that the Secretary may read it, and then Senators will understand the case.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. If it is desired by any Senator the letter can be read; but I understand there is no objection to the resolution.

Mr. CONNESS. If there is no objection, very well.

Mr. GRIMES. I have no objection to the resolution. I only have this to say, that it is a phraseology which has never been recognized until recently to allow a Secretary to settle any claim upon such terms of justice and equity as he may deem proper. It may be all right in this individual instance; and as it came from the Committee on Finance, I suppose we may accept it as authoritative, and as to be the settled practice in the future.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I agree entirely with the Senator from Iowa that this is a new species of legislation. We have always put some limit on the discretion of the heads of Departments by declaring that the allowance should not exceed a certain sum, or that it should not exceed the amount allowed by law, or something of that kind. This case may be a very meritorious one, and the party may be entitled to relief; but I think I have never known a bill to pass that left it entirely to the discretion of any of the Departments to do what they pleased without any limit.

Mr. CONNESS. It has been done again and again.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It ought not to be done.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The Senator from Illinois is not exactly aware of how this matter stands. I stated that I had before me a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue suggesting that legislation on this subject was necessary, and mentioning the facts of the case. I offered to send the letter to the table to be read if any Senator desired to hear it; but it was not desired, and I therefore did not consume time by asking for its reading. I can still send the letter to the table if any Senator desires it; but there is no doubt that the case is one where relief is proper.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MURDER OF UNION SOLDIERS.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution of the 23d of February, to print five thousand extra copies of the report of the select Committee of the House of Representatives to Investigate the Murder of certain Union Soldiers in the South, reported it without amendment; and the resolution was agreed to.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the letter of the Commissioner of Patents, communicating his annual report for the year 1866, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate four thousand copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of the Patent Office for the year 1866.

STATE CONSTITUTIONS.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution of the 13th of December last, for the publication of a volume containing colonial charters and the several State constitutions of each of the United States, reported it with amendments.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, and the amendments reported by the committee were agreed to, so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing cause to be prepared for publication a volume containing the colonial charters and the various State constitutions of each State of the United States, together with all amendments thereto at any time in force, arranging the same in chronological order for each State, with suitable indexes; and that it be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to inquire of the chairman what is the necessity of printing this book?

Mr. ANTHONY. The resolution was introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin; and on consulting a number of Senators I found that there was a strong desire to have it. The cost will be about six hundred dollars. If there is any particular objection to it I shall not press it.

Mr. GRIMES. Are we to publish colonial history?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it is a compilation of the constitutions of all the States, with the changes made. It was thought very desirable to have it for some purposes with regard to reconstruction.

Mr. GRIMES. We shall run immediately into competition with some of the book publishers; for I have a copy of a book containing the constitutions of all the States that is not furnished to me by the Government, and anybody can get it by paying $1 50 for the volume.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The following message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk:

Mr. President, the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. No. 1143) entitled "An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States," with his objections thereto, the House proceeded in conformity with the Constitution to reconsider the said bill, and has—

Resolved, That it do pass, two thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The House of Representatives has passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 302) for the relief of soldiers who are entitled to artificial limbs, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate. It has agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House (H. R. No. 1126) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 276) to establish a Department of Education; and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. At five o'clock the doors were reopened, and the Senate took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 302) for the relief of soldiers who are entitled to artificial limbs was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

W. W. POTTER.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 1095.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1095) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a certain draft to W. W. Potter, late acting military agent of the State of New York, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be paid to W. W. Potter, late acting military agent of the State of New York, the sum of $200 in lieu of draft No. 7828 on war warrant No. 9861, dated September 29, 1866, payable to the order of Andrew Smith, for the sum of $200, he having paid to Smith the said sum of $200 therefor.

The Committee on Claims proposed to amend the bill by adding to it the following proviso:

Provided, That before payment of said warrant the said W. W. Potter shall execute a bond of indemnity to the United States with sufficient sureties against the claim of the payee in said warrant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the veto message of the reconstruction bill, or the bill entitled "An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States."

Mr. CONNESS. It will be seen that the Senate is not yet full, and I hope we shall wait a little while before we take that up, and give an hour to the chairman of the Committee on Claims. It is the best opportunity we shall have for that business, and by that time the Senate will be full, and we can go on with the bill referred to by the Senator from Oregon; and I hope that will be done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will take half an hour or perhaps an hour to read the veto message. I suppose the Clerk can proceed with the reading of the message, and by the time it is completed the members, I have no doubt, will be in their seats; and after that measure is disposed of I do not see any reason why the bills of the Senator from Wisconsin should not be taken up.

Mr. HOWE. The reason why my bills cannot be taken up and considered is because somebody else has got some other bill to move. The Senator from New York—I am obliged to him for his assistance—has already, without any objection on the part of any one, had one bill on my Calendar passed. If some other Senator who is particularly interested would move to take up the bills that he is interested in I could get them through and without any trouble myself.

Mr. DAVIS. I will—

Mr. HOWE. In one moment I will give way to the Senator from Kentucky. I move once more that the message lie upon the table, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 483.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message is not yet taken from the table. The motion is to take that up, with the bill which it accompanies. It is not yet taken up.

Mr. HOWE. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 483.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Another motion is now pending.

Mr. HOWE. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the message of the President of the United States returning, with his objections, the bill to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States.

Mr. HOWE. Then, addressing myself to the Senate upon that motion, I have to say most respectfully that I hope the Senate will not now agree to take up that message.

Mr. WILLEY. West Virginia, I believe, has no bill on the Calendar of claims whatever; but Senators who represent constituents that have are constantly soliciting me to bring up their bills, those of them that I have had the honor to report. Now, if gentlemen will let us have an hour for that business we shall do it. If not, I shall consider myself absolved from all obligations to attend to it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am anxious for an opportunity to vote to give the Senator from Wisconsin an hour for his bills. I think it will be a saving of time to give it to him, and I move that he have an hour to proceed with the business of the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Another motion is pending, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the message of the President returning, with his objections, the bill to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to lay it aside for one hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not yet taken up. The motion is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the message accompanying that bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope we shall not take it up for an hour yet.

The motion was not agreed to.

NORMAN J. HALL.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate now take up for consideration House bill No. 483.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 483) for the relief of Norman J. Hall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. In the settlement of the accounts with the Treasury of Lieutenant Norman J. Hall, first United States artillery, acting assistant commissary of subsistence and assistant quartermaster at Fort Sumter, South Carolina, the bill provides that there shall be allowed to him the sum of $965 72, on account of the loss of money and of vouchers for money paid, the said amount being public funds and vouchers in his hands, and destroyed by the blowing up of a magazine at Fort Sumter, South Carolina, during the bombardment of that fort by the rebels in the month of April, 1861, the loss being without neglect or fault on his part.

The bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. HOWE. The committee in this case make an adverse report. The reason why the committee reported against this bill is because an act was passed at the last session authorizing all disbursing officers to go to the Court of Claims and have the amount of their losses proved there and certified to the Treasury Department. I move the indefinite postponement of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES M. BISHOP.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, the bill (H. R. No. 916) for the relief of James M. Bishop, who claims $236, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to ascertain and allow to James M. Bishop, of Quincy, Illinois, for services in March and April, 1863, to finish the work left undone on the assessment lists in the fourth district of Illinois, by Mr. Sutkin, an assistant assessor, at his decease, such a sum, not exceeding $236, as shall be equal to that now fixed by law to be paid assistant assessors for such service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend the title by striking out the words "who claims $236." It is entirely unusual to put such a statement in the title of a bill.

The motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH F. CHIPMAN.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, the bill (H. R. No. 1168) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth F. Chipman, widow of Major Charles Chipman, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Elizabeth F. Chipman, widow of Major Charles Chipman, deceased, late of the twenty-ninth regiment Massachusetts volunteers, $125, in payment for a horse lost by her husband in the military service on the 18th of August, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES J. HUDNALL.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) for the relief of James J. Hudnall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury, in the settlement of the accounts of James J. Hudnall, collector of the sixth congressional district of the State of Kentucky, to credit him with the sum of $1,900, in full for money lost by him in the town of Petersburg, Boone county, in the State of Kentucky, on the night of the 16th of August, 1866.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. HOWE. There is a report of the House committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What are the circumstances?

Mr. HOWE. The safe was broken open in the storehouse where the funds were deposited.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is the case well proved?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will take the chairman's word for it.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALMANSON EATON.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of Almanson Eaton, receiver of public money for the land office at Stevens's Point, Wisconsin, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury and the proper accounting officers in their Departments, in settling the accounts of Almanson Eaton, receiver of public moneys for the district of lands subject to sale at Stevens's Point, Wisconsin, shall, upon satisfactory evidence being made and filed, allow and credit to him the sum of $2,092 72, public money, lost and destroyed by fire in the burning of the offices, books, papers, and the public money of the register and receiver at Stevens's Point, Wisconsin, on the night of the 29th of December, 1865.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY RUDD.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, the bill (H. R. No. 825) for the relief of Henry Rudd, of Henry county, Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Henry Rudd, of Henry county, Iowa, the sum of $9,150, in full for all losses and compensation to Rudd for horses purchased and delivered under a contract with the Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CITY OF WASHINGTON.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, the bill (H. R. No. 710) to pay and discharge certain debts and expenditures to the corporation of the city of Washington was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the proper authorities of the city of Washington the sum of $31,971 34, in full for all claims which the city of Washington now has against the United States on account of moneys expended in improving the streets, avenues, alleys, public grounds, in the city of Washington, or for repairing any of the bridges crossing the Potomac river, prior to May 5, 1864; but before paying this sum, the mayor of the city of Washington is to present to the Commissioner of Public Buildings an account embracing each item of charge which the city has made against the United States for expenditures herein referred to, which account the Commissioner is to certify to be correct and just. No money is to be paid until after a full examination of all the items by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, and proof under oath that the work was done at fair and reasonable prices; and the city of Washington is to file with the Treasurer of the United States a receipt to the effect that the city has received the amount to be paid by virtue of the act in full of all claims against the Government for the grading, paving, and constructing sewers in the streets of the city to the date of May 23, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUGH LEDDY.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, the bill (H. R. No. 346) for the relief of Hugh Leddy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Hugh Leddy of $682 40, in full for liquors wrongfully seized by order of a provost marshal on the 2d of December, 1862, and appropriated to the use of the Government through the medical department.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GIBBONS AND KELLEY.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 36) referring the papers of F. A. Gibbons and F. X. Kelley to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Committee on Claims proposed to amend the resolution by striking out in line four the word "for" and inserting "and the court shall be authorized, if of opinion that the ends of justice will be subserved thereby, to grant," and after "petition," in line seven, to insert "without prejudice to the claim by reason of the former decision of said court;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the papers in the case of Francis A. Gibbons and F. X. Kelley be referred back to the Court of Claims, and the court shall be authorized, if of opinion that the ends of justice will be subserved thereby, to grant a rehearing of the case on an amended petition, without prejudice to the claim by reason of the former decision of said court.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

ERNEST F. KLEINSCHMIDT.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, the bill (H. R. No. 966) for the relief of Ernest F. Kleinschmidt, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. Its purpose is to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Ernest F. Kleinschmidt, of Cincinnati, Ohio, the sum of $1,250, to reimburse him for the same sum paid by him to the collector of internal revenue for the second district in Ohio for four city lots in Cincinnati, which lots were sold by the collector to the said Ernest F. Kleinschmidt for the payment of internal revenue tax, and which tax was subsequently declared by the superior court of Cincinnati to have been illegally assessed, and the sale of the lots to Kleinschmidt held to have been null and void.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty-one, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, thirty-nine, forty, forty-one, forty-two, forty-six, forty-seven, forty-nine, fifty-one, fifty-two, fifty-three, fifty-four, fifty-five, fifty-six, fifty-seven, fifty-eight, fifty-nine, sixty, sixty-one, sixty-two, sixty-three, sixty-four, sixty-five, sixty-six, sixty-seven, sixty-eight, sixty-nine, seventy, seventy-one, seventy-two, seventy-three, seventy-four, seventy-five, seventy-six, seventy-seven, seventy-eight, seventy-nine, eighty, eighty-one, eighty-six, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered fifteen, sixteen, thirty-two, forty-eight, and eighty-four.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: in line three, after the word "two," insert the words "and one half."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the twenty-first amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: add the words "on leather of all descriptions, and goat, deer, calf, kid, sheep, horse, hog, and dog skins, tanned, or partially tanned, curried, finished, or in the rough, two and a half per cent. ad valorem."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the thirtieth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: add the following: "Provided, That fractional parts of barrels containing more than one quarter and no more than one half shall be accounted one half, and pay tax as such until June 1, 1867."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the forty-third amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: insert in lieu of the words stricken out the word "scythes."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the forty-fourth and forty-fifth amendments of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out the paragraph as amended, and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fiftieth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendments: in line three of said Senate amendment strike out the words "fifty cents" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one dollar," and in line eleven of said amendment strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the eighty-second amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: in line two of said amendment, after the word "sell," insert the words "give away or otherwise dispose of."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the eighty-third amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: after the word "foreign" insert the words "or domestic."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the eighty-fifth amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: in line two of said amendment, after the word "act" insert the words "and all acts and parts of acts imposing any tax upon advertisements or the gross receipts of toll roads."

JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
J. K. MOORHEAD,
JOHN HOGAN.
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senate will observe that the House of Representatives have receded from their disagreement to almost all the amendments proposed by the Senate, in fact to all the amendments except those numbered fifteen, sixteen, thirty-two, forty-eight, and eighty-four, from which the Senate recede. These are not very important, and I can state them readily.

The fifteenth amendment was to strike out the words "not including sirup or molasses." The sixteenth was to strike out "two" and insert "one and a half." We reduced the tax from two per cent. to one and a half per cent. We recede from that, leaving the tax on sugar two per cent. The thirty-second amendment we proposed was in regard to boot and shoe strings and gloves of leather, or skins, which we put on the free list. We now recede from that because we have struck out leather from the free list, and we have now transferred leather to the two and half per cent. schedule instead of the five per cent. It is a compromise. We put leather two and a half per cent. less, and strike out these other articles from the free list. The forty-eighth amendment was to strike out wire-cloth, which was put in because of another clause from which the House has receded, rendering it unnecessary to put that on the free list. The eighty-fourth amendment is a section that was put in here in regard to the storing and bonding of coal oil. It was thought to be unnecessary.

The only remaining amendments are those which have been amended by the committee of conference. The first of these is the first amendment of the Senate, which was with regard to the tax on cotton. We came very near disagreeing upon that, but finally compromised between two and three, making the tax two and a half cents a pound. The twenty-first amendment is in regard to leather, the conclusion on which I have just stated. The thirtieth amendment is a provision which was made on the motion of the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] with regard to fractional parts of barrels. The amendment of the committee of conference simply postpones the operation of that until the 1st of June. Then the House recede from their disagreement to the forty-third amendment of the Senate, with an amendment, inserting the word "scythes" in lieu of the words stricken out. Then the House recede from their disagreement to the forty-fourth and forty-fifth amendments of the Senate, and agree to them with an amendment, striking out the whole paragraph as amended. That was with regard to the products of hand-looms. The House recede from their disagreement to the fiftieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, striking out in line three of the Senate amendment the words "fifty cents" and inserting in lieu thereof "one dollar." That is a compromise also. In regard to the eighty-second amendment, the House recede from their disagreement with an amendment, inserting after the word "sell" the words "give away or otherwise dispose of," to render it more certain in regard to certain cigar-boxes. The House recede from their disagreement to the eighty-third amendment of the Senate, with an amendment, inserting the words "or domestic" after "foreign." This is in reference to tonnage, the duty on foreign and domestic commerce. Then the House recede from their disagreement to the eighty-fifth amendment, which is an amendment to the repealing clause, so as to free advertisements and toll-roads.

The report was concurred in.

JOHN R. BECKLEY.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and pay the claim of John R. Beckley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. Divers horses, the property of John R. Beckley, mail contractor on mail routes No. 9634 and No. 9619, in the State of Kentucky, were during the late war captured by the rebel forces and guerrillas, and lost to the contractor while endeavoring to carry out his contract with the United States; the resolution proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to have the claim of John R. Beckley audited, and to pay him the amount which shall be found due for the loss of property in carrying the mail, not exceeding the sum of $5,950; but it must appear that the property was lost without any fault or negligence on the part of Beckley.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INDEFINITELY POSTPONED.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, the bill (H. R. No. 531) for the relief of the legal representatives of Major John A. Whital, late paymaster in the United States Army, deceased, on account of lost or stolen vouchers, and the bill (H. R. No. 824) for the relief of Edward Blanchard, were indefinitely postponed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, it was

Ordered, That the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Joshua Hill, and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, it was

Ordered, That the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Minerva Lewis, and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw her petition and papers.

FORT RILEY RESERVATION.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House resolution No. 267, for the reduction of the military reservation of Fort Riley, and to grant land for bridge purposes to the State of Kansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. That will give rise to debate, and I think we had better proceed with the veto message.

Mr. POMEROY. I think it will give rise to no debate. It has been read and considered, and the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The cases which have been pressing upon the Senate have been passed upon, and I now move to postpone all prior orders, and take up the message of the President vetoing the reconstruction bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas, to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution named by him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope it will not be taken up at this time; it will lead to discussion.

Mr. POMEROY. It was considered by the Senate the other day, and laid aside at the close of the morning hour. I simply want a vote on it.

The motion was not agreed to.

EXTENSION OF PATENTS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia, to allow him to call up another private bill.

Mr. WILLEY. I move to take up House bill No. 1059, which has been reported from the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1059) for the relief of Sylvanus Sawyer and William E. Ward was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Commissioner of Patents, upon due application made to him, to extend the patents of Sylvanus Sawyer, for an improvement in machinery for cutting ratan, dated June 24, 1851, and which expired on the 24th of June, 1865, and the patent of William E. Ward, for an improved machine for making rivets and screw blanks, dated December 28, 1852, and which expired on the 28th of December, 1866, upon the same evidence and principles as if applications had been made to him by these patentees respectively in due time prior to the expiration of the patents. In case the Commissioner on due inquiry shall extend such patents, or either of them, all persons who shall have made use of the inventions or machines, or either of them, between the periods of the expiration of the patents and their extension by the Commissioner, shall be relieved from all liability for that use.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTHERN STATES—VETO.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the message of the President of the United States, returning to the House of Representatives, with his objections, the bill (H. R. No. 1134) to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message of the President of the United States will be read.

The Secretary read the message, as follows:
To the House of Representatives:

I have examined the bill "to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States" with the care and anxiety which its transcendent importance is calculated to awaken. I am unable to give it my assent for reasons so grave that I hope a statement of them may have some influence on the minds of the patriotic and enlightened men with whom the decision must ultimately rest.

The bill places all the people of the ten States therein named under the absolute domination of military rulers; and the preamble undertakes to give the reason upon which the measure is based, and the ground upon which it is justified. It declares that there exist in those States no legal governments and no adequate protection for life or property, and asserts the necessity of enforcing peace and good order within their limits. Is this true as matter of fact?

It is not denied that the States in question have each of them an actual government, with all the powers, executive, judicial, and legislative, which properly belong to a free State. They are organized like the other States of the Union, and like them they make, administer, and execute the laws which concern their domestic affairs. An existing de facto government, exercising such functions as these, is itself the law of the State upon all matters within its jurisdiction. To pronounce the supreme law-making power of an established State illegal is to say that law itself is unlawful.

The provisions which these governments have made for the preservation of order, the suppression of crime, and the redress of private injuries, are in substance and principle the same as those which prevail in the northern States and in other civilized countries. They certainly have not succeeded in preventing the commission of all crime, nor has this been accomplished anywhere in the world. There, as well as elsewhere, offenders sometimes escape for want of vigorous prosecution, and occasionally, perhaps, by the inefficiency of courts or the prejudice of jurors. It is undoubtedly true that these evils have been much increased and aggravated, North and South, by the demoralizing influences of civil war and by the rancorous passions which the contest has engendered. But that these people are maintaining local governments for themselves which habitually defeat the object of all government, and render their own lives and property insecure, is in itself utterly improbable, and the averment of the bill to that effect is not supported by any evidence which has come to my knowledge. All the information I have on the subject convinces me that the masses of the southern people and those who control their public acts, while they entertain diverse opinions on questions of Federal policy, are completely united in the effort to reorganize their society on the basis of peace, and to restore their mutual prosperity as rapidly and as completely as their circumstances will permit.

The bill, however, would seem to show upon its face that the establishment of peace and good order is not its real object. The fifth section declares that the preceding sections shall cease to operate in any State where certain events shall have happened. These events are, first, the selection of delegates to a State convention by an election at which negroes shall be allowed to vote; second, the formation of a State constitution by the convention so chosen; third, the insertion into the State constitution of a provision which will secure the right of voting at all elections to negroes and to such white men as may not be disfranchised for rebellion or felony; fourth, the submission of the constitution for ratification to negroes and white men not disfranchised, and its actual ratification by their vote; fifth, the submission of the State constitution to Congress for examination and approval, and the actual approval of it by that body; sixth, the adoption of a certain amendment to the Federal Constitution by a vote of the Legislature elected under the new constitution; seventh, the adoption of said amendment by a sufficient number of other States to make it a part of the Constitution of the United States. All these conditions must be fulfilled before the people of any of these States can be relieved from the bondage of military domination; but when they are fulfilled, then immediately the pains and penalties of the bill are to cease, no matter whether there be peace and order or not, and without any reference to the security of life or property. The excuse given for the bill in the preamble is admitted by the bill itself not to be real. The military rule which it establishes is plainly to be used, not for any purpose of order or for the prevention of crime, but solely as a means of coercing the people into the adoption of principles and measures to which it is known that they are opposed, and upon which they have an undeniable right to exercise their own judgment.

I submit to Congress whether this measure is not, in its whole character, scope, and object, without precedent and without authority, in palpable conflict with the plainest provisions of the Constitution, and utterly destructive to those great principles of liberty and humanity for which our ancestors on both sides of the Atlantic have shed so much blood and expended so much treasure.

The ten States named in the bill are divided into five districts. For each district an officer of the Army, not below the rank of brigadier general, is to be appointed to rule over the people; and he is to be supported with an efficient military force to enable him to perform his duties and enforce his authority. Those duties and that authority, as defined by the third section of the bill, are "to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace or criminals." The power thus given to the commanding officer over all the people of each district is that of an absolute monarch. His mere will is to take the place of all law. The law of the States is now the only rule applicable to the subjects placed under his control, and that is completely displaced by the clause which declares all interference of State authority to be null and void. He alone is permitted to determine what are rights of person or property, and he may protect them in such way as in his discretion may seem proper. It places at his free disposal all the lands and goods in his district, and he may distribute them without let or hindrance to whom he pleases. Being bound by no State law, and there being no other law to regulate the subject, he may make a criminal code of his own; and he can make it as bloody as any recorded in history, or he can reserve the privilege of acting upon the impulse of his private passions in each case that arises. He is bound by no rules of evidence; there is indeed no provision by which he is authorized or required to take any evidence at all. Everything is a crime which he chooses to call so, and all persons are condemned whom he pronounces to be guilty. He is not bound to keep any record or make any report of his proceedings. He may arrest his victims wherever he finds them, without warrant, accusation, or proof of probable cause. If he gives them a trial before he inflicts the punishment he gives it of his grace and mercy, not because he is commanded so to do.

To a casual reader of the bill it might seem that some kind of trial was secured by it to persons accused of crime; but such is not the case. The officer "may allow local civil tribunals to try offenders," but of course this does not require that he shall do so. If any State or Federal court presumes to exercise its legal jurisdiction by the trial of a malefactor without his special permission, he can break it up, and punish the judges and jurors as being themselves malefactors. He can save his friends from justice, and despoil his enemies contrary to justice.

It is also provided that "he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals;" but this power he is not commanded to exercise. It is merely permissive, and is to be used only "when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders." Even if the sentence of a commission were made a prerequisite to the punishment of a party, it would be scarcely the slightest check upon the officer, who has authority to organize it as he pleases, prescribe its mode of proceeding, appoint its members from among his own subordinates, and revise all its decisions. Instead of mitigating the harshness of his single rule, such a tribunal would be used much more probably to divide the responsibility of making it more cruel and unjust.

Several provisions, dictated by the humanity of Congress, have been inserted in the bill, apparently to restrain the power of the commanding officer; but it seems to me that they are of no avail for that purpose. The fourth section provides: first, that trials shall not be unnecessarily delayed; but I think I have shown that the power is given to punish without trial, and if so, this provision is practically inoperative. Second, cruel or unusual punishment is not to be inflicted; but who is to decide what is cruel and what is unusual? The words have acquired a legal meaning by long use in the courts. Can it be expected that military officers will understand or follow a rule expressed in language so purely technical, and not pertaining in the least degree to their profession? If not, then each officer may define cruelty according to his own temper, and if it is not usual, he will make it usual. Corporal punishment, imprisonment, the gag, the ball and chain, and the almost insupportable ble forms of torture invented for military punishment lie within the range of choice. Third, the sentence of a commission is not to be executed without being approved by the commander, if it affects life or liberty, and a sentence of death must be approved by the President. This applies to cases in which there has been a trial and sentence. I take it to be clear, under this bill, that the military commander may condemn to death without even the form of a trial by a military commission, so that the life of the condemned may depend upon the will of two men instead of one.

It is plain that the authority here given to the military officer amounts to absolute despotism. But, to make it still more unendurable, the bill provides that it may be delegated to as many subordinates as he chooses to appoint; for it declares that he shall "punish or cause to be punished." Such a power has not been wielded by any monarch in England for more than five hundred years. In all that time no people who speak the English language have borne such servitude. It reduces the whole population of the ten States—all persons, of every color, sex, and condition, and every stranger within their limits—to the most abject and degrading slavery. No master ever had a control so absolute over his slave as this bill gives to the military officers over both white and colored persons.

It may be answered to this that the officers of the Army are too magnanimous, just, and humane to oppress and trample upon a subjugated people. I do not doubt that Army officers are as well entitled to this kind of confidence as any other class of men. But the history of the world has been written in vain if it does not teach us that unrestrained authority can never be safely trusted in human hands. It is almost sure to be more or less abused under any circumstances, and it has always resulted in gross tyranny where the rulers who exercise it are strangers to their subjects, and come among them as the representatives of a distant Power, and more especially when the Power that sends them is unfriendly. Governments closely resembling that here proposed have been fairly tried in Hungary and Poland, and the suffering endured by those people roused the sympathies of the entire world. It was tried in Ireland, and, though tempered at first by principles of English law, it gave birth to cruelties so atrocious that they are never recounted without just indignation. The French Convention armed its deputies with this power, and sent them to the southern departments of the republic. The massacres, murders, and other atrocities which they committed show what the passions of the ablest men in the most civilized society will tempt them to do when wholly unrestrained by law.

The men of our race in every age have struggled to tie up the hands of their Governments and keep them within the law; because their own experience of all mankind taught them that rulers could not be relied on to concede those rights which they were not legally bound to respect. The head of a great empire has sometimes governed it with a mild and paternal sway; but the kindness of an irresponsible deputy never yields what the law does not extort from him. Between such a master and the people subjected to his domination there can be nothing but enmity; he punishes them if they resist his authority; and if they submit to it he hates them for their servility.

I come now to a question which is, if possible, still more important. Have we the power to establish and carry into execution a measure like this? I answer, certainly not, if we derive our authority from the Constitution, and if we are bound by the limitations which it imposes. This proposition is perfectly clear: that no branch of the Federal Government, executive, legislative, or judicial, can have any just powers except those which it derives through and exercises under the organic law of the Union. Outside of the Constitution we have no legal authority more than private citizens, and within it we have only so much as that instrument gives us. This broad principle limits all our functions and applies to all subjects. It protects not only the citizens of States which are within the Union, but it shields every human being who comes or is brought under our jurisdiction. We have no right to do in one place more than in another that which the Constitution says we shall not do at all. If, therefore, the southern States were in truth out of the Union, we could not treat their people in a way which the fundamental law forbids.

Some persons assume that the success of our arms in crushing the opposition that was made in some of the States to the execution of the Federal laws reduced those States and all their people, the innocent as well as the guilty, to the condition of vassalage, and gave us a power over them which the Constitution does not bestow or define or limit. No fallacy can be more transparent than this. Our victories subjected the insurgents to legal obedience, not to the yoke of an arbitrary despotism. When an absolute sovereign reduces his rebellious subjects he may deal with them according to his pleasure, because he had that power before; but when a limited monarch puts down an insurrection he must still govern according to law. If an insurrection should take place in one of our States against the authority of the State government and end in the overthrow of those who planned it, would that take away the rights of all the people of the counties where it was favored by a part or a majority of the population? Could they for such a reason be wholly outlawed and deprived of their representation in the Legislature? I have always contended that the Government of the United States was sovereign within its constitutional sphere; that it executed its laws like the States themselves by applying its coercive power directly to individuals; and that it could put down insurrection with the same effect as a State and no other. The opposite doctrine is the worst heresy of those who advocated secession, and cannot be agreed to without admitting that heresy to be right.

Invasion, insurrection, rebellion, and domestic violence were anticipated when the Government was framed, and the means of repelling and suppressing them were wisely provided for in the Constitution; but it was not thought necessary to declare that the States in which they might occur should be expelled from the Union. Rebellions, which were invariably suppressed, occurred prior to that out of which these questions grow; but the States continued to exist and the Union remained unbroken. In Massachusetts, in Pennsylvania, in Rhode Island, and in New York, at different periods in our history, violent and armed opposition to the United States was carried on; but the relations of those States to the Federal Government were not supposed to be interrupted or changed thereby after the rebellious portions of their population were defeated and put down. It is true that in these earlier cases there was no formal expression of a determination to withdraw from the Union; but it is also true that in the southern States the ordinances of secession were treated by all the friends of the Union as mere nullities, and are now acknowledged to be so by the States themselves. If we admit that they had any force or validity, or that they did in fact take the States in which they were passed out of the Union, we sweep from under our feet all the grounds upon which we stand in justifying the use of Federal force to maintain the integrity of the Government.

This is a bill passed by Congress in time of peace. There is not in any one of the States brought under its operation either war or insurrection. The laws of the States and of the Federal Government are all in undisturbed and harmonious operation. The courts, State and Federal, are open and in the full exercise of their proper authority. Over every State comprised in these five military districts life, liberty, and property are secured by State laws and Federal laws, and the national Constitution is everywhere in force and everywhere obeyed. What, then, is the ground on which this bill proceeds? The title of the bill announces that it is intended "for the more efficient government" of these ten States. It is recited by way of preamble that no legal State governments "nor adequate protection for life or property" exist in those States, and that peace and good order should be thus enforced. The first thing which arrests attention upon these recitals, which prepare the way for martial law, is this: that the only foundation upon which martial law can exist under our form of government is not stated or so much as pretended. Actual war, foreign invasion, domestic insurrection—none of these appear, and none of these in fact exist. It is not even recited that any sort of war or insurrection is threatened. Let us pause here to consider, upon this question of constitutional law and the power of Congress, a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in ex parte Milligan.

I will first quote from the opinion of the majority of the court:

"Martial law cannot arise from a threatened invasion. The necessity must be actual and present, the invasion real, such as effectually closes the courts and deposes the civil administration."

We see that martial law comes in only when actual war closes the courts and deposes the civil authority; but this bill, in time of peace, makes martial law operate as though we were in actual war, and become the cause instead of the consequence of the abrogation of civil authority. One more quotation:

"It follows, from what has been said on this subject, that there are occasions when martial law can be properly applied. If in foreign invasion or civil war the courts are actually closed, and it is impossible to administer criminal justice according to law, then, on the theater of active military operations, where war really prevails, there is a necessity to furnish a substitute for the civil authority thus overthrown, to preserve the safety of the Army and society; and as no power is left but the military, it is allowed to govern by martial rule until the laws can have their free course."

I now quote from the opinion of the minority of the court, delivered by Chief Justice Chase:

"We by no means assert that Congress can establish and apply the laws of war where no war has been declared or exists. Where peace exists the laws of peace must prevail."

This is sufficiently explicit. Peace exists in all the territory to which this bill applies. It asserts a power in Congress in time of peace to set aside the laws of peace and to substitute the laws of war. The minority, concurring with the majority, declares that Congress does not possess that power. Again, and if possible more emphatically, the Chief Justice, with remarkable clearness and condensation, sums up the whole matter as follows:

"There are under the Constitution three kinds of military jurisdiction—one to be exercised both in peace and war; another to be exercised in time of foreign war without the boundaries of the United States, or in time of rebellion and civil war within States or districts occupied by rebels treated as belligerents; and a third to be exercised in time of invasion or insurrection within the limits of the United States, or during rebellion within the limits of the States maintaining adherence to the national Government, when the public danger requires its exercise. The first of these may be called jurisdiction under military law, and is found in acts of Congress prescribing Rules and Articles of War, or otherwise providing for the government of the national forces; the second may be distinguished as military government, superseding as far as may be deemed expedient the local law, and exercised by the military commander under the direction of the President, with the express or implied sanction of Congress; while the third may be denominated martial law proper, and is called into action by Congress, or temporarily when the action of Congress cannot be invited, and in the case of justifying or excusing peril, by the President in times of insurrection or invasion or of civil or foreign war, within districts or localities where ordinary law no longer adequately secures public safety and private rights."

It will be observed that of the three kinds of military jurisdiction which can be exercised or created under our Constitution there is but one that can prevail in time of peace, and that is the code of laws enacted by Congress for the government of the national forces. That body of military law has no application to the citizen, nor even to the citizen soldier enrolled in the militia in time of peace. But this bill is not a part of that sort of military law, for that applies only to the soldier and not to the citizen, while, contrariwise, the military law provided by this bill applies only to the citizen and not to the soldier.

I need not say to the representatives of the American people that their Constitution forbids the exercise of judicial power in any way but one, that is, by the ordained and established courts. It is equally well known that in all criminal cases a trial by jury is made indispensable by the express words of that instrument. I will not enlarge on the inestimable value of the right thus secured to every freeman or speak of the danger to public liberty in all parts of the country which must ensue from a denial of it anywhere or upon any pretense. A very recent decision of the Supreme Court has traced the history, vindicated the dignity, and made known the value of this great privilege so clearly that nothing more is needed. To what extent a violation of it might be excused in time of war or public danger may admit of discussion, but we are providing now for a time of profound peace, where there is not an armed soldier within our borders except those who are in the service of the Government. It is in such a condition of things that an act of Congress is proposed which if carried out would deny a trial by the lawful courts and juries to nine million American citizens and to their posterity for an indefinite period. It seems to be scarcely possible that any one should seriously believe this consistent with a Constitution which declares in simple, plain, and unambiguous language that all persons shall have that right, and that no person shall ever in any case be deprived of it. The Constitution also forbids the arrest of the citizen without judicial warrant, founded on probable cause. This bill authorizes an arrest without warrant at the pleasure of a military commander. The Constitution declares that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on presentment by a grand jury." This bill holds every person not a soldier answerable for all crimes and all charges without any presentment. The Constitution declares that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." This bill sets aside all process of law, and makes the citizen answerable in his person and property to the will of one man, and as to his life to the will of two. Finally, the Constitution declares that "the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when in case of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it;" whereas this bill declares martial law (which of itself suspends this great writ) in time of peace, and authorizes the military to make the arrest, and gives to the prisoner only one privilege, and that is, a trial "without unnecessary delay." He has no hope of release from custody, except the hope, such as it is, of release by acquittal before a military commission.

The United States are bound to guaranty to each State a republican form of government. Can it be pretended that this obligation is not palpably broken if we carry out a measure like this, which wipes away ever vestige of republican government in ten States, and puts the life, property, liberty, and honor of all the people in each of them under the domination of a single person clothed with unlimited authority?

The Parliament of England, exercising the omnipotent power which it claimed, was accustomed to pass bills of attainder; that is to say, it would convict men of treason and other crimes by legislative enactment. The person accused had a hearing, sometimes a patient and fair one; but generally party prejudice prevailed instead of justice. It often became necessary for Parliament to acknowledge its error and reverse its own action. The fathers of our country determined that no such thing should occur here. They withheld the power from Congress and thus forbade its exercise by that body; and they provided in the Constitution that no State should pass any bill of attainer. It is therefore impossible for any person in this country to be constitutionally convicted or punished for any crime by a legislative proceeding of any sort. Nevertheless, here is a bill of attainder against nine million people at once. It is based upon an accusation so vague as to be scarcely intelligible, and found to be true upon no credible evidence. Not one of the nine millions was heard in his own defense. The representatives of the doomed parties were excluded from all participation in the trial. The conviction is to be followed by the most ignominious punishment ever inflicted on large masses of men. It disfranchises them by hundreds of thousands, and degrades them all—even those who are admitted to be guiltless—from the rank of freemen to the condition of slaves.

The purpose and object of the bill, the general intent which pervades it from beginning to end, is to change the entire structure and character of the State governments, and to compel them by force to the adoption of organic laws and regulations which they are unwilling to accept if left to themselves. The negroes have not asked for the privilege of voting; the vast majority of them have no idea what it means. This bill not only thrusts it into their hands, but compels them, as well as the whites, to use it in a particular way. If they do not form a constitution with prescribed articles in it, and afterward elect a Legislature which will act upon certain measures in a prescribed way, neither blacks nor whites can be relieved from the slavery which the bill imposes upon them. Without pausing here to consider the policy or impolicy of Africanizing the southern part of our territory, I would simply ask the attention of Congress to that manifest, well-known, and universally acknowledged rule of constitutional law which declares that the Federal Government has no jurisdiction, authority, or power to regulate such subjects for any State. To force the right of suffrage out of the hands of the white people and into the hands of the negroes is an arbitrary violation of this principle.

This bill imposes martial law at once, and its operations will begin so soon as the general and his troops can be put in place. The dread alternative between its harsh rule and compliance with the terms of this measure is not suspended, nor are the people afforded any time for free deliberation. The bill says to them, take martial law first, then deliberate. And when they have done all that this measure requires them to do, other conditions and contingencies, over which they have no control, yet remain to be fulfilled before they can be relieved from martial law. Another Congress must first approve the constitutions made in conformity with the will of this Congress, and must declare these States entitled to representation in both Houses. The whole question thus remains open and unsettled, and must again occupy the attention of Congress, and in the mean time the agitation which now prevails will continue to disturb all portions of the people.

The bill also denies the legality of the governments of ten of the States which participated in the ratification of the amendment to the Federal Constitution abolishing slavery forever within the jurisdiction of the United States, and practically excludes them from the Union. If this assumption of the bill be correct their concurrence cannot be considered as having been legally given, and the important fact is made to appear that the consent of three fourths of the States—the requisite number—has not been constitutionally obtained to the ratification of that amendment, thus leaving the question of slavery where it stood before the amendment was officially declared to have become a part of the Constitution.

That the measure proposed by this bill does violate the Constitution in the particulars mentioned, and in many other ways which I forbear to enumerate, is too clear to admit of the least doubt. It only remains to consider whether the injunctions of that instrument ought to be obeyed or not. I think they ought to be obeyed for reasons which I will proceed to give as briefly as possible.

In the first place, it is the only system of free government which we can hope to have as a nation. When it ceases to be the rule of our conduct we may perhaps take our choice between complete anarchy, a consolidated despotism, and a total dissolution of the Union; but national liberty, regulated by law, will have passed beyond our reach.

It is the best frame of government the world ever saw. No other is or can be so well adapted to the genius, habits, or wants of the American people. Combining the strength of a great empire with unspeakable blessings of local self-government, having a central power to defend the general interests, and recognizing the authority of the States as the guardians of industrial rights, it is "the sheet-anchor of our safety abroad and our peace at home." It was ordained "to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, promote the general welfare, provide for the common defense, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and to our posterity." These great ends have been attained heretofore, and will be again, by faithful obedience to it; but they are certain to be lost if we treat with disregard its sacred obligations.

It was to punish the gross crime of defying the Constitution and to vindicate its supreme authority that we carried on a bloody war of four years' duration. Shall we now acknowledge that we sacrificed a million lives and expended billions of treasure to enforce a Constitution which is not worthy of respect and preservation?

Those who advocated the right of secession alleged in their own justification that we had no regard for law, and that their rights of property, life, and liberty would not be safe under the Constitution as administered by us. If we now verify their assertion, we prove that they were in truth and in fact fighting for their liberty, and instead of branding their leaders with the dishonoring name of traitors against a righteous and legal Government, we elevate them in history to the rank of self-sacrificing patriots, consecrate them to the admiration of the world, and place them by the side of Washington, Hampden, and Sidney. No, let us leave them to the infamy they deserve, punish them as they should be punished, according to law, and take upon ourselves no share of the odium which they should bear alone.

It is a part of our public history which can never be forgotten that both Houses of Congress, in July, 1861, declared in the form of a solemn resolution that the war was and should be carried on for no purpose of subjugation, but solely to enforce the Constitution and laws, and that when this was yielded by the parties in rebellion the contest should cease, with the constitutional rights of the States and of individuals unimpaired. This resolution was adopted and sent forth to the world unanimously by the Senate, and with only two dissenting voices in the House. It was accepted by the friends of the Union in the South, as well as in the North, as expressing honestly and truly the object of the war. On the faith of it many thousands of persons in both sections gave their lives and their fortunes to the cause. To repudiate it now by refusing to the States and to the individuals within them the rights which the Constitution and laws of the Union would secure to them is a breach of our plighted honor for which I can imagine no excuse, and to which I cannot voluntarily become a party.

The evils which spring from the unsettled state of our Government will be acknowledged by all. Commercial intercourse is impeded, capital is in constant peril, public securities fluctuate in value, peace itself is not secure, and the sense of moral and political duty is impaired. To avert these calamities from our country it is imperatively required that we should immediately decide upon some course of administration which can be steadfastly adhered to. I am thoroughly convinced that any settlement or compromise or plan of action which is inconsistent with the principles of the Constitution will not only be unavailing, but mischievous; that it will but multiply the present evils instead of removing them. The Constitution, in its whole integrity and vigor, throughout the length and breadth of the land, is the best of all compromises. Besides, our duty does not, in my judgment, leave us a choice between that and any other. I believe that it contains the remedy that is so much needed, and that if the coordinate branches of the Government would unite upon its provisions they would be found broad enough and strong enough to sustain in time of peace the nation which they bore safely through the ordeal of a protracted civil war. Among the most sacred guarantees of that instrument are those which declare that "each State shall have at least one Representative," and that "no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate." Each House is made the "judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," and may, "with the concurrence of two thirds, expel a member." Thus, as heretofore urged—

"In the admission of Senators and Representatives from any and all of the States there can be no just ground of apprehension that persons who are disloyal will be clothed with the powers of legislation, for this could not happen when the Constitution and laws are enforced by a vigilant and faithful Congress."

"When a Senator or Representative presents his certificate of election, he may at once be admitted or rejected; or, should there be any question as to his eligibility, his credentials may be referred for investigation to the appropriate committee. If admitted to a seat, it must be upon evidence satisfactory to the House of which he thus becomes a member, that he possesses the requisite constitutional and legal qualifications. If refused admission as a member for want of due allegiance to the Government, and returned to his constituents, they are admonished that none but persons loyal to the United States will be allowed a voice in the legislative councils of the nation, and the political power and moral influence of Congress are thus effectively exerted in the interests of loyalty to the Government and fidelity to the Union."

And is it not far better that the work of restoration should be accomplished by simple compliance with the plain requirements of the Constitution than by a recourse to measures which in effect destroy the States, and threaten the subversion of the General Government? All that is necessary to settle this simple but important question, without further agitation or delay, is a willingness on the part of all to sustain the Constitution and carry its provisions into practical operation. If to-morrow either branch of Congress would declare that, upon the presentation of their credentials, members constitutionally elected and loyal to the General Government would be admitted to seats in Congress, while all others would be excluded, and their places remain vacant until the selection by the people of loyal and qualified persons; and if, at the same time, assurance were given that this policy would be continued until all the States were represented in Congress, it would send a thrill of joy throughout the entire land, as indicating the inauguration of a system which must speedily bring tranquillity to the public mind.

While we are legislating upon subjects which are of great importance to the whole people, and which must affect all parts of the country, not only during the life of the present generation, but for ages to come, we should remember that all men are entitled at least to a hearing in the councils which decide upon the destiny of themselves and their children. At present ten States are denied representation, and when the Fortieth Congress assembles on the 4th day of the present month, sixteen States will be without a voice in the House of Representatives. This grave fact, with the important questions before us, should induce us to pause in a course of legislation which, looking solely to the attainment of political ends, fails to consider the rights it transgresses, the law which it violates, or the institutions which it imperils.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, March 2, 1867.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is now to be reconsidered by the Senate according to the provisions of the Constitution; and the question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, while doing, as I sincerely do, full justice to the motives of the President in refusing to sign the bill now before us, I cannot but regret that he felt himself compelled by a sense of duty to come to that conclusion, and I also regret the tone which his message in several portions of it assumes. It contains, as I think, some legal propositions which are unsound, and many errors of reasoning which upon examination will be found apparent. And above all do I lament the course he has thought it his duty to pursue, because I see, as I believe, that it may result in continued turmoil and peril, not only to the South, but to the entire country. I rise, therefore, for the purpose of stating very briefly, in addition to the reasons which I assigned when the bill was formerly before us, why I cast the vote which I then gave, and why I shall give the same vote now. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order will be observed in the galleries, or they will be cleared.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope it will not for a moment be supposed by those whom I am addressing that I am now governed, or was governed before, by any desire or expectation of popular applause. My motives, if I know myself, were and are pure and patriotic. I see before me a distressed, a desolated country, and in the measure before you I think I see the means through which it may be rescued and restored ere long to prosperity and a healthful condition, and the free institutions of our country preserved.

Mr. President, I have reached that period of life when I can have no other ambition than that of serving my country. During the whole period of our troubles I have hoped and believed that the war would terminate successfully, and that that accomplished, our forms of Government as devised by our fathers would be even the more firmly established, securing to the States all the powers they possessed without dispute before the war, and which they thought, as I think, cannot be exercised at all by the General Government, and securing to that Government the powers granted it, which the States are equally incompetent to discharge. But we are now, though the war has successfully terminated, in a condition which fills every reflecting man with anxiety. Without examining the motives of our brethren in the South in attempting to dissever our Union and to establish a confederacy of their own, it is sufficient to say that in my opinion if they had succeeded the cause of constitutional liberty would for years, if not forever, have terminated.

The effort, thank God, has failed. The power of the Government under the providence of God has proved able to arrest and defeat it, and the South now, as I believe, is willing in good faith and anxious to abide by the result. The question to be decided is and has been from the period of the war's termination, how is the Government to be restored to its original integrity, and the States, as vital to that integrity, to be restored to their former constitutional condition? The opinion entertained by me during the war, and since—often expressed in the Senate and upon other suitable occasions—is that the moment the insurrection was suppressed the States where it prevailed remained in the Union with all the rights and obligations before belonging to them, and that the General Government had no power to limit these in any way whatever; that the authority to change their government belongs exclusively to their own people, subject only to the restrictions expressed or implied of the Constitution of the General Government; that this freedom from control is applicable to every department of that Government. In my view, therefore, they were and are as entirely without the jurisdiction of the Executive as of Congress. The authority delegated to Congress to preserve our institutions, State and Federal, by suppressing insurrections aimed at their existence cannot be even tortured with any show of plausibility into an authority to destroy them.

I consequently think that no terms can be exacted, either by the President or by Congress, as conditions to be performed before they are entitled to representation in the Senate and House of Representatives. And in nothing that I have ever said or written upon the subject have I attempted to justify upon constitutional grounds the authority of the Executive to enforce conditions upon the States as preliminary to their right of representation. The ground upon which I have maintained and do maintain the constitutionality of the present State governments of the South is that the people of such States have, since they were exacted, complied with them and framed their constitutions accordingly. The late and the now President took a different view. They both seem to have supposed that these States were not within the Union so as to be entitled to representation in Congress until they should comply with such conditions as they might stipulate, and that they had the authority, without the sanction of Congress, to require such conditions.

In my judgment, in this they were right in part, but not in the whole. They were right in holding that the States are entitled to representation; but not because they had the authority to impose the conditions which they exacted, but because the people had adopted them. It is unnecessary, on this occasion, to state what those conditions were. In my opinion they were as unconstitutional as are to be found in the present bill. Congress, however, from the first has been of opinion, as their conduct shows, that notwithstanding the people of these States fulfilled these presidential conditions, they were not restored to the right of representation until Congress should so declare, and this, as manifested in the recent congressional elections, is to be esteemed the present judgment of the country. This being so, how are the States to be restored? It can only be done in fact upon their submitting to the conditions which Congress may require. Failing to do so, they must remain in the condition in which they are, liable to taxation without representation, and to be governed, not only without, but against their will.

I impute no improper motives either to Congress or to the Executive, the past or the present. I accord purity of purpose and patriotic designs to both; but with all becoming respect I differ in opinion from both. I seek, however, as vital to the prosperity of the country, if not to the continuing existence of our institutions, the complete restoration of the Union; and I now see no way of accomplishing it but by the adoption of the measure on your table.

Mr. President, we are now, in my opinion, by the course which Congress deems it its duty to pursue, (though very much to my regret) in a state of quasi war. Our condition is virtually revolutionary. Ten States are held and treated as conquered provinces, and they are so held and treated as in the judgment of the dominant party being enemies of the Union and of the Government. This condition of things is full of peril to all we should hold dear. It must be arrested, or our Government will sooner or later be destroyed. So thinking, were I to hesitate a moment longer to give my sanction to a measure which promises, as I believe the one upon your table does, to terminate it, I should be false to the true interest, honor, and very safety of the nation. We are told in the message before you (and quotations from a recent decision of the Supreme Court are given in support of the opinion) that such military force as this bill provides cannot be constitutionally resorted to, the war having terminated. As a question of law I concur in that opinion. But if that question should be presented to that court hereafter, when will it consider the war terminated? It may hold that to be a political question, to be decided exclusively by the political department of the Government, by Congress, to whom is alone intrusted the power to declare war and to suppress insurrections. I am therefore not prepared to say that that high tribunal would rule this bill to be unconstitutional, although they may think as men that the war is at an end in fact, and on that account regret this legislation. But neither upon that ground nor upon any other is it more obnoxious to constitutional objection than are the civil rights and Freedmen's Bureau bills. These, both of them, subject the southern States to military power as effectually in all respects as the one before us. And the President (as I think he was in duty bound to do) from the first has enforced them. Indeed, the bill in question does not differ at all from those referred to, except in a particular which renders it in my opinion much less objectionable. They established over the South military rule alone, providing no means for its cessation, while this does provide means calculated and intended to reinstate the South as States entitled to the same rights as the other States. When that is done there is of course an end to military rule by Congress.

And, Mr. President, the light in which I view this bill, and which led me to sanction it, I am glad, though not surprised, to find is the light in which it is viewed by most of the reflecting and intelligent men of the South. I collect this from a portion of their public press, but more especially from communications made to me in regard to it by very many of the leading men of that section since I gave it my support. They tell me it is their purpose to organize under the bill. They are taking lessons from experience. The constitutional amendment heretofore proposed to them, if they had adopted it, would I firmly believe before this have given them representation in Congress. Of that I had no doubt, but they rejected it, and now to adopt it would not have that result. The bill which passed the Senate, if it had not been altered in the other branch, would have accomplished the same end upon terms less exacting than those which were incorporated into it by the House of Representatives. To these alterations the Senate, though evidently with reluctance, gave their assent rather than abandon the measure altogether. I concurred in that assent, and why? Because I then believed, indeed thought I knew, and as I now know, that the bill failing, one of a much more harsh and unjust character would be adopted, one founded upon the hypothesis that the people of the South were to be esteemed legally as conquered enemies, and their land and other property on that account as liable to confiscation and forfeiture.

Acting upon this theory, I believed, unless the South was restored to the Union, laws of confiscation would be passed, and in such a form that I did not know, nor do I now know with anything like an assured conviction, what would be the judgment of the Supreme Court upon their constitutionality when the question should be brought before it. I did, however, know that it could not be so brought without considerable delay, and that in the mean time with such a cloud over their titles the owners would not be able to obtain credit which they now so much need to develop their industry, by mortgaging their lands or otherwise. And in this state of things, although the laws might hereafter be declared invalid, the result would in many cases, if not in all cases, be total ruin; and if eventually the constitutionality of the laws should be adjudged, the entire southern region would be surrendered to a colored population, the whites, our fellow-citizens, and who are now anxious to be with us again, be driven from their homes, made exiles in their native land. Under this impression no more pride of opinion could I suffer to restrain me a moment in supporting a measure which I believed might avert so dreadful a calamity. Something to prevent it must be done. Party with me can have no influence when the safety of the country requires in my judgment that it be disregarded. If I know myself, and in this respect I think I do, I should hang my head in very shame if for the sake of mere party success I refused to give a vote in support of any measure which I believed involved the safety of the country.

Mr. President, I seek the restoration of the Union as it was prior to the insurrection. This I believe can be attained if the southern States will organize under this bill, and if it is faithfully carried out by the President, and that I have no doubt he will do, if it becomes a law. When this is effected, and they are again with us, I believe that all the restrictions now proposed and which are so obnoxious in my judgment, and so unnecessary and so unjust to the best men of the South, will in a very short period be removed. And then, as of old, during the struggles of the Revolution, the wars of 1812 and 1846, we shall be found united as a band of brothers, in council, on the ocean, and on the field, seeking with equal zeal, valor, and patriotism to maintain the Government bequeathed to us by our fathers, to promote the national prosperity, and to uphold the rights and vindicate the national honor; starting upon a career even more prosperous than we have enjoyed in the past, and challenging more than ever the wonder and admiration of the world. Contenting myself, therefore, with what I have now said, reserving for a future occasion a more extended examination of the subject, I shall do as I did before, cast my vote in favor of the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, it is not my intention to enter in any discussion of the principles involved in the bill which the President of the United States in his wisdom has vetoed, nor to consider the reasoning that he has offered to Congress in support of that veto. I approve the exercise by him of his power of vetoing the most iniquitous bill that ever was presented to the Federal Congress. But, sir, the occasion is too solemn, it may be too momentous in its consequences, for me to allow myself any extended remarks. When constitutional liberty, when free government is to be hopelessly struck down in the Senate Chamber of the nation, let the votaries of the one and the admirers of the other maintain a sorrowful silence. I cannot, however, refrain from the expression of the hope that there is no man, and that there may be no man within the limits of these ten States, who will participate in his own disgrace, degradation, and ruin: let them maintain their honor. If all be lost, honor may yet remain. Let them be peaceable and quiet, and rest assured that although judgment and reason may have fled the land for a moment, it will return again. If it does not, if there be wrath in the vials of the Almighty, if there be arrows of vengeance in His quiver, such iniquity and injustice cannot finally prove successful.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the veto or the bill, but to say that my judgment against the measure has been fortified and strengthened by that able document. I do not quite agree, however, with my friend from Delaware, who has just taken his seat, that at once and without consideration the people of the South, to maintain their honor, must turn their backs upon the proposition now made to them. I thought last year there were one or two of the provisions of the constitutional amendment which made it almost impossible for the people of the South to agree to it. I did not see how one portion of the men who engaged in the rebellion, that they themselves might be relieved from its responsibilities, could accept a proposition which left under disabilities others who went with them, and who were no more guilty than themselves. To have accepted of the constitutional amendment would have been their own voluntary act; but now, sir, in my judgment, the case upon the passage of this bill will be much changed. An army is to be sent into all the States lately in rebellion, and yet unrepresented, and in the presence of this army, and under the government of arms, the people of the South have a proposition made to them; and if they accept it, although it may be hard and unjust toward many, yet it is accepted under such circumstances as do not involve the personal dishonor of the men who agree to it; for that which is agreed to under duress cannot be regarded as bringing dishonor.

The passage of this bill will present to the people of the South a subject for the gravest consideration. The Constitution, so far as it extends over those States, for the time being is set aside; the guarantees of that instrument no longer afford them protection; and in the stead of that form of civil government which the Constitution was intended to secure to them is established over them a military government in every respect most despotic, and it is now for them to decide not whether voluntarily they would have accepted terms which they regarded as dishonoring to them, but whether a system of government unknown to this country, most terrible in its power and most dangerous to personal security, shall become permanent over them, or whether they shall accept what perhaps is inevitable; I speak of negro suffrage. I have no advice to give to them. It is not my right to do so. But upon the passage of this bill I would not say to them without reflection, in a spirit of passion, they shall turn their backs upon it.

I hope, Mr. President, that the people of the South will regard their present condition and the condition in which they will find themselves upon the passage of this bill uninfluenced on their part by passion, and will bring to the consideration of the subject the coolest judgment and the highest patriotism.

I do not agree with the Senator from Maryland in much that he said. I cannot encourage myself with the hope that from a measure like this we may expect the restoration of our institutions as our fathers founded them. I cannot indulge in the hope that "from the ashes" of our institutions their genius will again rise and "Soar, phoenix-like, to Jove."

I do not hope it, for I cannot believe that from the womb of despotism and military government there can spring liberty and life and personal security.

There was devolved upon the majority when this Congress met a grave responsibility; it was to present some practicable, wise system for the restoration of our public affairs. I am sorry that a better measure than this has not been devised, one that we could all rejoice upon its adoption.

I do not intend to answer the argument of the Senator from Maryland. Much of his opinion in regard to the measure was shown by his first vote in opposition to it; he felt himself, however, required upon a consideration of the condition of the country to support the amendment that came from the House. I could not see how the President of the United States could approve this bill. It seemed to me to be framed with a view to make it impossible for him to approve it. It had a preamble which the President has often over and over again in his communications to Congress said he did not believe; and its last section, which the Senator from Maryland voted for when it came from the House, expressed the doctrine that the State governments of the South were provisional, temporary, and in every respect under the control and supervision of the Congress and Government of the United States—a doctrine which the President in almost every communication upon the subject which he has made to Congress has repudiated and rejected; and it was hardly by any one to be expected that he could sign the bill after that section became a part of it. I have believed that the President upon these questions was in the right, that when peace was restored again to the land the Congress of the United States ought to stand upon the pledge that it made to the country, to the Army, and to the world in 1861, that when the supremacy within its constitutional power of the Government of the United States was restored over the rebellious States, when the Constitution and the Union were maintained, then the States should be regarded as restored with all their rights, dignity, and equality unimpaired. The President standing upon that declaration of Congress, which has never been repealed, and yet stands as the doctrine of the Government, necessarily occupies in regard to this question a position which made it impossible, as I think, for him to sign the bill. His reasons now go to the country. Whether they be read now or not, the time will come when they will be read and considered; and that message which has been read to us to-night will stand, in my judgment, as one of the ablest expositions of the doctrines of our Government.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, it is not my purpose at this time to go into this discussion at any length. I desire merely to state in the briefest possible terms some of the reasons that compel me to vote against the bill under consideration.

I believe it to be clearly and palpably in conflict with the plainest provisions of the Constitution of the United States. If I were to vote for it I should be guilty of a deliberate and conscious violation of my official oath. The country is now in a state of profound peace. The rebellion has ceased to exist; its termination has been announced by the proclamation of the President of the United States, and this proclamation has been recognized by solemn act of Congress. By the second section of an act passed at the present session it is expressly provided that a certain act therein named—

"Shall continue in full force and effect for three years from and after the close of the rebellion, as announced by the President of the United States, by proclamation bearing date the 20th day of August, 1866."

I have before me the bill containing this provision, which is now the law of the land, as passed by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President. Let me read the provision in full:

"That section one of the act entitled 'An act to increase the pay of soldiers,' &c., approved June 20, 1864, be, and the same is hereby, continued in full force and effect for three years from and after the close of the rebellion, as announced by the President of the United States by proclamation bearing date the 20th day of August, 1866."

After this solemn recognition by Congress of the fact that the rebellion has ceased, and that peace prevails throughout the entire country, what power has Congress to establish a military government and suspend the writ of habeas corpus in the face of the express provision of the Constitution that—

"The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it."

I regret to differ from the majority of this body. I regret to differ from the honorable Senator from Maryland; and he will pardon me for saying that some portion of my views on this subject have been derived from what he himself has said in debate in this body upon the very bill now before the Senate. Believing this bill in its letter and in its spirit to be a plain and palpable violation of the Constitution, I cannot and shall not vote for its passage.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I listened on the evening of the 15th of February to a very interesting and very able speech against this bill delivered by the Senator from Maryland. He spoke with great effect upon that occasion, and his argument was well calculated to carry conviction to the members of the Senate and to the citizens of the country. It is only necessary to say, in brief, that the Senator's effort upon that occasion was equal to his best efforts upon other occasions and at former times. I have great confidence in his intellectual powers; in fact that confidence goes to the extent of inducing the belief that he could have made, if he had then chosen, a speech equally effective and powerful as an intellectual performance upon the opposite side of the question to that which he advocated. But what was remarkable, at least to me as a member of the audience upon that occasion, was not the logical or elocutionary power of that member, because those are often manifested by him, but it was the immense power of the truth of which he was then the agent and spokesman. That truth yet remains in my memory, and yet influences my judgment. I have not changed the opinions which I then held and which I attempted to maintain when I followed him in that great debate, and when, in the opinion of those of us who spoke against the bill, our arguments even shook the faith and caused a wavering of purpose among men pledged and committed to the fortune of that bill; and that to such an extent that the measure was taken from this Chamber the next morning and committed to the consultations of a secret body of whose proceedings there is no record in the Congressional Globe, nor in any other authentic publication accessible to the public. To-night, sir, the Senator from Maryland stands forward to announce to us that he not only votes for this bill, but that he votes for it in the face of the country against what I may describe justly as that most powerful and exhaustive paper which has come to us from the Chief Magistrate of the United States.

Well, sir, his opinion is entitled to respect, and the course which he adopts upon a public question, and especially upon such a public question as this, is one which may well cause those who are juniors in the public service to pause and reconsider the positions which they maintained, if those positions are opposed to that which he assumes.

But, sir, let me call the attention of the Senate to one fact with regard to his exposition of his sentiments on this occasion. Has he argued this bill? Has he come in his remarks within the four corners of this enactment? Has he discussed its provisions to demonstrate that they are either constitutional or wise? No, sir. He has told us that under the circumstances which exist outside this Chamber with reference to the condition of affairs in the country, and with reference to considerations which concern the future policy and conduct of men in the southern States, he is induced to give his voice in favor of this measure. Sir, he makes a speech here upon a question which is not before us; he makes a speech here upon the question of the acceptance of the law, if this bill be enacted into a law, by the people of the South. He thinks it is expedient that they should accept it, and his speech may be taken as the expression of his opinion to go for what it is worth, to have whatsoever of weight it may merit with those to whom it is really addressed.

I say that the speech of the Senator from Maryland did not constitute an argument in favor of the bill; that it was rather an argument in favor of its acceptance. Therefore, in my opinion, the Senator from Maryland has mistaken his forum of debate; his speech belongs to a popular assemblage in the States of the South after this bill shall have passed, and it is not applicable or pertinent to the debate which is taking place here upon its enactment. He thinks it expedient that this measure should be accepted for fear perhaps that a measure more stringent and objectionable than this may follow it in the future. I say then, sir, that for aught that appears in his speech, this bill is open to all the objections which were leveled against it in the former debate, and that he has advanced nothing which should influence the judgment of any member of the Senate to induce a vote in its favor.

One thing I will notice in his remarks, and one thing only. He suggests that the existing constitutions under which governments are organized in the States of the South derive their entire validity from the assent of the people of those several States who have established them, and that the recommendations of the President of the United States, when proceedings were instituted for their establishment, possessed no legal force and no legal validity whatever. Of course I agree in that opinion entirely. Those constitutions are valid, and the governments set up under them or created by them are valid likewise, because the people of those States have created and have established them. I agree entirely with the opinion of the Senator from Maryland; but the inherent and ineradicable vice of this bill is, that instead of recognizing the validity of those governments thus established by the people of those States, it declares in the preamble that they have no legal existence, no legal validity whatever, and it proceeds to establish military governments throughout their jurisdiction, and provides for their complete repudiation and for the establishment of other governments in their stead. How any one can hold to the opinion that those governments have legal validity, have a constitutional existence, that they were properly established by the people of the States concerned, and yet find it in his will to vote for this bill I cannot conceive.

I rose, sir, mainly for the purpose of pointing out the fact that the only argument in favor of the passage of this bill which had been presented to us upon this occasion is addressed to another audience than this, and relates to considerations which will arise after this bill becomes a law, and will be proper for consideration elsewhere than in this Chamber.

I will add but one observation. The President of the United States has not exercised the privilege which he enjoys under the Constitution to withhold this bill from the action of Congress. It was sent to him within ten days of the adjournment, and, if he had chosen to do so, he could, by simple inaction, have prevented the action of Congress upon it again at this session; he could have defeated its enactment into a law by that two-thirds vote which is expected for it by its friends in this Chamber as well as that similar vote which it has already received in the House. In this action of his on this question I entirely concur; in other words, I heartily approve it. Although it was within his power to have defeated the action of Congress on this subject, although it was in his power to have prevented this bill from becoming a law at the present session, even though there be a competent number of votes for it in Congress, he has, by extraordinary exertion, by zeal and diligence in its examination, and in putting his views upon it in form, transmitted it back to the representatives of the people and of the States for their judgment. In this he has acted in a manly and proper manner, as became the executive Chief Magistrate of this nation; and I believe that in all his official intercourse with Congress, from the time when he assumed the duties of his high office, he has behaved and conducted himself with eminent propriety, with that courtesy to us which was our due, with that high sense of honor and of public duty in his relation to this department of the Government which became alike his character and his station. Whatever of criticism, strong and, in the judgment of some, just criticism, may have been directed against him since he assumed the duties of his high office, has been for matters and things outside of the performance of official duty, has been in other than his official relations with the people of the United States. He has sent this measure, I say, to us in advance of the limit in the Constitution within which it is to be returned for congressional consideration.

Now, sir, acting in this spirit there has been and there will be no disposition to delay action here by unnecessary debate. Those of us who were opposed to this measure were heard upon it fully upon a former occasion. We submitted our views. Our opinions are before the country, and they will remain upon record, not for the judgment alone of the men of this age, but for the judgment of the men of future times. Upon those arguments and upon this veto message which has now been sent to us, and which, like them, will be placed upon the permanent, enduring records of the country, we are content to stand, and by them we are content to be judged. We have resisted military and despotic government in the American States with whatever of power, whether of argument or of vote, we possessed. We have resisted the illegitimate and unauthorized extension of Federal power in those States of the South which are unrepresented in the two Houses of Congress. We have resisted the degradation and pollution of suffrage by unlicensed and illegitimate power exerted here in the city of Washington. Against all these and other features of the bill which is before us for reconsideration we have struggled; we have done our best. But, sir, we interpose now no unnecessary or factious delay. We are content to be judged by what we have said and by what we have done. More than this: we are content to be judged by the results of this legislation as those results will be developed in the future; and we cannot, we will not doubt what will ultimately be the judgment of history and of mankind upon that minority which has resisted in a manly and proper manner the enactment of an unjust, pernicious, and despotic law.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have but a word or two to say in reply to the honorable member from Pennsylvania. He seems to suppose that the vote which I am about to give, and the one which I have already given on the measure before us, are not in accordance with the opinions I have heretofore expressed. He finds it, he tells us, impossible to reconcile them. He says he listened to some remarks of mine when the measure was formerly before us, and that they served to strengthen his own opinion upon the questions which it involves. He apparently considers that consistency should compel me to vote now as I voted then. Mr. President, consistency in a public man can never properly be esteemed a virtue when he becomes satisfied that it will operate to the prejudice of his country. The pride of opinion, which more or less belongs to us all, becomes, in my judgment, in a public man a crime when it is indulged at the sacrifice or hazard of the public safety. It is true, sir, that I thought when the constitutional amendment was before us that it was obnoxious to serious constitutional objections. I predicted then that the South would not ratify it; and at that time I thought that she should not ratify it. The prediction was verified. She refused to ratify it, and what has been the result? A measure still more harsh has been adopted by Congress, and it is not in the power of the minority of this body, or of the other House, or of the people for a period of two years successfully to resist it. Whether justly or not, whether originating in patriotic motives or not, he must be blind to the signs of the times who does not now see that there is a fixed determination in the dominant party of the country that the southern States shall not be represented in Congress except upon such conditions as Congress may impose. To resist this determination it is evident that the President is powerless, and that the South will be unrepresented until Congress shall admit them.

And the question for my decision now is, what shall I do for the South in her present exigency and for the country? I should have rejoiced and should still rejoice if the recent elections should have so terminated as to have caused Congress to abandon its purpose and to have recognized what I believed to be the constitutional rights of the South. But they did not so result. On the contrary, they seem to sanction the policy of Congress. In this predicament what is a patriotic Senator to do? Is he to abandon all hope and make no effort to preserve sooner or later the rights of the South, or is he not bound to make such an effort? In my view he clearly is, and it is because I so think that I now support the measure upon your table. I flatter myself that the South do not doubt my friendship, and that they will be satisfied that in giving my support to this measure I have had their interest in view. Mr. President, what will be their condition if they reject it. Harsher measures may be resorted to. Confiscation of their lands and their distribution among the blacks and those called loyal whites, and this I fear may be done in a form which will render all attempt at legal redress fruitless.

The Supreme Court have in terms declared that the insurrection was a war carrying with it incidents and consequences of an international war. One of these incidents is the right of the conqueror to confiscate enemies' property. This right was exercised during our revolutionary struggle, and if the insurrection was a war (I do not think it was as far as this right is concerned) the United States may exercise that right. Should Congress, therefore, declare that the insurrection now exists, that the war is not ended, and that the citizens of the South are still public enemies, and that on that account they confiscate their property, what may not the judiciary hold? I do not undertake to give the answer with anything like certainty; but they might say that whether the war existed or not was a political question to be decided exclusively by the war-making power of our Government, Congress. In that contingency how hopeless would be the condition of the South. Her personal property is already swept away, every house is filled with mourning, all business enterprise destroyed, and that which alone remained would share the same fate. And I am asked or expected, though entertaining as I do this apprehension, to abide by the views which I had heretofore entertained, and for the sake of consistency see the South involved in total destruction without extending a hand to prevent it.

This, Mr. President, I cannot do; my judgment rejects it; my heart revolts at it. The honorable member from Pennsylvania tells us that these considerations are not suited to the deliberations of this body, that I have mistaken the forum of debate, and that they are only proper to be addressed to a popular assembly. In this I do not concur. When the conduct of Congress and the measures it may adopt are not influenced by popular opinion the body would soon lose public confidence. He also tells us that the opposite course which he is pursuing he is willing to submit to the judgment of the men of this age and of future ages. So am I, Mr. President, and this I do with all becoming confidence. With that honorable Senator I am content that my conduct on this occasion, and the motives which animate me shall be recorded in the permanent and enduring archives of the country, and I have no fear that with reflecting and patriotic men, North or South, my judgment or patriotism will suffer.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I have to express my doubts of a supposed decision of the Supreme court of the United States, out of which the power in Congress to pass a law confiscating the property of all the citizens of the South is deduced. The Senator's reading of the decisions of the Supreme Court is somewhat more extensive and accurate than mine; but I must express my incredulity in reference to the fact suggested in his statement. If that court has made any decision whatever on the question of the power of Congress now, in a time of peace, to pass a law for the confiscation of private property as a punishment of past offenses in the southern country, and if that opinion is to be hereafter introduced into the debates of the country, I should think it advisable to have it presented in specific form that we may judge of its character and extent. I must at present express my doubts of the construction which the Senator has given to anything that has fallen from that court in any opinion which it has pronounced.

I wish, however, to make but one remark in addition to what I have said before; and that is that I disavow entirely giving any advice to the people of the South, or to any other section of the country about what they shall do in relation to a measure which we pass. That is their affair and not mine. Our business is to debate, to consider, and to determine questions that are before us, and upon the arguments which legitimately pertain to them, leaving to the people of the South, the North, the West, and other sections of the country full and complete control over their future conduct with reference to our legislation. We have nothing to do with that. Our duty is to act upon what is before us.

Mr. DAVIS. I had not the happiness to hear the honorable Senator from Maryland in his first speech after the reading of the veto message, nor had I an opportunity of hearing that message read, being absent on a committee of conference at the time. I am not now going to make anything like a speech; but I will state two or three propositions. If the bill under consideration had proposed a formal abrogation of the Constitution of the United States as to the ten southern States, I ask the honorable Senator from Maryland if he would have voted for such a bill?

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the question?

Mr. DAVIS. If the bill under consideration had in its terms proposed an abrogation of the Constitution of the United States as to the ten southern States, would my honorable friend have voted for such a measure?

Mr. JOHNSON. No.

Mr. DAVIS. The honorable Senator says not, as I knew he would say. When my honorable friend gave in his adhesion to this measure as it passed the Senate, after it had been sent back to the House, and the House had made an amendment, which the Senate accepted, he then explicitly declared that he dissented from the proposition that by secession or the war the southern States had ceased to be States in the Union. The honorable Senator stated that proposition most distinctly.

Mr. STEWART. He stated it to-night.

Mr. DAVIS. The honorable Senator from Nevada says he stated it to-night. Well, sir, it is utterly incompatible with the conclusions to which the honorable Senator has come; and I will make one or two remarks upon that. Entertaining the belief that by the Constitution the ten southern States are still States in the Union and of the Union, I ask the honorable Senator from Maryland from whence Congress derives its power to declare that they are not States of the Union? If they are States in the Union they have State governments, created by the legitimate power, and the only legitimate power, that in our system can create a government, State or Federal. Those governments were created by the people of the States. I admit that they were dictated to in relation to some important principles established in their constitutions by the powers from this capital, and that that dictation was in violation of the Constitution and of their rights; but they submitted to that dictation; they called their conventions and formed their constitutions in harmony with the terms that were imposed upon them from the executive department, and those constitutions were submitted to the people, and by the people adopted as their systems of government. It was the acceptance of those governments by the people of those States that gave them all of their validity. If these forms of State constitutions had been submitted to them as counsel by the honorable Senator from Maryland, and they had called conventions, and submitted the proposed governments which he had counseled them to accept to the people, and the people had accepted them, they would have had as much validity as though they had been adopted by the people in any form whatever.

Here, then, are the people of these ten States that have State governments made by themselves; and I here assume the position, and I dare and defy the honorable Senator from Maryland or anybody else to controvert the position, that there is no power on earth that can legitimately form a State government in the United States except the people of the State itself. Congress may form a territorial government for the people of a Territory, but when the question comes up of the admission of a State into the Union, and an enabling act of Congress is passed to allow the people of any Territory to form a State government with a view to the admission of that Territory as a State into the Union, there is no power in this country that can form such a State government but the power of the people of that State.

The honorable Senator admits that the present governments in the southern States have been formed by the people of those States respectively. They have been formed by the legitimate power, and the only legitimate power that can form State governments. Then they are in the Union as States, with republican forms of government fashioned by themselves, adopted by the people of the States. They are just as legitimately within the Union as the State of Massachusetts or of Maryland or of Kentucky, and with as legitimate State governments. To these conclusions the premises and concessions of the honorable Senator lead us inevitably, and he cannot escape these conclusions, and no intellect can avert them.

Then, sir, if they are States of the Union, with legitimate State governments, I ask where is the ground for the truth of this most unfounded preamble that legitimate governments do not exist in those States? That is one concession that the vote of the honorable Senator makes against all of his principles, and, as he said the other day, against all the arguments upon this point which he has made during the whole war. If they are legitimate States with legitimate State governments in the Union, what power has Congress, and whence does Congress derive that power, to abrogate these States? None. Has Congress power to abrogate the State of Massachusetts; has Congress power to abrogate the State of Maryland, or the State of Kentucky, and to declare that there are no legitimate governments in those States? And yet Congress has as ample power to make that declaration in relation to the three States which I have named as in relation to these ten States.

Then, Mr. President, the honorable Senator admits that if the bill by its provisions and by its language professed to abolish the Constitution of the United States as to these States expressly he would vote against it. Instead of using that explicit language it reaches the same conclusion by saying that there are no legitimate governments in those States, and therefore it proceeds to establish provisional governments for them. When my honorable friend concedes that they are States, that they have governments organized, at least acquiesced in by the people of those States, and are in the Union just as any other State, and denies that a law can or ought to be passed by Congress abolishing the Constitution of the United States as to them, can he give his vote for the present measure? Does not this measure abolish the Constitution as to those States? Does it not abolish those States? Does it not declare that their legitimate governments, formed by the appropriate and only power that can form States, do not exist?

Now, Mr. President, there is another glaring inconsistency of principle in which the honorable Senator is involved. Who has the power to establish the right of suffrage in a State? What power can regulate that interesting subject? Here are the ten States, according to his principle and his position in every debate, and he conceded when he gave his consent to this measure that they were States in the Union. Being States in the Union, what power can form governments for them but the people themselves? If their governments are to be overthrown, subverted, changed, reformed, what power is there to do that except the power of the people themselves? And yet the bill under consideration proceeds to overthrow the State governments, to declare that there are no legitimate State governments in existence in those ten States, and then to proclaim universal manhood suffrage; in other words, to concede negro suffrage. If these are States in the Union, has Congress any more right to establish negro suffrage for them than it has for your State or any other State in the Union? Certainly not. That is a power reserved to the States over which the Constitution vests in Congress no authority whatever. When my honorable friend concedes that they are States in the Union he puts them in this position: that they are just as invulnerable and as impervious to the power of Congress in relation to their State governments, in relation to the basis of representation, and in relation to the right of regulating who shall and who shall not vote in those States as they are to that of England.

Mr. President, we are all here legislating under the Constitution and in virtue of the powers vested in Congress by that Constitution. Each member of Congress is sworn to support that Constitution. He cannot vote for a law which, according to his reason and judgment, violates the Constitution conscientiously. When the honorable Senator concedes that he would not vote for a general bill declaring the Constitution void and inoperative as to these ten States he concedes everything for which we have contended in this argument. Why, sir, is there any right dearer to the American people than the right of self-government? Who formed the Constitution of the United States? It was the people of the United States acting by States. What power is there in this country to abolish that Government, to change it, or to modify it? None whatever but that same power proceeding according to the forms prescribed by the Constitution itself. What power is there in any State to form a State government? None but that of the people of the State themselves. Suppose we were proposing to admit Territories into the Union as States, and Congress, instead of referring the question of what form of government the people would choose to adopt to themselves, were to attempt to exercise the power and to devise the forms of government for those States, and to prescribe to those States the condition of exercising all the forms of government prescribed by Congress for them, would it not strike everybody as an enormous usurpation, as a flagitious violation of the Constitution and of the great principles of self-government? All these principles have been violated, and are violated, by the measure under consideration.

But, Mr. President, as the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania said, when this measure was pending before Congress we were allowed ample time for its debate, for the discussion of every principle involved in it. A good many of us availed ourselves of that opportunity. We entered into the debate. That debate is before the country and before the world, and we are willing to stand by it and to abide the conclusions of that debate according to the judgment of the present and the future. Sir, when impartial and intelligent history writes the page that records the legislative action of the present Congress that tribunal will decide that the minority was in the right, the majority in the wrong; that the President was in the right, Congress in the wrong; that Congress, without having any legitimate power, proceeded to dismantle States, to form provisional governments for them, to abrogate their legitimate State governments, to assault unconstitutionally a coördinate branch of the Government, the Presidency; and that they have subverted the Presidency by a revolution, bloodless, but none the less a revolution than though it had been attended by all the convulsion and blood and thunders of war. That is the revolutionary achievement which the Congress has made by its legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 38, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—38.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Hendricks, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, and Saulsbury—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Guthrie, McDougall, and Riddle—4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill having passed both Houses of Congress, was sent to the President for his signature, and by him returned to the House of Representatives, in which House it originated, with his objections. It having been certified to us that the bill passed that body by two thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same, and two thirds of the Senate having now voted to pass the same bill, the bill has become a law without the signature of the President. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will take into custody all persons in the gallery who make disturbance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 302) for the relief of soldiers who are entitled to artificial limbs, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the Committee on Finance, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the various bills, joint resolutions, memorials, and petitions heretofore referred to that committee and not reported on; which was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868; and agreed to other amendments of the Senate to the said bill with amendments, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and has appointed Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS of Pennsylvania, Mr. HENRY VAN AERNAM of New York, and Mr. WILLIAM E. NIBLACK of Indiana, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 532) for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives, having proceeded in conformity with the constitution to reconsider the bill entitled "An act regulating the tenure of certain civil offices," returned to the Senate by the President of the United States with his objections and sent to the Senate by the House of Representatives, with the message of the President returning the bill, had—

Resolved, That the bill do pass, two thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 793) to provide increased revenue from imported wool, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 859) to declare valid and conclusive certain proclamations of the President and acts done in pursuance thereof or of his orders in the suppression of the late rebellion against the United States; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 300) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of John Sedgewick, collector of internal revenue for the third collection district of California.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, disagreed to by the House, and the amendments of the House of Representatives to other amendments of the Senate to the said bill; and on motion of Mr. SHERMAN,

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and disagree to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate thereto, and that it agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. NESMITH.

PUNISHMENT OF CERTAIN CRIMES.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to make a report from a committee of conference, if the Senator will yield for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I submit the following report from a committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 604) entitled "An act to define and punish certain crimes therein named," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the two Houses of Congress agree to the Senate amendment made to said bill, with the following amendment, to wit: strike out the words "lawfully in the custody thereof" where they occur in the Senate amendment.

T. A. HENDRICKS,
IRA HARRIS,
J. A. J. CRESWELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WILLIAM LAWRENCE,
F. E. TROWBRIDGE,
A. J. ROGERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. CRESWELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 899.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not withdraw my motion for anything but the report of the conference committee. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senator will allow us some fifteen or twenty minutes to proceed with the consideration of some bills, which we can dispose of in that time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I cannot waive the motion. The motion of Mr. JOHNSON was agreed to. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

LAND DISTRICTS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. STEWART. While that order is being executed, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to submit a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 746) for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana. I ask that it be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 746) for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House agree to the Senate amendment to the said bill, with the following amendments: insert at the end of the word "for," in line four of the said amendment, the words "each of the Territories of Utah and;" insert at the end of the word "Montana," in line two, second section of said amendment, the word "Utah;" and at the end of the word "district," in line five of the same section, the words "and Utah districts;" and the title of the said bill shall be amended as follows: "An act to create the offices of surveyor general in the Territories of Utah and Montana, and establish a land office in the Territories of Utah, Montana, and Arizona."

WILLIAM M. STEWART,
DAVID T. PATTERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEORGE W. JULIAN,
SIDNEY T. HOLMES,
STEPHEN TABER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. POMEROY. If we are going into executive session, I move that that report be laid on the table.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have action on it soon.

Mr. POMEROY. I want to look into it. We have never yet agreed to have a surveyor general or land office in Utah.

The motion of Mr. POMEROY was agreed to.

TENURE OF OFFICE BILL.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to present to the Secretary of State the bill entitled "An act regulating the tenure of certain civil offices," together with the certificates of the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, showing that the said act was passed by a vote of two thirds of both Houses of Congress, after the same had been returned to the Senate by the President with his objections, and after the reconsideration of said act by both Houses of Congress, in accordance with the Constitution.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened at twelve o'clock midnight.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1220) to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the third committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1868, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

LYMAN TRUMBULL,
GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
GARRETT DAVIS,
ROSCOE CONKLING,
ROBERT C. SCHENCK,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate recede from all its amendments to the bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, except the forty-fourth amendment, and adhere to that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I trust that that course will be pursued. The amendments we shall lose will be the one in regard to the judges, which I think ought to be done, and some others of minor importance.

Mr. STEWART. I understand they have agreed to our proposition as to the salaries of the judges.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, they have not agreed to it. I am decidedly in favor of the motion made by the Senator from Illinois. I think the action of the House on this subject is, beyond all precedent, unreasonable. When we had the first committee of conference they agreed to everything except three amendments. There was no difficulty at all. When the others were explained the committee were perfectly willing to agree to them. The amendments on which the committee disagreed were the amendment giving $50,000 to the Secretary of the Treasury for extra clerk hire, the amendment increasing the salaries of three or four of our own officers, and their amendment with regard to their clerks. We proposed to them to withdraw the amendment increasing the salary of our own officers if they would withdraw theirs in regard to their clerks. They would not do that; and they held the other up with regard to the $50,000 extra to trade on, as they said. They were willing to agree to it if we would only agree to their clerks. Upon those three we separated, and came in here with our report.

Then a new committee was formed. That committee met them, and they agreed to almost everything again. They agreed a second time to the salary of the judges with slight amendments, and everything substantially, but came back upon their clerks. They made a report to this effect: that the matters agreed upon were so and so, and three left out that they did not agree upon. The House would not accept that report, but disagreed again to the whole. Now, the third committee have gone out, and they still stick at that very thing, and with a view to force us to adopt their illegal action for the third time with regard to their clerks.

Under these circumstances the Senate have either got to be bullied out of it, because it is on this bill, and yield that point, or lose the bill. There is only one way to assert our own dignity about it and our own right to judge, and that is to let the amendments that the House have not agreed to, which are of no pressing importance, and can be provided for at another time, go, and put the question to them straight, "Are you willing to sacrifice this bill on that amendment of yours to make good your illegal action for the third time in the face of our protest?" That is the question. I want them to decide the question and take the responsibility.

Mr. CONNESS. I am not at all satisfied with the proposition as made, and shall not be prepared to be satisfied with it. I do not see the necessity of the form of the proposition which is made by the Senator. He does not propose to pass the bill and come to an agreement, but by the sacrifice of certain amendments, one of which I feel a deep interest in—

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator if he would yield the right to the House of Representatives to appropriate money from the national Treasury in violation of law, as they themselves confess, in order to save this bill? That is the only question.

Mr. CONNESS. The question of the Senator is not pertinent nor relevant at all. I was going to show that the sacrifice of the amendments adverted to by the Senator, and which he says are of no particular consequence, but some of which I regard as of vital consequence, is to no purpose at all as proposed, because it is proposed to still maintain the difference with the House, and to put the onus upon the House of losing the bill, which they are evidently prepared to do.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know about that.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator replies that he does not know about that; but he wants that issue to be made; he is willing to sacrifice a proposition that I feel as valuable as that I retain my fingers upon my hands. The Senator may smile if he chooses; but I have just that earnestness in what I call a great measure that I am not willing to have it treated in that manner. I do not wish the issue to be made up in that way. I do not think that it is just to make it up in that way.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator says he does. I respectfully differ with the Senator. I do not think he is treating his co-Senators right when he thinks so. I think the Senator should give himself with all his length and his breadth to maintaining the sense of the Senate on the whole bill. I do not see what the Senator proposes to gain but the mere satisfaction of putting the onus upon the House upon a single naked amendment, and then being able to say to them, "Now yield this or lose the bill." Sir, I am not prepared to be ground up into powder between the upper and nether millstone in this way. It does happen that I have very little to say about what is done in conference committees, although I have some interest here; but I appeal to Senators not to do this thing.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that there is no other way of getting at this trouble. We have tried as far as we could in the conferences to save the amendment which the Senator refers to; but I do not see myself the immense and vital and enormous importance of having a geological survey made now or a month or two hence. But still the Senate conferees adhere to that amendment, and the House yielded. So with all the others, the salary of the judges, a much more important question. But the question is this: the House will not pass this bill unless we agree to enable them to pay for the third time what they undertook to appropriate in violation of law.

Mr. CONNESS. Then, if the Senator will permit me, why not adhere to all the amendments and make the contest with them on that?

Mr. SHERMAN. Simply because there is no use in that. They agree with us as to all the others. I know the second committee of conference came to an agreement on all the others.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Ohio will give way, I will relieve the Senator from California.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to be relieved.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The House of Representatives concurred in the forty-ninth amendment, which is "that the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to direct a geological survey, &c., of the Territories." That was agreed to by the House, and is a part of the bill; so that will relieve the Senator now from his point.

Mr. CONNESS. Well, sir, the Senator from California stated that he had nothing to do with the conference upon this bill, and he took the Senators at their word; and if the Senators misled him it is not his fault.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only way to present the question to the House is whether they are determined to defeat this bill or have this amendment. I am willing to defeat the bill fifty thousand times over rather than surrender that point. I remember this whole controversy. They forced this twenty per cent. twice, once two years ago, then again at the last session, when, at the close of the session, in order to get rid of the provision, we proposed to raise the pay of all employes twenty per cent. But that is not all. At the present session on the second conference we proposed to allow them to frame a bill fixing the pay of their own employes at Mr. McPHERSON'S figures, and they expressed themselves satisfied with that in the first instance, and by an amendment as a substitute for this section agreed to fix the pay of the employes of the two Houses. They went to work to make up a bill to satisfy themselves, but could not agree upon any proposition whatever, and demanded this particular thing. They said they could not yield it. My friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BUCKALEW,] with great patience and labor and care, tried to arrange with them a schedule of salaries, but could not get them to make any proposition.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator will permit me, I will say to him that I concur in his opinions on this subject fully; but I do not propose to sacrifice the other amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator's amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I am prepared to stand by the Senator on this question.

Mr. STEWART. I understand that the salary of the judges has been agreed to each time, only that it has been held back for the purpose of trading on.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No; they did not agree to the salaries of the judges as we had it.

Mr. STEWART. I regard that provision as of as much importance as anything in this bill. I believe we ought to do justice to these judges. I do not believe the judiciary should be placed in such a position as to be compelled to borrow money to live on. I believe it should be independent. I believe the just administration of the laws requires that they should be absolutely independent.

Mr. SHERMAN. That we agreed upon.

Mr. STEWART. I thought you were to waive that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now we have to waive the whole bill probably.

Mr. STEWART. I move that we insist upon that also.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That does not accomplish our purpose.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Nevada will listen to me a moment I think I can satisfy him how this matter stands. We have had three committees on this subject. All have been unable to agree with the House committees. I do not know whether it is proper to detail the conversations that occurred in the committee; but I am sure that this last committee made every effort it could to come to an agreement with the House, even to concede, as we thought, much to the House; and I will state that we gave up some amendments which the former committee of conference on the part of the House had agreed to; but we found we could not get any proposition. We proposed to the conferees of the House that they should pay their employes what they had by resolution illegally declared they would pay if they would deduct from it the twenty per cent. which we had by law paid them. They would not agree to that. The only proposition was, "You must pay what by a resolution irregularly passed has been promised, and nothing else." They disagreed then to the other amendments, and if we are to lose the bill any way—

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to make one remark right there. I have not seen one gentleman from the House nor one officer of the House that does not say in private conversation that that amendment is all wrong.

Mr. STEWART. I do not believe we are to lose the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have had three committees.

Mr. STEWART. But they have not had it before the House. I do not believe they will dare to defeat the bill on this matter.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The only way to determine that question is not by having half a dozen amendments, to which they disagree. Now, they have not agreed to the amendment about the judges. I am for the increased salaries of the judges, and while it is with great regret that I should give it, and I hope to pass it at the coming session of Congress, I do think the better course now to pursue is to give up all these amendments—and they are not of very much importance, except the one about the judges—and adhere then to our vote disagreeing with the House on this one proposition and send the bill back to them. Then, if they insist upon that compensation, which, as the Senator from Pennsylvania says, not a single member of the House, in private conversation, does not admit is improper, and lose the bill, we cannot help it.

Mr. STEWART. If the bill is carried with the amendment to which I allude, then justice will be done to these judges. If the bill is to be lost let it be lost with that provision in. Let us hold a bold front upon that, for I do not believe we have passed a more reasonable or a more just proposition this session than that. There is no proposition more just in the bill. Let that remain. Backing down from that is an admission that we were mistaken about it. I do hope that we shall insist upon that amendment. It will make no particular difference about the issue. Everybody knows why they defeat the bill, if it is defeated. It is no more likely to be defeated with this in than with it out. If we adhere to it and send it back I believe we shall get it. If we do not, let them take the whole responsibility.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We must take their proposition about the clerks, or they will not agree.

Mr. STEWART. The House has not insisted upon this.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, they have told us three times that we have got to take this thing without crossing a t or dotting an i, or they will not agree.

Mr. STEWART. Put this in and let it go with the rest.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is no use. The Senate understand that. The others are not agreed upon simply for the reason that they may say there are disagreements on other questions, as I understand it, because they have been agreed to once or twice substantially.

Mr. SHERMAN. They have all been substantially agreed to; but now it stands in that position that we have got to present the single issue alone. Otherwise, it may be said that the disagreement was about the salaries of the judges; that the House could not agree to raise their salaries. That is our difficulty. I want to put it exactly where the House must put itself on record on this subject. I am willing to lose the bill on it if they are.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to add in connection with what my friend from Maine has said—and I believe in discussing these reports of conferences it is proper that the Senate may act intelligently that we should state what took place in conference—when we endeavored to ascertain that this clerkship question was to be the turning point, and whether we could reconcile our differences on the other amendments, and were advancing propositions to reach that point so as to understand each other, we at once found that the Representatives of the House were determined it should not be left upon the clerks alone. They were not willing that that should be done. They were determined that there should appear to be a disagreement on other points, so that they would have some means to get out of taking the serious responsibility which they would have to take if it were confined to this clerkship question alone. Therefore it is perfectly manifest to me, although I think just as other Senators do that all our propositions are right, that in order to place the responsibility where it belongs and bring it to an issue we must leave that single proposition to them alone, to take it or to leave it with them, and nothing else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved and seconded that the Senate recede from all its amendments not agreed to by the House, saving the amendment named by the Senator from Illinois, striking out the section with regard to compensation to the employes of the House, and that the Senate adhere to that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILSON, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 1126, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1126) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendment: strike out the words "and fifty," in line four, and add at the end of said amendment the following:

Resolved, That the ownership of said bridge shall be and remain in the United States, and the Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company shall have the right of way over said bridge for all purposes of transit across the island and river upon the condition that the said company shall, before any money is expended by the Government, agree to pay and shall secure to the United States—first, half the cost of said bridge, and second, half the expense of keeping said bridge in repair; and upon guarantying said conditions to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, by contract or otherwise, the said company shall have free use of said bridge for purposes of transit, but without any claim to the ownership thereof.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the sixth amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows: strike out the words "the operations of;" and that the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the eighth amendment of the Senate.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the tenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

And that the Senate recede from their third amendment to the bill.

HENRY WILSON,
H. S. LANE,
S. J. KIRKWOOD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
THADDEUS STEVENS,
SAMUEL SHELLABARGER,
N. P. BANKS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The doors will now be considered closed.

The Senate resumed the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened to receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 604 to define and punish certain crimes therein named.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

The message also announced that the House further insisted on its disagreement to the forty-fourth amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, adhered to by the Senate, asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRANCIS C. LE BLOND of Ohio, Mr. THEODORE M. POMEROY of New York, and Mr. WILLIAM B. ALLISON of Iowa, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It appears from the message just received from the House that they ask for a further conference on the forty-fourth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, to which we adhered. I move that the Senate reconsider its vote adhering to that amendment, and further insist upon the amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the House. I will inquire of the Chair if there is any mode by which we can get before that conference, as it stands, the amendments from which we receded, though I do not know that it would be of any use. Suppose we reconsider the vote? They have asked a conference only on the forty-fourth amendment. How can we get the other amendments before the committee of conference?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate can reconsider both votes as well as one.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But if we reconsider both votes, the House having asked a conference now on the forty-fourth amendment alone, can we amend the terms on which we go into a conference again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate can reconsider its vote; but without the consent of the House the Chair thinks what has already been agreed to by the two Houses by their votes cannot be reopened.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That I understand; but there are certain amendments which have not been agreed upon between the two Houses from which the Senate receded. The Senate receded and abandoned them all, and put the question precisely upon this one.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They agreed to the action of the House by receding.

Mr. POLAND. We can reconsider that. They have not had any action since.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have notified the House that we receded. Is there any way to get that back?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adhered to its forty-fourth amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now moved that the Senate further insist on its forty-fourth amendment, and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the committee of conference on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. CONNESS, and Mr. BUCKALEW.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

OLIVER LUMPHREY.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up House bill No. 1127, for the relief of Oliver Lumphrey. It will take but a moment.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It requires the Paymaster General of the United States Army to cause to be paid, out of any money appropriated or which may hereafter be appropriated for the payment of the Army of the United States, to Oliver Lumphrey, late first lieutenant first New York cavalry, a sum equal to the pay of a first lieutenant of cavalry in active service, from the 30th of March, 1865, to the 13th of June, 1865, deducting therefrom any amount that he may have received as pay of a non-commissioned officer or private for the same period of time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1176, making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1868, and had agreed to the sixth amendment of the Senate with an amendment, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN A. KASSON of Iowa, Mr. N. P. BANKS of Massachusetts, and Mr. F. A. PIKE of Maine, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution of the House No. 226, extending the provisions of section two of an act entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. R. C. SCHENCK of Ohio, Mr. RALPH HILL of Indiana, and Mr. A. J. KUYKENDALL of Illinois, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 893) to enable the Secretary of War to carry out an agreement in relation to water-power for the arsenal at Rock Island, and a joint resolution (H. R. No. 304) in relation to the erection of a jail in the District of Columbia, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 532) for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands;

A bill (H. R. No. 346) for the relief of Hugh Leddy;

A bill (H. R. No. 710) to pay and discharge certain debts and expenditures to the corporation of the city of Washington;

A bill (H. R. No. 825) for the relief of Henry Rudd, of Henry county, Iowa;

A bill (H. R. No. 966) for the relief of Ernest Kleinschmidt, of Cincinnati, Ohio;

A bill (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1868;

A bill (H. R. No. 1059) for the relief of Sylvanus Sawyer and William E. Ward;

A bill (H. R. No. 1126) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1868, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 1168) for the relief of Elizabeth F. Chipman, widow of Major Charles Chipman, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 1220) to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 174) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and pay the claim of John R. Beckley;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of Almonson Eaton, receiver of public moneys for the land office at Stephens's Point, Wisconsin; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) for the relief of James J. Hudnall.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 303) to enable the Secretary of War to carry out an agreement in relation to water-power for the arsenal at Rock Island was read twice by its title.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask that the resolution be put on its passage.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I object. I wish to proceed with the deficiency bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think this will take no time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It must take time; it will require an explanation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The explanation will only take a moment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I object to anything until we get through with the deficiency bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DOOLITTLE in the chair.) The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 304) in relation to the erection of a jail in the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to proceed to the consideration of that bill. There is no time to examine it. We must pass it by guess, if at all.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to state that the Committee on Finance have had no opportunity to examine the bill, and I move that each item be acted upon as it is read. Some things we can explain; in others the explanation is rather feeble, and the Senate will do what they feel disposed to do about them. At this hour we cannot get any information about anything in the bill. Many things were put in by a vote of the House. Some things in it we do not understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the different items be read slowly and be considered as adopted, unless some one requires an explanation or an objection is made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be taken, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the objects hereinafter expressed, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, namely:

Department of the Interior, Pension Bureau: To meet deficiencies of the present fiscal year on account of pensions for Army widows and others under various acts, $10,000,000.

For contingent expenses, $10,000.

For Navy widows and orphans, $70,000: Provided, that said sum be transferred from the Navy pension fund.

The Secretary read the next items, as follows:

Engineer's Office:

To meet deficiencies of the present fiscal year on account of engineer officer having the supervision of the Union Pacific Railroad and branches, land-grant railroads, and wagon roads, namely:

For compensation of clerks, $3,800.

For contingencies, $500.

The Secretary read the next items, as follows:

For Capitol Extension:

For eight additional monolithic columns, $11,200.

For ventilating, $9,000.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

Census Office:

For the purpose of paying the amount due to certain United States marshals and their assistants for services rendered in taking the eighth census, in the year 1860, in the following States, namely: in the State of California, $9,460 48; in the State of Maine, $33 06; in the State of Ohio, $49 69; in the State of Oregon, $3,160 20; in the State of Kansas, $63 40; in the State of Kentucky, $9,311 50; in the State of Maryland, $4,781 40; in the State of Missouri, $8,343; in the State of Tennessee, $20,842 18; in the Territory of New Mexico, $784 69; in the Territory of Washington, $99 09; being in the aggregate $56,933 69: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid to or on account of any claimant who participated in the late rebellion or gave to it aid and comfort.

Mr. POMEROY. There never has been any deficiency in Arizona; but the Government has never paid for taking the census in Arizona at all. The precise amount I do not know.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There were a couple of bills received a short time since from the House of Representatives, one of them the naval appropriation bill, which I desire to have taken up now in order that conference committees may be appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill before the Senate will be laid aside informally for that purpose.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion by Mr. HENDRICKS, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriation for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1868, disagreed to by the House of Representatives and the amendment of the House to the sixth amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Without reading the action of the House, I move that the request for a committee of conference be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to know what the amendments are that are disagreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps they had better be read; we may agree to them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We made but five or six amendments, I think.

The Secretary proceeded to read the action of the House of Representatives, as follows:

Resolved, That the House concur in the second and fifth amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1868, and non-concur in the amendments numbered one, three, four, and seven.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have those amendments stated.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment is after line eleven to insert:

For the purchase of wharf adjoining the navy-yard, $135,000: Provided, That this sum shall cover the whole cost of the property, and it can be acquired on terms satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SHERMAN. Had we not better recede and pass the bill?

Mr. SUMNER. Is that the only point of difference?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us hear what the others are.

The SECRETARY. The third amendment is to strike out from line four, to the end of line eighteen on page 4, as follows:

Provided, That the offices of civil engineer, master machinist, master carpenter—

Mr. HENDRICKS. We know what that is.

Mr. SUMNER. Do they insert anything?

The SECRETARY. The Senate struck out that clause and the House refused to concur. The fourth amendment of the Senate was to strike out the following clause:

For pay of some suitable person appointed by the Secretary of the Navy to examine the archives of the Department and other sources of information and collect and collate facts which may illustrate the history of the United States Navy, $1,500.

The seventh amendment to which the House non-concur was to insert as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That no workingman in a navy-yard shall be required nor requested to contribute or pay any money for political purposes; nor shall any workingman be removed or discharged for political opinions; and any officer or employé of the Government who shall offend against this section shall be dismissed the service of the United States.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What do they do about that?

Mr. SUMNER. They non-concur.

The SECRETARY. And the House add to the sixth amendment of the Senate the following proviso:

Provided, That the title acquired shall be approved by the Attorney General, and the exchange shall be effected without expenditure from the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House, disagree to the amendment of the House to the sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

Mr. SUMNER. We had better recede from them all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to recede takes precedence of a motion to insist and agree to a conference. It is moved that the Senate recede from its amendments.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope we shall not do that. That would leave in the clause about "master carpenters," &c.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is already made. The other superseded it. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the committee of conference on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HENDRICKS, Mr. SPRAGUE, and Mr. WILLEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUPPLIES FOR WALLACE'S COMMAND.

On motion by Mr. HENDRICKS, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 226) extending the provisions of section two of an act entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is a little bill in regard to the supplies of the men engaged in the Morgan raid through Indiana which was discussed the other day. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the House. A member of the House feels a great anxiety about it, and he has asked me to do it; and he says that he thinks the matter can be readily adjusted if a committee should be appointed. I should like to have my colleague on that committee of conference, as he is very familiar with the subject. He is not here now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do think we ought not to go to a committee of conference on a little bill of that kind. The amendment of the Senate was that these persons who took the property must be acting quartermasters, and the House disagree to that, and insist that the persons who took the property—

Mr. HENDRICKS. A few minutes ago a colleague of mine from the House came to see me about it, and he said that if the request for a committee of conference were agreed to he had no doubt it could be made satisfactory to both sides. I do not know much about this bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Everything it seems must go to the committee of conference.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is important to pass the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I would either recede or let the House do so. I would not send it to a committee of conference.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am willing, if the Senate is, to recede.

Mr. HOWE. We ought not to recede.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think we ought to have such a principle in any bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not suppose any damage will be done if we recede. The member of the House whose district is most interested says the use of these very technical words will defeat the purpose of the bill. I move that the Senate recede, and let the bill be the House bill.

Mr. HOWE. I think it is a very dangerous kind of legislation, to make the Government liable for what everybody may have taken for the use of troops employed on that raid, whether he was an officer or not; not even limiting it to those who were acting as quartermasters.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We had better not have a controversy about it. The member of the House is willing to have a committee of conference. I am not choice about it. But it is so well understood among us in Indiana that I apprehend there would be no trouble under the bill as the House passed it. We want to pay simply for the horses that were taken into the service and used by the Government and retained by the Government at the close of the raid.

Mr. HOWE. It is not for the payment of horses.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is principally, my colleague says.

The motion to recede was not agreed to—ayes ten, noes not counted.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the conference committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. POMEROY, Mr. TRUMBULL, and Mr. HARRIS.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the next item of the bill, as follows:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the indebtedness incurred for the Indian service in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington, in the years 1860, 1861, and 1862, $40,000: Provided, That such payments shall be made only to the original owner of the claims, and upon satisfactory proof furnished the accounting officer.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that clause ought to be stricken out, unless some Senator can give us an explanation of it.

Mr. NESMITH. I hope it will not be stricken out. That was the subject of very full investigation by the Senate last year. The Senate placed it on the Indian appropriation bill, and in the committee of conference an objection was raised to it, and it was said it ought to go on the deficiency bill. Then we got it on the deficiency bill. The facts were all presented to the Senate. It went on the deficiency bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has it been considered by a committee of the Senate?

Mr. NESMITH. Yes, sir, last year; and then, contrary to the pledges that were made at that time, it was stricken out of the deficiency bill. Now it is put on by the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It passed the Senate twice at the last session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to it if it has been considered by the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I were disposed to take up the time of the Senate I could prove to the satisfaction of every one that it ought to pass. It is as honest a claim as ever was presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Isaac Strohm for additional services as a clerk in the Treasury Department from January 1, 1854, to March 1, 1855, at the same rate paid for similar additional services prior to that date, $466 67.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a private claim, and although it is a small amount I think we had better strike it out, and I make that motion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suggest to the honorable Senator from Ohio that it is hardly a private claim. The Treasury asks it to enable the Treasury to cover a deficiency for the employment, and it is only $400.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator know that the Treasury asks it?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That is what it says.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the ordinary form of appropriation.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is to enable the Treasury Department to cover a deficiency in the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is an old claim from 1854, and was struck off then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

Library of Congress:

To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ two additional assistants, commencing April 1, 1867, $2,400; and there is hereby added to the contingent fund of said Library the sum of $1,000, to be expended for temporary help.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is recommended by the Committee on the Library.

The next item was read, as follows:

For six iron stairways, repairs, and repainting in the Library of Congress, and for a new skylight in the central Library, $5,260.

The following items, to which no amendment was proposed, were read:

Public Buildings and Grounds:

To pay for completing the repairs and furnishing the Executive Mansion, $35,000: Provided, That no further payments shall be made on any accounts for repairs and furnishing the Executive Mansion until such accounts shall have been submitted to a joint committee of Congress, and approved by such committee.

To replace the bruised and worn copper water-pipes or roof gutters of the Capitol building with iron pipes, $3,000.

To supply a deficiency in fuel for the President's House and for the Capitol, $2,000.

To pay for a poudrette pit at the President's stable, $516 19.

To pay for repairing streets passing along Government reservations where they were washed away by the great freshet in October last, $1,500.

To pay for sewer in the rear of H street, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets west, to abate a public nuisance, $2,500.

To thoroughly repair the roof of the Executive Mansion, $2,500.

To pay deficiency and keep in repair the bridge at or near Little Falls, Potomac river, $3,350.

The next item was read, as follows:

For defraying the expenses of the House of Correction for Boys in the District of Columbia, for the current year, $25,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know anything about that, and I will inquire of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia if he has any information on the subject?

Mr. MORRILL. Let it be read again.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I believe it is one of those establishments gotten up last year. I wish the chairman of the District Committee would attend to it.

The Secretary again read the item.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out the clause.

Mr. SUMNER. What does the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia say?

Mr. MORRILL. There was no such thing before us.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next items, as follows:

For deepening and improving Westport harbor, Connecticut, $2,500.

For dredging and maintaining the channel in the river Thames, near Norwich, in the State of Connecticut, to complete the work, $36,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In regard to these two items, both in the State of Connecticut, one of them appropriating $2,500 for the channel at Westport harbor, Connecticut, I think is right, from a letter that has been written to me on the subject. With regard to the other, $36,000 for the river Thames, near Norwich, Connecticut, I do not know anything about it. I have no information on the subject, and I understand it was put in on motion in the House. I do not deem it safe to let that go in without a consultation with the House on the subject. I therefore move that the second clause be stricken out. I do not object to the appropriation for Westport. That was put in the other bill, and struck out because we had no papers before us on the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I desire at this point, if my friend from Maine will allow me, to submit a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the report.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the fourth committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the forty-fourth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

G. F. EDMUNDS,
JOHN CONNESS,
CHARLES R. BUCKALEW,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
F. C. LE BLOND,
T. M. POMEROY,
W. B. ALLISON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The report of the committee of conference being received—I suppose no vote need be taken on that, for there is nothing to agree to—I move that the Senate again adhere to its forty-fourth amendment to the bill. I will state that we have had a free conference; the House committee had nothing to propose, except that we should take that section of the bill, simple and pure; we urged upon them the injustice and impropriety of the section itself; that that debt, if it was a debt, or the honor and faith of the House, if it had been pledged by resolutions in violation of law, had been provided for by the vote of the 28th of July, 1866, in the bill giving them the money, the twenty per cent., to pay it with; that it had been submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury, and he decided that it was for that purpose, applicable by law to it, that it discharged all their obligations. In addition to that we urged upon them the fact that we had receded on our side from every affirmative proposition we had made in order to compose the difference. In addition to that we urged upon them the fact that there were to be provided for in this bill hundreds of creditors of the Government, to whom the public faith was pledged, as both Houses agreed, and that they ought not to force us to do what we believed to be wrong at the expense of joining them in a breach of public faith. While the House committee appeared to accede personally to the justice of all these views but the first one, and pretty much to that, they said they felt obliged, according to the temper of the House, to insist that we should take it as it stood. We thus disagreed. I hope the Senate will adhere this time, and stay adhered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. DOOLITTLE in the chair.) The Senator from Vermont, upon the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, moves that the Senate do adhere to its vote on the forty-fourth amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the following item:

For dredging and maintaining the channel of the river Thames near Norwich, in the State of Connecticut, to complete the work, $36,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike that out. I have no sort of information on the subject. It is not in any estimates that I have seen nor anything else.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope it will not be stricken out. If I had the talent and capacity of my friend from Michigan, [Mr. CHANDLER,] who explains the St. Clair flats to us so clearly and fully, I think I could astonish the Senate by showing what an amount of commerce there is up that short river Thames, and how great the necessity is for this appropriation. The Governors of the States of New Hampshire and Massachusetts early in the session sent petitions here requesting Congress to make appropriations to aid the navigation of this river. Although a short river and unimportant in some respects, it is the channel of a vast deal of commerce. There is a vast deal of property passing up and down the river between the New England States and New York; and it is absolutely necessary in order that that commerce may receive reasonable facilities to have the channel of the river, which is occasionally obstructed by mud, &c., that accumulates flats, dredged as is provided for in the bill. It is of great importance to that section of the country. It is not a local interest really, but an interest affecting the States of Massachusetts, Vermont, and New Hampshire almost as much as the State of Connecticut. It would be a very great injury to those States if the navigation of this river is not so improved as to give commerce up and down it reasonable facilities. I hope it will not be stricken out. The sum is not large, and it is to complete the work.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to submit a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive the report.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the committee of conference, on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 1178, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to amendments of the Senate numbered twelve, sixteen, seventeen, twenty-two, thirty-two, thirty-nine, forty-five, forty-six, forty-seven, forty-eight, forty-nine, and fifty-two, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered six, eighteen, nineteen, forty-one, and fifty-three.

That the Senate recede from their thirty-fifth amendment, and agree to said clause with an amendment, as follows: strike out "twenty-five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "one thousand," and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their forty-second amendment, and agree to said clause, with an amendment as follows: on page 18, line twelve of the bill, after the word "mutes" insert the words "not exceeding ten in number," and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the forty-third amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "And be it further enacted, That the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby abolished, and the chief Engineer of the Army shall perform all the duties now required by law of said Commissioner, and shall also have the superintendence of the Washington aqueduct and all the public works and improvements of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, unless otherwise provided by law. And the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives shall hereafter appoint the members of the Capitol police; and the Senate agree to the same."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the twentieth amendment of the Senate.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the fifty-sixth amendment of the Senate, with an amendment as follows: strike out all of said House amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That all printing of any kind whatever by the Executive Departments shall be executed by the Government Printer where practicable, and if not, at such office as may be designated by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at rates not exceeding the current rates for such printing, and the House agree to the same."

JOHN SHERMAN,
IRA HARRIS,

J. W. NESMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

THADDEUS STEVENS,
H. VAN AERENAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SUMNER. Does the Senate recede from its amendment to pay the rebel assessors?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; I will gratify my friend by saying that we recede from that.

Mr. SUMNER. I am very glad of that. Then the six hours' debate here was not in vain.

Mr. SHERMAN. The result would have been the same if the Senator had not debated the subject at all, probably. He might have saved us all that. If there is any amendment that any Senator takes an interest in I will answer any question; if not, I suppose the vote may as well be taken on the report.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I wish to make one inquiry with regard to the conclusion of the report. What public printing is to be given by the Clerk of the House? I will ask for the reading of that portion of the report again.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can explain it probably in a shorter time. The House inserted an amendment providing that any printing that could not be done by the Public Printer might be given out to other printing offices by the Clerk of the House. The amendment as agreed upon by the conference committee provides that all printing ordered by the Executive Departments shall be done at the Government Printing Office; but if, for any cause, the Public Printer cannot execute it, then the Clerk of the House may select the place where it is to be executed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Do I understand that all the printing of the Government in all its departments, except that which may be executed at the office of the Public Printer, may be distributed and dispersed over the country by the Clerk of the House of Representatives?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; this does not apply to printing blanks, &c. It only applies to the printing here. It is all done now by the Public Printer; but in some cases it is said by the conferees on the part of the House that the Executive Departments send a great deal of printing that might have been done at the public office to jobbing offices in this city, merely for the purpose of giving patronage to newspapers. That was urged by the House conferees. We have cut that off so far as we could by requiring all printing of that character to be done by the Public Printer; and when it cannot be done by the Public Printer, then we leave the Clerk of the House to designate who should do it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It seems to me to be a very singular provision indeed to give the Clerk of the House of Representatives, who is not here in the interval between the sessions, control over the printing of the public Executive Departments of the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. We presumed there would be nothing of that kind done; that it would all be done at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I think that part of the report which places the public buildings and the Capitol under the charge of the engineer department is wrong. There is no correct principle on which it can be sustained.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend is mistaken in that regard. The law now is very specific, and places the public buildings and grounds here under the direction of the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House. That is the present law. This simply provides that the appropriations made for the public works here shall be expended under the direction of the chief Engineer. He will have no voice or power of management in regard to the public buildings or grounds.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Who will have?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate have it, under the law, and we do not change the law, except that the police who are now appointed by the Commissioner of Public Buildings are hereafter to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to hear that provision read in regard to the Engineer.

The Secretary read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby abolished, and the chief Engineer of the Army shall perform all the duties now required by law of said Commissioner, and shall also have the superintendence of the Washington aqueduct and of the public works and improvements of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, unless otherwise provided by law. And the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives shall hereafter appoint the members of the Capitol police.

Mr. MORRILL. The proposition is open to the criticism of the Senator from Rhode Island, of course.

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

Mr. MORRILL. The chief Engineer is to be substituted for the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. SHERMAN. The language is precisely the same as in the original Senate amendment, except that in place of a civil engineer, to be appointed by the advice and consent of the Senate at a salary of $4,000 a year, we insert the chief engineer of the Army. The language is precisely the language passed by the Senate. The only difference is that we give the authority and the disbursements of these funds to the chief engineer. The House conferees, I thought with a good deal of force, said there was no propriety now in abolishing one office at $2,500 salary and making another at $4,000 for the purpose of giving patronage to the administration. Now, the control is given to the chief engineer.

Mr. MORRILL. That is not the difficulty that occurs to me. The Commissioner of Public Buildings has the entire custody of the public grounds and public buildings in this District by law. Now, what the Senate proposed in its original amendment was to substitute for the Commissioner of Public Buildings a professional engineer, who should have the charge of all the public buildings and grounds and improvements and of the aqueduct. By this amendment we give it to the chief engineer of the Army, and the chief engineer of the Army is to have the care of the public buildings, including this building and all the other buildings, because the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate have only the appointment of the police. This report gives that appointment to the Sergeants-at-Arms of the two Houses. That is all they have. They have the appointment of the police; but the custody of this building and all the public buildings and the superintendence and care of the public gardens are by this proposition devolved upon the chief engineer of the Army.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend is mistaken. The law is express that the custody of this building shall be entirely under the direction and control of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, and in them alone. They exercise that power.

Mr. MORRILL. They exercise the power of supervision; but it is all under the direction and control, under the care, in other words, of the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all; they can exclude the Commissioner of Public Buildings from the Capitol entirely. His only connection with it is that he spends the money in pursuance of our appropriations. That is the law.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well. All the appropriations that are made for the care and custody of the public buildings and grounds are and have been under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and that is all to be transferred now to the chief engineer of the Army.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; and that is right.

Mr. MORRILL. I protest that we ought not to put ourselves in that position. I do not believe the chief engineer of the Army can attend to it personally, or that he ought to be expected to attend to it. It is not a thing that can be devolved upon him.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Does this make the engineer a disbursing officer?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCKALEW. With no security to the Government?

Mr. SHERMAN. We put the whole thing under the charge of the engineer department.

Mr. MORRILL. That is all wrong.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me answer the Senator's criticism. The amendment prepared by the honorable Senator gave all this power to a civil engineer, to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, at a salary of $4,000, without bonds, without any stipulations as to bonds. This proposition transfers that power proposed to be given to a civil engineer to an officer of the Army of high grade. In the one case, if we had taken the Senate amendment as it was sent to the House, as a matter of course we should have had no security; we should have had a new civil officer at a salary of $4,000, without any security whatever. The House objected to that, and said we ought to insert an officer of the Army, or some officer whose commission at least would be the very highest security; and I think that is the best way myself.

Mr. CRAGIN. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. The Commissioner of Public Buildings has the appointment of quite a large number of men, those who superintend the draw-bridge, lamplighters, the watchmen on the Capitol extension and some of the public squares. As I understand it, this amendment abolishes the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings, but does not give the appointment of those offices to anybody else.

Mr. SHERMAN. It gives the appointment to the engineer.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not so sure about that. I should like to hear the amendment read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the amendment in relation to the chief engineer.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very much pleased indeed, for one, that the conference committee have made this change. I made the proposition in the first place, in lieu of the original provision that the Senate should elect this officer, which I thought was clearly unconstitutional, on the spur of the moment, that the Quartermaster General should have charge of this business. On the suggestion of several Senators I was about to modify it, and had so made a memorandum, giving it to the chief engineer of the Army of the United States, an officer whom it appeared to me on reflection it was more suitable to intrust with this charge. Afterward, on the suggestion of some Senators, my friend from Illinois in particular, who thought it should be a civil engineer, I submitted the proposition, which was finally adopted, that it should be left to the charge of a civil engineer to be appointed, &c. My own judgment is that if we are to abolish the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings—and we all agree to that—no more appropriate functionary could possibly be selected than the chief engineer. We all know that the actual duties are performed, not by the chief officer, whether you call him a Commissioner of Public Buildings or the Quartermaster General or a civil engineer or what; the actual duties are performed by subordinates; but the general superintendent to control the men, who compels responsibility, is the person whom we appoint. Now, the chief engineer of the Army, a man of science, a man of education, a man of honor and integrity, a man of impartiality, is, I think, above all others the appropriate person to whom this trust should be confided, because it involves more than almost any other matter that we have to do with here, questions of practical science and engineering, of architecture, of science, of taste. I am very glad indeed that the conference committee have made this change, and I hope the Senate will agree to it without a division.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I predict that at the next session, before it is very far advanced, the Senate and the other House will change this provision.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the office of chief engineer of the Army is a mere sinecure, it is well enough to give him something to do; but if he is the engineer of the Army of the United States I apprehend he has enough to do without seeing to putting down the carpet in the President's House and without looking after the President's stables. I have not a great deal of interest in this matter. I think this proposition ought not to be agreed to, for the reason that the care of the public buildings here does not belong to the Army; it is not a part of the duties of the Army; it has no business with the Army; and I think it is degrading the office of the principal engineer of the Army to compel him to take charge of any such concern as this.

Then the other provision, giving the Clerk of the House of Representatives the power to appoint newspapers to do printing, merely to give money to some proprietor when extra printing shall be done, is a thing which will certainly be abused as time rolls round. It is just the natural kind of abuse, just one of those rotten places where we find just that kind of thing. Senators say it is all right; it is intended to stop an abuse.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is hardly worth while to prolong the debate; but let me tell the Senator that it is said that the Executive Departments, instead of complying with the law and sending all printing to the Government Printing Office, have employed in this city and elsewhere quite a number of persons who have just been given jobs at jobbing prices for merely publishing political pamphlets. I do not vouch for that statement; but that is the allegation. This proposition will cut up that abuse. The Clerk of the House will not designate any newspapers, because the effect will be that all this printing of the character described will be sent to the Public Printer as the law specifically requires. But if any is to be given out, I would rather allow the Clerk of the House to do it than anybody else. I hope there will be none given.

Mr. HENDRICKS. No doubt Mr. McPHERSON would make a very able selection of papers. That is all there is to that. During the war it was impossible for all the printing to be done at the Government Office. Therefore there had to be employments outside. The War Department required such an immense amount of blanks that they could not be printed at the Public Printing Office. The amount of printing required was enormous. I was aware of the fact that some printing had to be done outside of the Government Printing Office. Now, my opinion is there is no occasion for this proposition. I should think so, without knowing very much about it. How it is I do not know. I think we had better not concur in this report, and let these things be fixed up right by another committee.

The report was concurred in.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, the question pending being on the motion to strike out the following clause:

For dredging and maintaining the channel of the river Thames, near Norwich, in the State of Connecticut, to complete the work, $36,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I really hope this appropriation will not be stricken out. This is all there is for the State of Connecticut, except an item of $2,500. It is a small sum; it is really needed. It is beneficial to the States north of us, Massachusetts, Vermont, and New Hampshire, as much as to Connecticut. A vast amount of the manufactured goods and merchandise passing over the railroads that center at Norwich goes thence by water to New York, passing on this river, and goods from New York for those States pass up this river. It is a matter of great importance to the commerce of that section that the navigation of this river be improved. I really hope the clause will be retained in the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no time to debate this matter; but I wish simply to say that there is no proof before the committee, and I can find none anywhere, that this appropriation is recommended by anybody except the member of the House from Connecticut, Mr. BRANDEGEE, who moved it, who said he had a statement from some engineer. I consider such legislation entirely unsafe, and I therefore move to strike out the clause. There will probably be a committee of conference on this bill, and then if the House can explain this item satisfactorily I shall be very glad to allow the appropriation to stand. I do not regard improvements of this kind as being for the benefit of any particular State, but as being for the public advantage. I only want to be sure that they come before us properly.

Mr. FOSTER. This sum is less than the estimate made by the engineer who has surveyed the work. It was recommended years ago; but during the war money was not appropriated for the purpose, and so it lay by for years without any appropriation. No appropriation except a very few thousands, less than $10,000, till this year has been made for more than ten years past.

The motion to strike out was rejected—ayes eleven, noes not counted.

The Secretary read the next clause of the bill, as follows:

For services rendered by the late F. M. Rotch, in furnishing an original article "on cattle" for the Agricultural Report of 1861, $212 50, to be paid to the widow.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike that out. We do not know anything about it.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to pay to M. Reynolds, John F. McNally, Patrick Gilfoyle, Peter Kyle, and John McCarthy $100 each for extra labor upon the President's garden and grounds prior to the 4th of March, 1865, $500.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out that item. We do not know anything about it.

The motion was agreed to.

The next two items were read, as follows:

For the purpose of enabling the Director of the Mint to purchase publications relating to metals and the manipulations thereof for the library of the Mint, $1,000.

For defraying the expenses incurred by the Department of State by sending telegraphic dispatches over the Atlantic cable, $30,000 for the current year.

The next item was read, as follows:

To enable the joint Committee on the Library to pay the balance due P. R. Fendall for labor employed in editing the writings of James Madison, $2,100.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike that out.

The motion was agreed to.

The following items, to which no amendment was moved, were next read:

For preservation and care of the unfinished custom-house building at Charleston, South Carolina, and fitting up the interior to provide suitable offices for the use of the United States, including court-rooms, $25,000.

To enable the Light-House Board to erect in the lower bay of New York one or more permanent beacons, $45,000.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase the stereotype plates and copyright of the American Coast Pilot, $20,000.

The next item was read, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the provision of the seventh section of the act of Congress entitled "An act granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over public lands, and for other purposes," approved July 23, 1866, $36,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have an explanation of that from somebody.

Mr. STEWART. I can give an explanation. It is recommended by the Interior Department. In the bill for the disposal of the mining lands there is a section providing that new land offices may be created where the exigencies of the case may require by the President. He has created none; but there are two or three that it is very necessary to create, and several will be created when that bill comes into operation if there be an appropriation for the purpose. We do not know exactly how many will be wanted yet; but when that bill gets fairly into operation we shall have to have more land offices to do the work. This is to meet that contingency.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think under the circumstances we had better defer it to the next session, for I really do not know anything about it.

Mr. CONNESS. Some of these districts will have to be established now. Instructions have been sent out from the General Land Office to put the act in operation, and no more of this money will be used than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have no estimate.

Mr. CONNESS. I beg the Senator's pardon; the full estimates on the subject were sent in from the Interior Department. They may have been left with the other House; but I have seen them all complete, recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and indorsed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know how there can be a full estimate of things not yet decided upon. The objection I have is that it seems to be in advance of anything to be done. If we were not to have a session again until next December there might be a reason for this haste; but we shall have a session immediately on the close of this, and the matter can be attended to then with some understanding on the subject.

Mr. CONNESS. Does the honorable Senator mean to say that there will be a session for legislative business?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no doubt there will be some legislative business done.

Mr. CONNESS. This is an appropriation bill, and this item belongs here. It has been properly estimated for by the regular Department. It seems to challenge our friend's jealousy because it connects itself with the mineral lands.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not like that sort of observation that because I do my duty and stand up here to make inquiries and to call attention to a subject I am to be accused of jealousy because this relates to the mineral lands. The Senator ought to know better. That sort of thing is very much out of place, I think, in the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. It is not half so much out of place as this ebullition; and I intend that the honorable Senator, for whom I feel all the respect I can feel for anybody, shall stand such remarks as I legitimately make on subjects affecting the people whom I represent here. Mr. President, this appropriation has been regularly estimated for. It need not excite the Senator's jealousy, nor any other Senator's jealousy. I think I did not use the word "jealousy" before; but the Senator need not get angry, because I said nothing that should anger him or any other man. Now, sir, I do not intend to take lectures of this kind.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the gentleman does not intend to take lectures of this kind he should be decent in his language. Here, in conducting a bill through the Senate, I make an objection to an appropriation proposed, and the Senator said that it ought not to excite my jealousy because it referred to the mineral lands. That is what he said. Is not that an intimation that it is a personal jealousy I feel on account of the locality? If it is not I do not understand language. Now, then, I think that it was not treating me decently, I having to look out for this bill, to accuse me of personal motives on account of localities, because I called for information and objected to an item. If the Senator regards this as a lecture, he can take it. I cannot bear everything more than any other man.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator has not been called upon in this case to bear with anything from me. The Senator draws upon his imagination to make a case. I have no feeling in the matter. I had none in the words I uttered. I have no feelings toward the Senator now but the most exceedingly kind ones, and he cannot induce me to have any other. I merely meant to be understood that because this is for a service far distant with which the Senator cannot be so well acquainted he need not therefore oppose it. Is there any harm in that?

Mr. STEWART. I simply want to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that applications have been made for about twelve additional land offices, and the President declines to authorize them unless there is an appropriation in advance; so that there is a standstill. The instructions have gone out, and they are very anxious to proceed under the law. The estimates were made then in consequence of his refusal on our application for two or three land offices for California and Nevada and one of the Territories. Nothing can be done until this appropriation is made in advance. There will be several land offices needed, but there will be nothing done until an appropriation is made; and unless it is made, we shall not have the benefit of the law.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have called the attention of the Senate to it. The Senate will decide as it pleases.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask for the reading of the item proposed to be stricken out.

The Secretary read the clause, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the provision of the seventh section of the act of Congress entitled "An act granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over public lands, and for other purposes," approved July 23, 1866, $36,000.

Mr. CONNESS. I will repeat simply that this item finds its way into this bill on estimates regularly made by the Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior and placed before the House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is the Secretary of the Interior to dig ditches?

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir; that is a quotation from the title of the act; but the act provides for the sale of the mineral lands. The Senator understands that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is this money to be spent for?

Mr. CONNESS. Such of it as is necessary for the establishment of land offices to make it convenient to enter mining lands for sale. You want money from them, I suppose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have nothing further to say, sir, except that I must vote against it.

Mr. CONNESS. I call the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONNESS. If the communications from the Department accompanied the bill, as they should have done, I am sure the Senate would not strike out this entire amount and leave us without land offices.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The matter can be settled in a conference committee.

Mr. CONNESS. There is nothing in the world upon which the honorable Senator has moved to strike out this item but that he thinks it is too large. He does not know any of the facts of the case.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will inquire of the Senator if he knows of any points at present where these offices ought to be located?

Mr. CONNESS. Certainly. In the State of California, one half of which perhaps is occupied for mining purposes, no part of the land has ever yet been entered in any land office. The State has fine land districts. One is situated at the city of San Francisco; one at Stockton, two hundred miles distant; one at Tulare, two hundred miles distant; another at Humboldt, on the coast near Oregon, and one at Marysville—most conveniently located for the agricultural lands, but for the entry of mining lands not located at all; so that there will have to be a readjustment and an addition made to these districts. It is provided for by law; and no dollar of this money will be used but what shall become absolutely necessary; and no demand will be made for the establishment of a district but what the land department shall deem right and necessary.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, McDougall, Morgan, Ross, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wilson—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Doolittle, Fowler, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Morrill, Norton, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Willey, and Williams—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Cowan, Creswell, Dixon, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Guthrie, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Nesmith, Patterson, Poland, Riddle, and Yates—18.

So the motion to strike out was rejected.

The Secretary read the second section of the bill, as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the unexpended balance of the appropriations heretofore made for defraying the expenses of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Nebraska, is hereby diverted and set aside for the purpose of procuring a geological survey of Nebraska, said survey to be prosecuted under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out that section.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary read the third section of the bill, as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That for removing the wreck of a vessel and the sand bar occasioned thereby, in the main ship channel of Sandy Hook, in accordance with the report of General Humphreys, chief of the United States Engineers, and to be expended under the direction of the War Department, $6,000, or so much of said sum as may be necessary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if he knows anything about that?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir. I understand there is a vessel sunk there; and an appropriation is necessary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think it had better be stricken out unless we know something more about it. I move to strike out the section.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary read the fourth section of the bill, as follows:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That to enable the Secretary of War to carry out the award of the Department in favor of the heirs and legal representatives of George Fisher, deceased, for military spoils taken by the United States troops during the war with the Creek Indians, the appropriation contained in the first section of the original act for the relief of the claimants, approved April 12, 1848, shall not be allowed to lapse in consequence of the delay in the adjustment, but the same is hereby reappropriated and made available; and that the rescinding resolution, approved March 2, 1861, suspending the case be, and the same is hereby repealed: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall examine the said award and see that no taint of fraud or mistake in calculation attaches thereto.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out that section. We cannot ascertain anything about it.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary read the fifth section of the bill, in these words:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That upon all merchandise gaugable by law hereafter exported upon which drawback or return is allowed, and upon all goods gaugable by law withdrawn from bonded warehouses for export, there shall be levied and collected by the collectors of the several ports ten cents per cask.

The amendment was agreed to.

The sixth section was next read, as follows:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the gaugers at the port of New York shall receive, from and after the 1st day of April, 1867, an annual salary of $2,000: Provided, That the amount of compensation of said officers as hereby established shall not exceed in any fiscal year the amount of fees earned by them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I desire to inquire of the Senator from New York if he thinks that is right? I do not know anything about it.

Mr. MORGAN. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I make no objection.

The Secretary read the seventh section of the bill, as follows:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the second section of an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved April 7, 1866, is hereby so amended as to authorize and require the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the contractors, Butler & Carpenter, the sum of $20,000 in full of all their claims for indemnity therein referred to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike that out.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary read the eighth section of the bill, as follows:

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the surplus sum of $2,000, now standing on the books of the Treasury to the credit of a fund to enable the joint Committee on the Library to carry out a contract with William H. Powell, authorized by a joint resolution approved March 2, 1865, for a picture illustrative of some naval victory, (said sum being in excess of the amount required to carry out said contract,) is hereby transferred to the fund for the purchase of books for the Library of Congress.

Mr. SUMNER. That is a good appropriation.

The Secretary read the ninth section, as follows:

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That when the entire compensation of any marshal of a district court of the United States, as reported to the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the third section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1863, shall be less than the sum of $2,000 per annum, including all fees and emoluments received for services rendered by deputy, the difference, to be ascertained and allowed by the proper accounting officer of the Treasury, shall be paid to him therefrom; that the clerks and bailiffs of the courts of the United States, appointed in pursuance of the act above referred to, shall, in lieu of all other compensation, be allowed the sum of three dollars per day, to be paid by the marshal and included in his accounts, the compensation to be given only for actual attendance; and when both the circuit and district courts of the United States are in session at one time, to be paid only for attendance upon one court: Provided, That in lieu of all other compensation allowed to the clerks and bailiffs of the circuit and district courts of the United States held in the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, New Orleans, and San Francisco, they shall each be allowed and paid for their services the sum of $940 per annum, to be paid by and included in the accounts of the marshal of such district out of any money of the United States in his hands; the compensation provided by this act to commence with the present fiscal year; and the temporary clerks in the Quartermaster General's office shall receive the same pay as clerks of class one.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know nothing about that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Marshals get a salary of $250, and this provides that if their fees and emoluments are not enough to make it $2,000 we shall make up the difference.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike it out. I should like to know how it got into this bill.

Mr. POLAND. I wish to object to striking out this section. In relation to the temporary clerks in the quartermaster's department, I think the provision made for them is very just. There are but very few of them now left in the department, and they are paid by the month. This section provides for bringing them up to $1,200 a year, the lowest class of clerks in the Departments.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We can settle that part of it in a committee of conference.

Mr. POLAND. I do not see any necessity for striking it out.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator will take the pains to put that part of the section in proper shape and in the right place in the bill I shall be obliged to him; but it has no right there where it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section will be passed over for the present.

The Secretary read the tenth section, as follows:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the deputy surveyor at the port of San Francisco be paid the same compensation annually that is now paid to the deputy collector at said port.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know what that is.

Mr. CONNESS. I will state that the salary of the deputy surveyor of that port until last year was $3,000; but last year it was cut down in the general reduction to $2,500, with a reservation that has not been exercised by the Department, and this is put in to make it what it was before. The intention was not under the law of last year to cut down that salary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does the deputy surveyor receive $2,500 now?

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is not that enough?

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir. He is paid in greenbacks, and the salary does not amount to a great deal there, and cannot support him. The House has seen fit to put it back where it was before the law of last year. The Senator from New York knows what was done then.

Mr. MORGAN. The salaries of deputy surveyors were advanced $500 at New York and several other ports. San Francisco was included in the $2,500 class. It was supposed to be an advance on all of them; but it was a reduction in that one case.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What does the deputy surveyor at New York city get?

Mr. MORGAN. Two thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. CONNESS. The chairman of the Committee on Finance, having been Secretary of the Treasury, must be aware that the customs officers in San Francisco generally receive twenty-five per cent. more than is paid to the same grade of officers on this side. This officer's allowance was brought down in this manner without any intention to do it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask whether it would not be wise to hold him there in order to induce the people of that region to change their views and have some national banks?

Mr. CONNESS. I regret very much that they have not national banks; but as soon as you give us capital enough they will be established there.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does the Senator from New York think this section is right?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I make no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill has been concluded.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have several amendments to offer, which were agreed to in the legislative appropriation bill, but finally left out by the final action of the Senate. I move on page 6, after line nine, to insert:

For temporary clerks in the Treasury Department, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to classify the clerks authorized according to the character of their services.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the notice required by the fourth section of the act entitled "An act to pay in part for publishing the debates in Congress, and for other purposes," approved July 4, 1861, is hereby given that Congress will, in two years from the close of the present Congress, abrogate the provisions of the first and second sections of said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to insert as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be hereby authorized to appoint in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, in addition to the clerks now authorized in said office, twenty-eight clerks of class one; twenty-four of class two; eighteen of class three; and ten of class four; said clerkships to expire at the end of two years; and a sum sufficient to pay the salaries of said clerks from the date of their appointment to the 30th of June, 1867, and for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1868, be and the same is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I offer one more amendment:

And be it further enacted, That if the Supreme Court shall in any one year direct its reporter to publish a second volume for such year of its decisions, and if such second volume shall be published accordingly, an additional sum of $1,500 shall be paid said reporter therefor on the delivery by said reporter to the Secretary of the Interior, for distribution according to existing laws, of three hundred copies of such second volume of said reports; and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the bill by inserting after line eight on page 1:

To pay deficiencies in the contingent expenses of the Senate, as follows:
For additional messengers, $7,000.
For additional labor in the folding-room, and material, $10,000.
For stationery, $10,000.
For miscellaneous items, $30,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to understand what that means.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know nothing about it. I have received a letter from the Secretary of the Senate within a day or two stating that these appropriations are necessary; and the Sergeant-at-Arms informs me that he knows the appropriations for extra messengers and for the folding-room are necessary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What are the other items for?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Thirty thousand dollars for miscellaneous expenses and $10,000 for stationery.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Have you any details or estimates?

Mr. WILLIAMS. None. I do not pretend to know anything about it. I had no time to examine it. I must insist, however, on the appropriation for the extra messengers and for the folding-room. The $30,000 for miscellaneous items may be struck out if the Senator pleases; but I should like to have the other items put in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no sort of examination. It comes in at the last moment, and we know nothing about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know nothing about it. I have not seen anybody in regard to it. As I said, there has simply been a letter sent to me on the subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator had better strike out the last item, at any rate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better strike out the whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think we had better appropriate for the stationery and the folding-room. At the suggestion of the Senator I will modify the amendment by striking out the last item of $30,000 for miscellaneous expenses until we can get more information. It is a very loose way of doing business to send a letter in at this stage of the session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified according to the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the salary of the district judge of the district of California shall be $5,000; the salaries of the district judges of the districts of Massachusetts, southern and eastern districts of New York, eastern district of Pennsylvania, Maryland, northern district of Illinois, Louisiana, Oregon, and Nevada, shall be $4,500 each; and the salary of the district judge of every other district shall be $4,000 each, and such salary shall be in full compensation for all official services performed by such judges, and no other allowance or payment shall be made to them for traveling expenses or otherwise, and the amount necessary to pay the increased compensation herein provided for shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that instead of offering that proposition the Committee on the Judiciary will offer the one that was agreed to in the committee of conference. The House made very serious objections to passing the section at all, but finally agreed to pass it in a modified shape. I think it better to put it on this bill in that form. To adopt the proposition as now offered will only result in a long discussion at this late hour, and perhaps protract the bill so that we can do nothing. I hope the section will be offered as it was finally agreed to in the committee of conference.

Mr. STEWART. That only gave the judge in Nevada $3,500, where the expenses of living are very great. I think that amendment only made two classes. I do not think it fair to give the judge in that district only that amount.

Mr. POLAND. In one of the committees of conference that was had on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, to which this amendment was moved, some objection was made by the House committee to the sums named. They agreed that the salaries of the judges ought to be raised, but thought we had them higher than they ought to be, and objected to the classification somewhat. As the Senate put the amendment on that bill the California district stood as now at $5,000; the districts of Massachusetts, southern and eastern New York, eastern Pennsylvania, northern Illinois, and Louisiana were made $4,500, and all others $4,000. I have here a statement of what the committee of conference agreed upon, or rather what the House committee would have agreed to, provided we could have settled the point of difficulty about the House clerks, and in that classification the district judge of California is put at $5,000; Massachusetts, each of the three New York districts, New Jersey, the eastern district of Pennsylvania, Maryland, the northern district of Illinois, the southern district of Ohio, and Louisiana, at $4,000; and all the others at $3,500.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Four thousand five hundred dollars should be fixed for Louisiana, because the present law gives the judge that compensation.

Mr. POLAND. I do not remember how that is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont propose an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. POLAND. So far as I am concerned I should have preferred the amendment as the Senate agreed to it originally on the other bill; but it seems to be thought by the Senator from Maine that it will be more likely to be acceptable to the other House if we take the modification that was agreed upon by the conference committee. I therefore propose to amend the amendment in the way I have suggested.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is it proposed to make all the three New York districts $4,000?

Mr. POLAND. Yes; they are all $3,750 now, and this only raises them $250.

Mr. STEWART. The other evening, after a long discussion, we fixed the salary of the judges in Montana at $4,000. It is as expensive living in Nevada as in Montana.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But for the Territories the appointments are only temporary. These are life offices.

Mr. STEWART. A thousand dollars in Vermont is worth more to a judge than $3,000 in Nevada. Prices are fully three times as high, and there is certainly as much business for a district judge in Nevada as in Vermont. There are questions connected with the internal revenue constantly arising there. But, sir, I will not insist upon my amendment; and as the proposition of the Senator from Vermont seems to be satisfactory to the Senate I withdraw it.

Mr. POLAND. Then I move to amend the bill by adding the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the salary of the district judge of the district of California shall be $5,000. The salary of the district judges of the district of Massachusetts, northern, southern, and eastern districts of New York, eastern district of Pennsylvania, Maryland, northern district of Illinois, the district of Louisiana, southern district of Ohio, and the district of New Jersey, shall be $4,000 each; and the salaries of the district judges of every other district shall be $3,500 each; and said salaries shall be in full compensation for all official services performed by such judges, and no other allowance or payment shall be made to them for travel, expenses, or otherwise; and the amount necessary to pay the increased compensation herein provided for shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. STEWART. I move to amend that by putting Nevada in the $4,000 dollar list.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope it will not be done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the amendment by including Oregon in the same list.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear from the other Senator from Nevada [Mr. NYE] whether he thinks $3,500 is too little for the district judge there. There are two Senators from that State, and I should like to know whether they agree on this question.

Mr. STEWART. I will modify my amendment so as to insert both Nevada and Oregon in the $4,000 class.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They have lived with their present salaries, and I have heard no complaint.

Mr. POLAND. I would say a word in reference to this Nevada judgeship. It is only very recently created, and the salary was fixed only a year or two ago, when everything was at the very highest rate, when the price of living was more than it is now, and although it may be very expensive living there just at this time, things will soon be a little easier there. That State is getting more in communication with the rest of the world. The proposition to place Oregon and Nevada higher than $3,500 was strongly objected to on the part of the other House. And that was one great point of objection to our original amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer an amendment to come in after line twelve of page 5:

For continuing the construction of the distributing reservoir of the Washington aqueduct to its contemplated bottom, and protecting its banks with slope walls laid in hydraulic cement, $150,000.

This proposition has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and was adopted by the Senate on a previous bill, but was stricken out in committee of conference, and I offer it now on this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I offer the following amendment to come in on page 4:

For supplying deficiency in the appropriation for the work on the Capitol extension, $50,000.

I will state that I hold in my hand a letter from the architect of the Capitol extension—

Mr. FESSENDEN. Are there not two items in the bill now?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have hunted for them in the bill and so has the Clerk, but we have not been able to find them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is an appropriation for monolithic columns in the first part of the bill in these words:

*Capitol extension:
For eight additional monolithic columns, $11,200.
For ventilating, $9,000.*

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is right, then, that amount should be taken out of this $50,000. The two items make $20,200. That will leave this appropriation at $29,800.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is it for?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will state in a moment. It seems this was proposed in the House of Representatives, but not being understood, as the architect thinks, was not agreed to there. Mr. Clark says in his letter to the Secretary of the Interior:

"I regret to state that the moneys on hand for the prosecution of this work will not be sufficient for the present fiscal year.

"This deficiency is owing partly to the fact that when the estimate was made on which the appropriation was based I had just become connected with the work, and that I was not aware of the amount of expenditure required for work being done abroad. Consequently I limited the estimate to the work of finishing the marble and the other work connected therewith.

"Two items of expenditure were also incurred which were not included in the estimate, namely, the procuring of eight additional monolithic columns in place of those in two blocks on hand and paid for, and the work done for ventilation at the two Halls, both items being ordered by the Secretary of the Interior, at the request of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of one or other of the Houses. These items, it seems, are already provided for in the bill.

"The cost of this additional work and the items overlooked is as follows:

Paid for models for bronze doors.....	$3,940 00
Paid for materials, casting, and fitting bronze doors.....	20,860 00
Paid for eight additional monolithic columns.....	11,200 00
Paid for ventilating, estimated at.....	9,000 00

Total.....$50,000 00

"I therefore respectfully request that an appropriation of $50,000 may be asked for to make up this deficiency."

And he makes some further explanation. It seems this work was ordered, and Mr. Clark, the architect, knew nothing about it. It is for a model of the bronze doors, the exterior doors of the Senate and House wings, which were ordered some years ago, and have been paid for out of the money which Mr. Clark had asked for the extension of the building, he knowing nothing of it at the time. The letters perhaps may have explained it, but he has called my attention to the subject that the amendment may be moved here. I presume there will be no objection to it when properly understood.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I propose an additional amendment in relation to the temporary clerks in the Quartermaster General's office. The Senator from Maine desired to have a separate section covering them, the section in which they were included covering several other matters having been stricken out. I therefore propose this amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the temporary clerks in the Quartermaster General's office shall for the present fiscal year receive the same compensation as is paid to first class clerks, and a sum sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of executing the fourth article of the treaty of Washington, concluded on the 9th day of August, 1842, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the State of Maine for ninety-one thousand one hundred and twenty-five acres, assigned by said State to settlers under said article, a sum equal to $1 25 per acre; and to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for twenty-six thousand one hundred and fifty acres, assigned by said Commonwealth to settlers under said article, a sum equal to $1 25 per acre: Provided, Before said sums are paid the States of Maine and Massachusetts shall agree with the United States that the settlers upon their public lands in the late disputed territory in Maine, entitled to be quieted in their possessions, as ascertained by commissions heretofore instituted by said States, shall have been or shall be quieted by a release of the title of the said States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order that this is a private claim, relative to grants of land under the treaty of 1842.

Mr. MORRILL. The answer to that is that it is in execution of a treaty stipulation.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not sufficient. It is not in pursuance of a treaty stipulation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. With regard to that I will say that the Senate by a vote on two occasions has decided that it did not come within the prohibition of the rule, being to carry out a treaty stipulation.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is another point. The bill of which this amendment is a copy was passed on your motion, sir, [Mr. DOOLITTLE in the chair,] sent to the other House, and that House has failed to consider it or has refused to pass it. Now, is it proper for us at this hour of the session to put on a bill of this kind a disputed claim, growing out of an old matter, which has been controverted ever since I have been in Congress, and I do not know how many years before? We ought not to do it at this stage of the session. We have had enough loose legislation, but I think this would be a little worse than any we have had.

Mr. MORRILL. My friend from Ohio is making a speech very much at random, he will allow me to say. This never has been a disputed claim; it never has been a controverted claim in any other sense than such statements are made here now. I undertake to say that this claim has been recognized and adjudicated by the Senate, and it stands here res adjudicata.

The case may be very briefly stated. By the fourth article of the treaty of Washington, the United States undertook to quiet the settlers in what was a disputed territory in Maine. That was an obligation on the part of the Government of the United States. There are twelve hundred settlers on that territory whose possessions are not quieted, and the Government of the United States has failed to quiet them. This measure has been examined several times by committees of this body, and each time reported favorably. At the last session of Congress it was reported to the Senate from the Committee on Foreign Relations, having been twice before reported from the Committee on Claims, and passed the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator if he is authorized by any committee to offer this amendment?

Mr. MORRILL. I am by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. As an amendment to this bill?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir; it is in execution of a treaty. The bill which passed the Senate last year went to the other House, and has been there reported favorably by their committee, and the only reason it has not been passed is that it has not been reached. I affirm that it has never been a controverted question, and it never can be. It is in execution of a treaty, and is properly here. It belongs on this bill. The Government of the United States has never ignored it; but it has the judgment of three of the first committees of the Senate, and it had the judgment of the Senate at the last session, and this session it has the judgment of a committee of the House. It is not an old claim; it is not a stale claim; but it is an obligation on the part of the Government growing out of a plain treaty stipulation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, I would ask the Senate if they are willing to force the other House to consider this question which they have never passed upon, favorably at least, at this stage of the session? I still insist upon my point of order that this is a private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that it has been once or twice ruled to be in order to move this very amendment on an appropriation bill. That is the recollection of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. DAVIS. These claimants have been knocking at the door of the national Treasury very often, and I think the claim had better be allowed now, so that it may never be heard of more. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. That reasoning would apply to a great many other cases.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to recede from its disagreement to the forty-fourth amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and that it had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 305) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act to increase the duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

NOTT AND COMPANY.

Mr. SUMNER. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1231) for the relief of Nott & Co., to report it back without amendment, and as it has already passed the House and is a very little bill, which will only take a minute, I ask for immediate action upon it.

The bill was read. It proposes to direct the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to China, or the chief diplomatic agent of the United States in China, to examine the claim of Nott & Co., American merchants trading and doing business in China, against the Chinese Government for losses of coin sustained in 1857 by the capture and robbery of the vessel called the Neva; and if in his opinion the claim ought to be paid he is to pay it, with the rate of interest allowed on other claims, from the time of such loss, out of any funds received from the Chinese Government, under the treaty of 1858, for the payment of losses sustained by American citizens.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to know what the amount of that claim is?

Mr. SUMNER. It is for $15,000 that was stolen by a pirate in 1857.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has it been examined?

Mr. SUMNER. It comes from the House of Representatives, and has been examined by the Committee on Foreign Relations. There is a fund of about three hundred thousand dollars paid by the Chinese Government for claims, and which is now in the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. This money does not come out of the Treasury; it is paid out of that fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be laid over for the present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 438) for the relief of the heirs of John E. Bouligny;

A bill (S. No. 499) for the relief of Frank Pugsley, late a private soldier in company I, of the third regiment of New Hampshire volunteers; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 167) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the seventh regiment of West Virginia volunteers.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settlement of the account of disbursing officers, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill

(H. R. No. 1234) to incorporate the joint stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution of the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 916) for the relief of James M. Bishop, who claims $236;

A bill (H. R. No. 1095) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a certain draft to W. W. Potter, late acting military agent of the State of New York; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 36) referring the papers in the case of F. A. Gibbons and F. X. Kelly to the Court of Claims.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the following bills of the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 234) to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1184, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1868, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. H. D. WASHBURN of Indiana, Mr. WILLIAM HIGBY of California, and Mr. T. G. BERGEN of New York, managers at the same on its part.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1234) to incorporate the joint stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 305) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act to increase the duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

On motion by Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House No. 1184, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. FESSENDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MORGAN, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. HENDERSON.

DISBURSING OFFICERS.

On motion by Mr. WILSON, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution of the Senate No. 173, to facilitate the settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers; and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

LAND OFFICES IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. STEWART. I move to take up the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 746) for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, and Montana. It was under consideration some time ago and was laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. This was a bill that came from the House, and was amended in the Senate so as to give a land district to Arizona and attach that Territory to California for surveying purposes. It also gives a land district to Montana, and a surveyor general's district. The amendment agreed on by the conference committee extends to Utah a land district and a surveyor general. The question is, Will you give Utah a land district and a surveyor general? That is the issue.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope Senators will pay attention, because this, in my judgment, and in the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on Territories, one of the Senators from Ohio, who is not now present, is of a good deal of consequence. The proposition is by this agreement of the conference committee, or a majority of them—I was in the minority—to open the land districts in Utah further than they are now, so as to allow—for that will be the result—the Mormon people and the Mormon leaders to take up all the lands and exclude everybody else, for we all know that nobody else can stay there now. I think it right that we should leave it just as it is, and hold on to our lands until we can make some arrangement to protect the people who go there. I hope, therefore, that we shall disagree to this report of the conference committee, and in that opinion I am fortified by the excellent judgment of the Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Territories, who understands the question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I regard this bill of very great importance to the new Territories, and I would regard it as a public misfortune if it failed to pass. It cannot probably pass in any other shape at this session than the shape in which it is now presented, and I hope the report of the committee of conference will be agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is such a difference of opinion about it that I think we had better not do it.

Mr. POMEROY. The Committee on Public Lands were decidedly against this proposition. We never would agree to it.

Mr. CRAGIN. I wish to say a word as to what I have learned in regard to this matter on the Committee on Territories in relation to the public lands in the Territory of Utah. The Government bounds are entirely destroyed, and it is utterly impossible, I am informed by men from that Territory, to tell anything about it. The Mormons have destroyed the bounds set up by the Government surveyors. They have undertaken to grant the lands by their territorial Legislature to private individuals in all directions.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There was a surveyor general sent out from this city to Utah who surveyed whole regions of country without a chain or compass ever passing over them, making mathematical subdivisions of the country and reporting them to the General Land Office, and the absence of landmarks is charged upon the Mormons, when it is known at the Land Office to be the fault of the surveyor general.

The report was rejected—ayes nine, noes not counted.

SHOE LASTINGS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is a little joint resolution on the table from the House of Representatives that we may as well take up and pass now. I am satisfied it is right. It was referred to the Committee on Finance. I now report it back and ask to have it put on its passage.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is that a tariff bill?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Changing it in one particular.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is it increasing the tariff?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No. Let it be read and Senators will see exactly what it is. It is merely as to the description of one article.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 305) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act to increase the duty on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to repeal the paragraph of section five of the act of June 30, 1864, which is in these words: "on lastings, mohair, cloth, silk twist, wool, or other manufactured cloth woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, and form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for shoes, slippers, boots, booties, gaiters, and buttons exclusively, not combined with India-rubber, ten per cent. ad valorem."

The resolution also provides that machinery for the manufacture of beet sugar, and imported for that purpose solely, shall be exempt from duty.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should be glad if the chairman of the Committee on Finance would state in a word or two what this is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot tell without looking at the act, but my impression is that it puts these articles into a different schedule at a higher rate of duty.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that some years ago, nearly twenty years ago, lastings, mohair, and other articles out of which shoes were made was charged twenty per cent. duty, and ten per cent. if cut in patterns. The twenty per cent. duty has been carried up to fifty per cent. duty, but the ten per cent. duty remains as it did then, and has not been changed. The result is that the wealthy manufacturers are sending to Canada and to England for these articles cut out, and they bring them into the country at ten per cent., cheating the revenue out of forty per cent., and nobody gets the advantage of it but these men.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is that all there is in the proposition?

Mr. WILSON. It is all there is in the first section.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The other section is simply allowing machinery for the manufacture of beet-root sugar to come in free of duty.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1868, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1868, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their first and fourth amendments.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the sixth amendment of the Senate.

That the Senate recede from the third amendment, and that the two Houses agree to said proviso, with the following amendment: strike out all after the word "provided" in the fifth line to the end of the paragraph at line eighteen, and insert in lieu thereof as follows: "That the civil engineer and naval store-keeper, when required at any of the navy-yards, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the persons employed at the several navy-yards as master machinists, master carpenters, master joiners, master blacksmiths, master boiler-makers, master sailmakers, master plumbers, master painters, and master caulkers, shall be men skilled in their several duties, and appointed from civil life."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out all of said amendment after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That no officer or employé of the Government shall require or request any workman in any navy-yard to contribute or pay any money for political purposes, nor shall any workman be removed or discharged for political opinions, and any officer or employé of the Government who shall offend against the provisions of this section shall be dismissed from the service of the United States."

T. A. HENDRICKS,

W. T. WILLEY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN A. KASSON,

N. P. BANKS,

F. A. PIKE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will explain that the Senate recedes from its appropriation for the purchase of property at and in addition to the Charlestown navy-yard. This report amends the proviso—

Several SENATORS. Never mind; it is all right.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well; if the report is satisfactory to the Senate I shall say no more.

The report was concurred in.

RECESS.

Mr. FESSENDEN, (at eight and a half o'clock p. m.) If there is no other business on the table requiring the attention of the Senate, I move that the Senate take a recess till seven o'clock this evening.

Several SENATORS. Say eight.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to amend the motion by substituting eight o'clock for seven.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If we meet at eight we may be kept here an hour later than if we meet at seven.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We are ahead of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. To accommodate gentlemen, I will say half past seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess till seven and a half o'clock p. m.

SUNDAY EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven and a half o'clock p. m., (Sunday, March 3.)

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. MORGAN presented the credentials of the Hon. ROSCOE CONKLING, elected a Senator of the United States by the Legislature of the State of New York for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1867; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

Mr. LANE presented the credentials of the Hon. GARRETT DAVIS, elected a Senator of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Kentucky for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1867; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 543) to abolish and forever prohibit the system of peonage in the Territory of New Mexico and other parts of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 563) supplementary to the several acts of Congress abolishing imprisonment for debt;

A bill (S. No. 595) to regulate the disposition of an irregular fund in the custody of the Freedmen's Bureau; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 175) for the relief of Dyer B. Pettijohn.

The message further announced that the House had passed bill of the Senate No. 576, relating to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 865) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CONDITION OF INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. DOOLITTLE, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 204) to provide for an annual inspection into Indian affairs, and for other purposes, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 204) entitled "An act to provide for an annual inspection into Indian affairs, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference could not agree, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

JAMES R. DOOLITTLE,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

ALEXANDER G. CATTELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN A. KASSON,

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,

WILLIAM WINDOM,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 865) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

APPEALS TO THE SUPREME COURT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 576) relating to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court, which was to add the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That where an appeal has been or may be taken from any final judgment, decree, or order of the district court of the United States for any district to a circuit court, the cause appealed, by consent of parties, may be heard and disposed of by the circuit court held by the district judge at any time after the appeal, in the case of the absence at such term of the Chief Justice of the United States or the associate justice allotted to the circuit in which such district is.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move the reference of that amendment to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have discovered that two very slight amendments are necessary in the amendments that we made to the deficiency bill; and for the purpose of making them I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now before the Senate, and open to amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment appropriating $50,000 for temporary clerks in the Treasury Department.

The Secretary read as follows:

For temporary clerks in the Treasury Department, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to classify the clerks authorized according to the character of their services.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to amend that clause by inserting after the words "Treasury Department" the words "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868." It is for the next fiscal year; but as it stands there it is for the present.

Mr. SUMNER. I think we had that amendment on another bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes; it was one of those we were obliged to abandon in order to pass that bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I only deem it my duty to say I regret every time that any discretion is left to the Secretary of the Treasury, because I think him unworthy of it.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish to inquire if this is an additional appropriation to what has already been made?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No; we were obliged to abandon the other in the contest with the House.

Mr. GRIMES. This puts the same appropriation that we abandoned on the other bill on this bill?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Precisely.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now, in the clause with regard to the salaries of the judges, I move to insert after the word "judges" where it last occurs the words "and shall take effect at the commencement of the next fiscal year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. CRESWELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 899, in relation to the revenue-cutter service.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Commerce report a substitute for the original bill; and the substitute only will be read unless some Senator asks for the reading of the original bill.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: That for the expenses of the revenue-cutter service for each half year from and after the 1st day of December, 1866, until the 1st day of June, 1869, there shall be paid out of the appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs, $670,000.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase for the said revenue-cutter service the steam-tug D. A. Mills and the steam-tug Mosswood, $23,000.

For the construction and equipment of eight schooners for the said service, designed to take the place of the steam cutters heretofore authorized to be sold under the act approved April 20, 1866, $211,000; and so much of the said act of April 20, 1866, as authorized the proceeds of the sales of the said steam cutters to be expended in the purchase or construction of other vessels is hereby repealed: Provided, That as soon as the said schooners shall be ready for service it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, and he is hereby directed, to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, for cash, after due notice in the public newspapers, a like number of such of said steam cutters as he shall find to be ill-adapted to the purposes of the revenue service, so that the number of vessels employed in that service shall not at any time exceed the number at present so employed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am extremely reluctant for one to enter upon this hasty legislation, as it may be justly called, at this last moment of the session. This subject was considered in the Committee on Commerce on a recent occasion when I had the pleasure to be present, and, according to the best of my recollection, it was the unanimous opinion of that committee that we had better suspend action until the next session. I learn from my distinguished friend from Maryland, in whose judgment I always have great confidence it is true, that afterward that decision was in some way reversed when I did not happen to be present, and it was thought fit to report this bill in this modified and amended way. Now, this revenue service can be sufficiently performed for the present with the means that the Government now has at its disposal. It is true it would be a little more complete, a little more effective, a little more ornamental, for I think I may use that expression, if these old vessels were disposed of and new ones were built; but it involves the expenditure of a very considerable sum of money from the Treasury; and I think when we have drawn and redrawn upon the Treasury as we have at this session, sometimes for good and sometimes for evil, that we had better pause at last and characterize the last hours of the session by an economy that we have failed to observe in the first. I hope for one that this matter will be laid over until we shall have more time for deliberation on a subsequent occasion.

DUTIES ON WOOL AND WOOLENS.

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will allow me, in the act we passed the day before yesterday, relating to the duties on wool and woollens, the time for its taking effect was on the passage of the act. We could not amend it very well without sending it back to the House. The intention was to offer a joint resolution to extend the time for ten days, so that notice might be given of the terms and provisions of the act at the various ports. I ask leave to introduce a bill to carry out that intention.

Mr. CRESWELL. I hope, as my friend is about to pass a bill on that subject, that he will include the substance of the proposition offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CATTELL] from the Finance Committee, making an increase of duty of twenty per cent. applicable to all other articles.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is impossible. This is simply in aid of the act to extend the time for the going into effect of that act for ten days.

Mr. CRESWELL. I think the twenty per cent. addition would be much more in aid of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. There can be no objection to this.

Mr. CRESWELL. I only make the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present introduction of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. GRIMES. Let it be read for information.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is in the form of a bill. It can only be passed by general consent.

The Secretary read as follows:

A bill to extend the time for the taking effect of the act relating to wool and woollens.

Be it enacted, &c., That the act of the present session relating to the duties on wool and woollens shall not take effect until ten days after the passage of said act, anything in said act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks leave to introduce this bill. It requires unanimous consent to introduce it at this time. Is there any objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it cannot be received.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 899) in relation to the revenue-cutter service.

Mr. CRESWELL. I was somewhat surprised to hear from my friend from Vermont the allegation that the legislation proposed by this bill is hasty legislation. If my friend will look over the papers applicable to the matter he will find that as early as December 10 of this session a strong paper was presented by the Treasury Department to the Committee on Commerce of the House asking that immediate action be taken on the subject of this bill. They urged in strong terms the necessity for having first a special appropriation for the revenue-cutter service, alleging that under the extension of the tariff and the greater disposition indicated by reason of the high rates to defraud the revenue, the absolute necessity of having a largely increased revenue-cutter service, and by consequence largely increased expenses; and that inasmuch as the expenses of the revenue-cutter service have of late grown to the hitherto unparalleled amount of nearly a million and a third dollars it is better that the Congress of the United States should hereafter make a special appropriation for that purpose, in order that they might have under their direction and disposal the details essential to that service. In accordance with these recommendations from the Treasury Department the House committee prepared a bill, which passed the other body, in which they make a special appropriation for that service for the next eighteen months. But when the matter came before the committee, of which my honorable friend from Vermont and myself are members, we concluded that inasmuch as by an act of last year a special appropriation of $4,200,000 was made generally for the purposes of collecting the revenue, it was better not to make an appropriation for the purposes of the revenue-cutter service, because the effect of it would be to increase thereby the appropriations generally for the collection of the revenue to the amount nearly of a million and a half dollars. The bill, therefore, before the committee of the Senate was amended so as to charge the amount necessary for the revenue-cutter service upon the general appropriation necessary for the collection of the revenue, the effect of which is that not one dollar additional is appropriated for this purpose.

In connection with this subject there are two other matters about which the Department feel great anxiety. The first is the necessity of having an appropriation for the purchase of two steam-tugs that are essentially necessary to the prosecution of the labors of the Department in the ports of Boston, Massachusetts, and Eastport, Maine. Furthermore, last year an act was passed by Congress authorizing the Treasury Department to dispose of some eight or ten, or as many as it might be deemed proper to dispose of, of the more expensive class of revenue cutters. The number of vessels attached to that service of the character of steamers at the present time is twenty-seven, and they vary in size from five hundred and fifty tons down to one hundred and twenty tons, and the number of men necessary to work them varies from fifty down to twenty. These vessels are found to be entirely too expensive. They are really vessels-of-war, and although they may have been necessary during the prosecution of the war, with their heavy armaments, to compete with vessels coming in from foreign countries which were also provided with armaments, they are found now to be comparatively useless for this service. They draw too much water, and are entirely too expensive. Therefore, instead of the bill I propose being, as the gentleman from Vermont charges, an additional tax upon the Treasury, it is expressly for the relief of the Treasury; and instead of making additional appropriations the idea is that the Treasury may be relieved by the sale of its more expensive steamers and the purchase of much less expensive sailing vessels, which are deemed better adapted to the service and all that the service requires. The mistake that was made in the details of the matter last year in the bill that passed Congress on the request of the Department was that it provided, first, for the sale of these vessels, and then further provided that out of the proceeds of the steamers the Department should be authorized to purchase the sailing vessels. The Treasury Department, it seems, with all its astuteness, was a little at fault in suggesting the terms of that bill, and they have since made the discovery that the boy did about his cake, that he could not eat it and have it at the same time. They have found that they cannot sell these steamers and appropriate the money to the construction of sailing vessels and still have the steamers. What they desire now is to use the steam vessels until the sailing vessels are ready for service. They therefore suggest to Congress the necessity of making a direct appropriation to pay for the eight sailing vessels that are required; and then suggest, and this bill provides, that the provision of the act of last session authorizing the proceeds of the steam vessels to be assigned to that purpose shall be repealed, so as to require that the proceeds of the steam vessels shall be covered directly into the Treasury.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to inquire who owns the two steam-tugs which it is proposed to buy in the first clause of the second section?

Mr. GRIMES. Are those the only two tugs that can be bought and the cheapest?

Mr. CRESWELL. That is more than I can inform the gentleman.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Government ought to buy a couple of these vessels, what is the reason that Congress undertakes to say what two shall be bought?

Mr. CRESWELL. My recollection is that these tugs are already purchased and are now in use, and have been for some time past. They were purchased under such circumstances that the Department—

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then they were purchased without authority?

Mr. CRESWELL. I do not know that there was any special authority for purchasing them other than the general authority given by the appropriation of $4,200,000 for the collection of the revenue. The Senator from Indiana will bear in mind that heretofore there has been no special direction given with regard even to the revenue-cutter service; but the expenditure of the whole $4,200,000 has been entirely under the discretion of the Treasury Department. Does the chairman of the Naval Committee remember what those large steam cutters in the revenue-cutter service cost?

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir.

Mr. CRESWELL. They cost vastly more than sailing vessels would cost.

Mr. GRIMES. I know that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The first ones cost from one hundred and fifteen thousand to one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. The last ones cost more. Those built on the lakes cost somewhere up to one hundred and forty thousand dollars.

Mr. CRESWELL. Then that shows the importance of this bill, because the object of it is to dispose of those more expensive vessels and purchase sailing vessels, that will cost about one fifth of that money, and put the residue into the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it proposed to sell the revenue cutters on the lakes?

Mr. CRESWELL. Only those of the twenty-seven now in the employ of the Department that the Secretary of the Treasury may deem less adapted to the purposes of the service.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And it is proposed to build sailing vessels.

Mr. CRESWELL. Yes; eight.

Mr. FESSENDEN. By recommendation of the Secretary?

Mr. CRESWELL. They were ordered last year, and the proceeds of the steam vessels are to be appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What will the sailing vessels be good for after they are built?

Mr. CRESWELL. The Department think that in many respects they will be better than the steam vessels in certain quarters.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think so.

Mr. CRESWELL. That is the opinion of an ex-Secretary. The opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury is different, and he makes the suggestion. I will state for the information of the Senator from Maine that the authority to build the eight sailing vessels is not given by this act. It was given at the last session. We only direct that $200,000 or thereabouts be appropriated out of the Treasury directly for this purpose, in order that the steam vessels may be retained in the service and employed in that service until the sailing vessels shall be ready for service. So far from this being a bill to appropriate money out of the Treasury or to tax the Treasury, it is in reality a bill for the relief of the Treasury and to insure to Congress that the revenue-cutter service shall hereafter be conducted much more economically than it has been for the last three or four years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to call the attention of the Senate again to the fact, which in my mind is of considerable consequence: that on a deliberate consideration of this bill when we had plenty of time the other day, in the Committee of Commerce, I believe we were unanimously of the opinion that it ought not to pass.

Mr. CRESWELL. I will state that that was the opinion of the committee as to the bill that came from the House; but upon a further consideration of the subject, and upon more information from the Department, we concluded that the measure could be matured, and that it was better it should be passed in the shape of a substitute at this session; and therefore we recommended the passage of the substitute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was not my good fortune to be present at the very recent meeting of the committee at which this conclusion was reached. What further information we had from the Treasury, through what agencies it came, I do not know; but we do know from the history of this subject that the officers of the Treasury Department who are charged with this branch of the public service do not appear to know themselves from one year to another what it is that they do want. I am not saying this of the Secretary of the Treasury. Of course his attention cannot be diverted from the general affairs of the Treasury and finance that he is obliged to devote himself to, to consider these matters of detail. I am not, therefore, speaking of it as any ground of complaint against him. But I have observed that his subordinates in the Treasury, who are charged with this branch of the service, do not seem, if we take their own acts as the guide of what their knowledge and opinions are, to know from one year's end to another what it is desirable that they should do. One year we must have steam vessels, and I think that is right myself; the next year we must dispose of the steam vessels and have sailing vessels; and the year after it will be discovered that sailing vessels are for this purpose of enforcing the revenue laws totally useless, as they have been demonstrated to be, and then we must sell out those and go and buy steam vessels. Now what use on the lakes, or what use on the sea-coast in these modern times, is a sailing vessel, a schooner, for the purpose of enforcing the police in the collection of the revenue? Totally and absolutely useless. It would be the by-word and the reproach of every smuggler that sails on the coast or across the lakes.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think that we ought not, at these last moments of the session, to plunge into any new experiments of this kind, although some subordinate of the Secretary of the Treasury comes down and button-holes the committee and induces them to make some modification of the bill and to go for it, because I feel as sure as I can feel of anything that a year will not pass over our heads, if we pass this bill, before we shall be called upon to reverse our action and to go back to the present plan. We are to have a fresh meeting of Congress immediately. There cannot be anything exceedingly urgent in this measure. Let us therefore have time to investigate the true principles upon which these details should proceed, and then we can do whatever the public service requires. I do hope Senators will not consent to push this bill through at this last moment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is very true, as the honorable Senator from Vermont suggests, that the Secretaries of the Treasury cannot themselves know very much about these matters. They do, however, have the general supervision of them, and nothing is done without their concurrence. With regard to the comparative value of the opinion of an ex-Secretary and the actual Secretary of the Treasury I do not suppose there is a very great difference arising out of that fact, particularly as living on the sea-board and being somewhat intimate with the revenue-cutter service, I may be supposed to know as much about it and have as many ideas in regard to it as a gentleman who came from the interior, and lived there nearly all his life, and probably has not, since he left the State of Maine originally, until recently, seen a revenue cutter at all. But I do not suppose that either of us knows very much about it. I can only say that for the last six years until very recently the idea has prevailed, and it has been acceded to as a truth, that for the revenue service these sailing vessels at the present time are utterly useless; and I am perfectly astonished to find that any bill has passed through Congress or been recommended by the Treasury Department for the building of sailing vessels for the revenue service.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It passed at the last session of Congress.

Mr. FESSENDEN. So I understand. I do not know when. It certainly never was passed by any recommendation that I heard here, and I do not know how it happened.

We built under the first Secretary of the Treasury, in Mr. Lincoln's administration, large steamers, propellers for service on the sea-coast. They were very beautiful vessels, and they have been found very effective in every particular except one; and that was that they had no speed comparatively, I mean not sufficient speed. They were very much better than sailing vessels, however, and could be managed with very much greater ease.

Mr. CRESWELL. They add to the expenditure of money.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was an expenditure of money; but it was a mistake thus far, I think; although they were very beautiful vessels, and some of them have a very reasonable speed, they are not what it was supposed they would be when they were built. They are too large in point of fact, and I think they might be altered so as to be made very efficient. Afterward, in pursuance of a law passed by Congress at the time we were anticipating difficulties and were having difficulties on the lakes, steamers were built for the revenue service. They were pretty well calculated for the service to a certain extent. Those were side-wheel steamers. The Treasury Department changed its plans about them. They saw that we wanted speed more particularly than anything else there, and we wanted vessels so built that they would run into comparatively shallow waters. I believe everybody concedes that those vessels were a very great success. They have a very high degree of speed, and they are very effective. I never heard anything said to the contrary with regard to them.

Now, sir, what has changed the views of the Department, or those who advise the Department, on the subject, I cannot imagine. If they have advised the building of sail vessels they have totally abandoned the system that they had before, and which was approved by everybody. Indeed, common sense would show that where you want vessels for police purposes they should have as high a degree of speed as possible to overtake any sail vessel and go around it in any way; and if you want them to go to sea to protect and save commerce on the coast in bad weather, which they are used for to a considerable extent along the Atlantic coast, you want steam vessels, powerful vessels. I hope, therefore, that no bill will be passed which contemplates any change of the system until we get more information on the subject, and somebody is prepared to give us some good reasons for it. It strikes me with entire astonishment; it may be owing to my ignorance of the subject; but until I am better informed than I am I must oppose the passage of this bill or any bill which is calculated for that purpose or to produce that effect.

Mr. MORRILL. This subject was before the Committee on Commerce at the last session. The result of their examination was the passage of an act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell a certain class of steamers in the revenue service, represented to be unsuitable to that service on account of their size, and to purchase in lieu of those steamers certain sailing vessels, which were said to be better adapted to the service, particularly upon the Atlantic coast. The statement was that this class of vessels was altogether too large for the service.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is undoubtedly true. They should have smaller ones, but not sailing vessels.

Mr. MORRILL. The representation from the Department was that a certain portion of the service would be better performed by sailing vessels than by steam vessels; in other words, it was said that the experience of the Department was that the two ought to be combined; that you want sailing vessels and steam vessels. The legislation of the last session was based upon the idea that the revenue-cutter service demanded a combination both of sail and steam vessels, and that the Department had a certain class of steam vessels that were unsuited for the service, and they asked authority to sell those and invest the proceeds in the construction of sail vessels.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If my colleague will allow me, I will state to him that a very capable and able member of the revenue service—and they have confounded his ideas—remarked that those vessels were not exactly what they should be; they were too large; that what was wanted was a vessel built so that it could either sail or go by steam. That is what he said they wanted, because, he said, if it was exclusively a steam vessel it would cost too much for fuel, and for a large portion of the service you could use the sails to perform it, and the steam power was only needed on occasions; that the vessels to be built should unite both steam power and sailing power. Instead of that I see we have authorized the building of sailing vessels exclusively. That was the idea probably they meant to carry out, and that idea was a good one. It was with reference to economy. You save a great deal by the combination, for a very large portion of the time you do not want steam power.

Mr. MORRILL. I am very free to say that I have no decided opinions on the subject, and I am not at all sure that my colleague is not entirely right. Still, what we now propose is exactly in harmony with the legislation of last year. That legislation did contemplate the sale of certain steam vessels, the proceeds of which were to be used in the construction of sailing vessels. We undertake now by appropriate legislation to carry out that idea. They come to us this year and say, "We want further legislation; we want an appropriation of $350,000 to enable us to build the sailing vessels contemplated by the legislation of last year, on the ground that it is not convenient to the service to sell the steam vessels until we have supplied their places by the sailing vessels." That is the basis of this legislation.

Mr. GRIMES. Will the Senator allow me to make inquiry? What is the necessity of this legislation, if, as the Senator from Maryland says, the Secretary has an appropriation of some million or two dollars for the purpose of enforcing the revenue laws of the country, and under which he has purchased the two steam-tugs to which reference has here been made?

Mr. MORRILL. In reply to the Senator from Iowa, my understanding is that the two steam-tugs were purchased on credit and not paid for out of any fund, and this is really an appropriation to meet that payment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The combination that they wanted is precisely what I stated, the combination of sailing and steam power in the same vessels.

Mr. MORRILL. I am not certain that that is not so. All I am undertaking to explain is what I think my honorable friend from Maryland did explain, perhaps more lucidly than I am doing, that what we are attempting now is simply to give effect, so far as this idea is concerned, to the legislation of last year, and that upon the ground that it was settled that we would combine the two things, to wit, sail and steam vessels, in this service.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is wanted is to combine them in the same vessel.

Mr. MORRILL. It may be that they ought to be combined in the same vessel. The other feature in this bill which commended it to the committee—this would seem to be incidental, because it was in harmony with the legislation of last year—was this: instead of appropriating a general appropriation for this service, we make a specific appropriation for the revenue service; not for the collection of the revenue, but a specific sum for the revenue-cutter service. Those are the two features of this bill. I do not feel like arguing the question at all, because it may be that the legislation of last year, as is suggested by my colleague, was not wise; that really what the Department intended and what it needs is a combination of sail and steam in one vessel; but certain I am that that is not the recommendation of the Department.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They did not understand the recommendation made to them on that subject.

Mr. CRESWELL. Senators seem to misapprehend entirely the object of this legislation, and they have gone into a general debate as to the relative merits of steam cutters and sailing vessels in the revenue service. Now, sir, all this is entirely irrelevant. So far as a debate of that kind could affect the question it was discussed at the last session of Congress, and by the second section of the act approved April 20, 1866, it was enacted:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell at public auction to the highest and best bidder, for cash, after due notice in the public newspapers, such revenue cutters as he shall find to be ill-adapted to the purposes of the revenue service, and to expend the proceeds of said sales in the purchase or construction of other vessels better suited to the wants of said service."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That does not say "sailing vessels."

Mr. CRESWELL. Under that authority, which is as general and comprehensive as words in the English language could make it, the Secretary of the Treasury has, in the exercise of that discretion, entered into contracts for the purchase of eight sailing vessels and these two steam-tugs. Now, all that we ask by this bill is that there shall be a direct appropriation of money from the Treasury to pay for them, to respond to the obligations of the Government as to these sailing vessels, and that the proceeds of the steam vessels to be sold hereafter shall go directly into the Treasury.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He has been imposed upon in some way or entered into contracts very unwisely; that is manifest.

Mr. CRESWELL. Here is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury himself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me ask a question, by the leave of my friend.

Mr. CRESWELL. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like my friend from Maryland to tell us, in connection with this section of the act of last year which he has read, where the Secretary of the Treasury obtained his authority to make any purchase, or enter into any contract for the purchase of the vessels that are now alluded to, except to pay for them out of the proceeds of the sales of those vessels which should be found unadapted to the service of the revenue?

Mr. CRESWELL. I admit that the Secretary of the Treasury had no authority, except by the common practice of the Department heretofore, if that justified it, in making any other arrangement than that the parties contracting for the construction of these sailing vessels should be paid out of the proceeds of the sales of steam vessels; but the Department now represent to Congress that to do that thing, to make immediate sale of the steam vessels, would be detrimental to the service, and they therefore ask Congress to make a specific appropriation of money rather than to require them to do that thing. The Secretary of the Treasury certifies, in a communication which I have in my hand, that contracts have been concluded for the construction of a number of sailing vessels and for the purchase of two small steamers on the terms designated in the inclosed schedule, and appropriations are asked to enable the Department to carry out the arrangement; so that if no additional legislation is now made by Congress the contracts made by the Secretary of the Treasury must be carried into execution. Even if it be true that the legislation of last year was a mistake, and that it would be detrimental to the service to dispose of the steam vessels and to employ sailing vessels in lieu of them, the Department now would be subjected to the double disadvantage of depriving the service of the benefit of the steam vessels altogether, and they would be required, in accordance with the contract which Congress authorized last year, to sell the steam vessels at once, even before the sailing vessels were ready to go into service. That is the whole question. The bill which we present from the Committee on Commerce as a substitute for the bill of the House further provides, by way perhaps of exercising caution, that as soon as the sailing vessels are ready to be mustered into the service the more expensive class of steam vessels shall be taken out of commission and sold.

The distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] admitted that certain of these steam vessels were altogether inappropriate to the service. I am told that one of these steam vessels of five hundred and fifty tons would burn at the rate of four or five thousand tons of coal a year. She is large enough for a man-of-war, utterly inappropriate to this service. It is vessels of this class that we propose to sell, and after selling them we would still have seventeen steam cutters in the service, and about that number of sailing vessels. The Department think they can find use for both these, and that combined in this number the service would be much more efficient than it is now. That is their deliberate judgment. If gentlemen here, upon their conjectures, dreaming upon this subject, admitting that they have no information, are to vote down the deliberate request of the Department, so be it; but let it be understood hereafter that the same rule shall be applied to the other Departments, and that we shall require the chairmen of the several committees, who rely exclusively for their information upon the Departments alone, to certify to us of personal knowledge in the matters before we shall be willing to act upon their suggestions.

The first three of the steam cutters in the revenue service are of the following tonnage: the Cuyahoga five hundred and fifty tons, the Lincoln five hundred and thirty, and the Uinta four hundred and fifty. The second class are nearly all three hundred and fifty, and some three hundred and eighty tons. The third class are much smaller, from two hundred and twenty down to one hundred and eighty tons.

Mr. GRIMES. Has he got authority to sell those now?

Mr. CRESWELL. He has authority under this act to sell any of them.

Mr. GRIMES. Under the law as it now stands?

Mr. CRESWELL. He has authority to sell any of them that he deems ill-adapted to the service. The language of the law is: "such of the revenue-cutters as he shall find to be ill-adapted to the purposes of the revenue service."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then why not exercise the authority under that law?

Mr. CRESWELL. The reason he assigns is that he desires to retain these steam vessels in service until sailing vessels are ready to be commissioned. I believe we have stated the whole case, and I have no desire at this late period of the session to detain the Senate by any protracted discussion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Prima facie what my friend from Maryland says as to the reliance that we ought to place upon the report of a Department has considerable force. A Department of the Government, if it fulfills the functions that appropriately belong to it, will be careful to investigate a subject before it recommends action, so as to have its recommendation stand criticism and investigation and be entitled to weight. A very good commentary upon the faith that the committee and my friend from Maryland have in these recommendations is found on the face of the very bill before us. The Department, it appears, recommended one course of practice to be pursued, and the House of Representatives passed a bill accordingly. It is submitted to the scrutiny of the Committee on Commerce of this body, and they upset the bill altogether. They are unwilling to stand upon the recommendation of the Department, and mark out, by an amendment which is almost an entirely different bill, a course to be pursued which differs most essentially from that which was recommended by the Department having this in charge and upon which the House of Representatives acted.

Now, then, how much faith are we to repose in a recommendation of this description, and how much weight is to be given to the argument of my friend from Maryland on this subject, when he himself is unwilling to pursue the recommendation of the very Department that he is now the champion of? That is the question. I take it, it is our duty as legislators to take the recommendations of the Department, to examine them, to subject them to scrutiny, to obtain information from other sources, and then to act, because we, as the responsible agents of the people in dispensing their money and in transacting their business, cannot shirk the responsibility to them by saying that any man said this or that unless reasons are given for it that shall be satisfactory.

Now, what is the case? The Secretary of the Treasury a year ago was authorized to dispose of certain steam vessels which should upon investigation turn out to be ill-adapted to the uses of the revenue; and the difficulty was that they were large revenue steamers, sea-going steamers, capable of crossing the Atlantic or going anywhere upon the ocean, made at a time when we were in a state of war, when they were wanted for purposes not strictly connected with the revenue, but for general purposes, both of naval and commercial affairs; and now that we have come to a state of peace or quasi peace, they do not answer all the purposes that they were originally designed to answer, and they are more expensive and costly than is necessary for the mere purpose of revenue police. Now, what is to be done? We gave him authority last year to sell these large vessels if he thought it fit; to take the money he had sold them for, and expend that money in the purchase of vessels which should be better suited to that use. It was not considered then by anybody, I think I am safe in saying, that the system of having a steam revenue marine should be changed to that of having a mere sailing revenue marine. If the Secretary of the Treasury, acting under the supposed authority of that act, has undertaken to pledge the credit of the Government in the purchase of property with means not derived from the proceeds of the sales of those vessels, then he has violated the law; and I am sorry indeed to hear on almost every occasion that the acts of that Department are brought under discussion here, from some source or other, that some branch or other of that Department has set the law aside, and has chosen to exercise its own will, instead of exercising ours as the law-making power. I doubt exceedingly whether the Secretary of the Treasury has committed himself to any such course, and therefore I do not intend either to condemn it or to criticize it in advance. All that I mean to say is, that if he has, having one authority, undertaken, as the holder of the public treasure, to pursue another and to pledge the public money for purposes not authorized by law, then he deserves condemnation. I do not believe he has. Now, then, at this last day of the session it does seem to me that, although there may be some features in the bill which have merit, it is much better for us to reserve the consideration of it until we can be sure that all we do will stay done for the good of the service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 438) for the relief of the heirs of John E. Bouligny;

A bill (S. No. 499) for the relief of Frank Pugsley, late a private soldier in company I, of the third regiment New Hampshire volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 234) to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company;

A bill (S. No. 604) to define and punish certain crimes therein named;

A bill (H. R. No. 916) for the relief of James M. Bishop;

A bill (H. R. No. 1095) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a certain draft to W. W. Potter, late acting military agent of the State of New York;

A bill (H. R. No. 1137) for the relief of Oliver Lumphrey;

A bill (H. R. No. 1176) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1868;

A bill (H. R. No. 1182) to establish certain post roads;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 167) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the seventh regiment of West Virginia volunteers;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 36) referring the papers in the case of F. A. Gibbons and F. X. Kelley to the Court of Claims; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 305) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act to increase the duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 5th of February last, information of the amount of money received from sales of cotton or other property turned over to the Treasury Department under the several laws of Congress, and what disposition has been made of the same; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. MORGAN, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repair of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications, and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from so much of their second amendment as proposes to strike out the second section of the bill, and agree to the same; and the House agree to the section proposed to be inserted by the Senate to said second amendment.

E. D. MORGAN,

LOT M. MORRILL,

JOHN B. HENDERSON,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

HENRY D. WASHBURN,

WILLIAM HIGBY,

TEUNIS G. BERGEN,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. No. 128) authorizing limited partnerships in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 220) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels-of-war and steam machinery;

A bill (S. No. 264) to grant certain privileges to the Alexandria, Washington, and Georgetown Railroad Company in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 460) in relation to persons imprisoned under sentence for offenses against the laws of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 470) to authorize the change of a name;

A bill (S. No. 477) to amend an act entitled "An act to continue, alter, and amend the charter of the city of Washington," approved May 17, 1848;

A bill (S. No. 493) supplemental to an act to establish the Treasury Department, approved the 2d of September, 1789;

A bill (S. No. 490) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Idaho," approved March 3, 1863;

A bill (S. No. 529) to incorporate the Howard University in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 501) amendatory of an act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Montana, approved May 26, 1864;

A bill (S. No. 534) to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court;

A bill (S. No. 547) to amend an act entitled "An act for the reversion to the United States of the land granted by Congress to aid in the construction of a railroad from Amboy by Hillsdale and Lansing to some point on or near Traverse bay, in the State of Michigan, and for the completion of said road," approved July 3, 1866;

A bill (S. No. 550) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia," approved June 25, 1866;

A bill (S. No. 570) extending the time for the completion of certain street railways;

A bill (S. No. 592) to protect the rights of married women, and for other purposes, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 592) to provide for a temporary increase of the pay of officers of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 160) for the relief of Dempsey Reece, of Indiana.

WATER-POWER AT ROCK ISLAND.

Mr. WILSON. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 303) to enable the Secretary of War to carry out an agreement in relation to water-power for the arsenal at Rock Island, have directed me to report it without amendment; and as it is very short and will occupy no time I ask to have it put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Secretary of War to carry into effect the recommendations of the commissioners appointed under the acts of April 19, 1864, and June 27, 1866, relative to the Moline Water Company and the water-power at Rock Island, Illinois, as contained in the report of the commissioners, and to make application for that purpose of the money heretofore appropriated for securing water-power at the head of Rock Island.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand from the Senator from Massachusetts that this resolution simply authorizes the application of an appropriation already made to carry into execution an award made in pursuance of law.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir; that is all there is in it.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STEWART. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 239) to prescribe a rule concerning members of the bar, and for other purposes, have partially considered the same, and directed me to prepare an amendment. I have prepared the amendment, but have not had the opportunity to present it. I now report the bill, and ask that it be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom the following bills, joint resolution, petitions, and memorials were referred, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be laid upon the table; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. No. 183) to fix eight hours' labor as a day's work in all cases where laborers, mechanics, and artisans may be employed by or under the authority of the Government of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 1187) to compensate the officers and crew of the United States steamer Kearsarge for the destruction of the rebel pirate vessel Alabama;

A resolution of the Senate of January 11, 1867, directing the Committee on Naval Affairs to inquire into the expediency of temporarily closing the navy-yard at Norfolk, Virginia;

A resolution of the Senate of February 5, 1867, directing the Committee on Naval Affairs to inquire if any ship has been sent to sea lately from Charlestown navy-yard with unsound timbers in her hull;

A petition of surgeons' stewards, paymasters' stewards, and yeomen, who have served in the United States Navy during the rebellion, praying for compensation commensurate with the service rendered;

A resolution of the Legislature of Illinois in favor of an appropriation for the completion of the navy-yard at Mound City, in that State;

A memorial of Commander B. M. Dove, remonstrating against the action of the advisory board, who, he alleges, have passed him by, while promoting others who have not seen so much service, and praying to be restored to his proper rank in the Navy;

A memorial of citizens of Virginia employed in the Norfolk navy-yard remonstrating against the closing of said yard;

Two memorials of colored citizens of Virginia employed in the navy-yard at Norfolk, Virginia, remonstrating against the closing of said navy-yard;

A memorial of citizens of Virginia, remonstrating against closing the navy-yard at Norfolk, Virginia;

A memorial of workingmen employed in the navy-yard at Portsmouth, Virginia, against the closing of the navy-yard at Norfolk, Virginia; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 15) relating to James J. Wheeler and the appointment of cadets in the Naval and Military Academies, and accompanying papers.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 865) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California, reported it without amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom were referred the following bill, joint resolution, and memorials, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. No. 409) to provide for the publication of papers relating to foreign affairs;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 47) to provide for the publication of the medical and surgical history of the war of the rebellion;

A memorial of the Geographical and Statistical Society, praying for an appropriation for the publication of the medical and surgical history of the rebellion;

A memorial of the American Medical Association, praying for an appropriation for the publication of the medical and surgical history of the late war as prepared in the office of the Surgeon General of the United States; and

The memorial of Joseph C. G. Kennedy, late superintendent of the Census Bureau, remonstrating against the erasure of his name and the suppression of the preface prepared by him for the volume of the Eighth Census on Manufactures.

Mr. POLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 576) relating to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court, have directed me to report it back with a recommendation that the Senate agree to the amendment, and I ask that it be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent, there being another subject properly before the Senate.

Mr. CRESWELL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill before the Senate will be proceeded with.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 899) in relation to the revenue-cutter service.

Mr. GRIMES. There is another section of that bill which I have not heard the Senator from Maryland explain, the first section in the bill, which appropriates the sum of $670,000 for every half year from the last day of December, 1866, until the 1st of June, 1868, which amounts to some two and a quarter million dollars. I suppose the Senator can explain that.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers, to report it back with a recommendation that the Senate agree to the amendment, and I ask to have it acted on now.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House, which was to add as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the fourth section of an act to regulate the fees, costs, and other judicial expenses of the Government in the States, Territories, and District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved August 16, 1856, be, and the same are hereby, extended to costs arising under and since the date of the approval of an act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes, approved February 26, 1853.

The amendment was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS of Pennsylvania, Mr. JOHN A. KASSON of Iowa, and Mr. JOHN F. FARNSWORTH of Illinois, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 598) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. FESSENDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. FESSENDEN, Mr. GRIMES, and Mr. STEWART.

ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted a short time ago, on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON,] the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers. It is a proposition to allow an appeal from the accounting officers to the Secretary of the Interior with a view to get additional allowances. I do not think we ought to legislate in that direction.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let me make a statement. I have referred to the law and I think there is no trouble about it. It is an act to amend the act regulating the fees, costs, and other judicial expenses of the Government of the United States, approved August 16, 1856. The first section is:

That hereafter, before the accounts of the United States marshals, district attorneys, and clerks are presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department for settlement, they shall be examined and certified to by the district judge of the United States.

It goes on and provides for their examination. The fourth section provides that in all the cases before mentioned an appeal shall lie from the decision of the accounting officers to the Secretary of the Interior. An appeal lies, that is the law now, in every case since 1856. Now, the effect of the proposition that is on the table is that the provisions of this act, applying to district attorneys, marshals, and clerks, are extended to the act of February 26, 1853. The fee bills were altered in 1856, it seems, somewhat for these officers. I see no objection to it. If appeals are allowed from the settlement of the accounts to the Secretary of the Interior, as it seems they are under the general law, I do not know why they should not be allowed in all cases.

Mr. SHERMAN. A few years ago there was a great deal of controversy about the disposition of the judiciary fund, which was a large fund, about a million dollars, and is more than that now. The allowances that are made to the district attorneys and marshals are first approved by the judge and sent to the accounting officers. This authorizes an appeal from the accounting officers to the Secretary of the Interior, so that it virtually allows the Secretary of the Interior to make these allowances. It seems to me to be bad policy. The accounting officers of the Treasury are the persons who have to guard the Treasury, and the only protection the Treasury has in the disbursement of this enormous fund is the rules established by the accounting officers; but under this provision every case can be appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, so that he may increase the allowances made by the judge and by the accounting officers. I do not think we ought to legislate in that direction.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the Senator why he does not reconsider the amendment and then discuss it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The vote has been reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question is on the reconsideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better disagree to the amendment and send the bill back to the House and let them recede from the amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I am perfectly willing to do that. I do not know anything about that last provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. We can probably pass the bill quicker in that way.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know myself why it should be reconsidered. The proposition is plain enough. The Senator from Ohio has not looked into it, and has never considered it in committee. I have looked at the statutes to which it refers. It is a simple proposition. Anybody can understand it in one minute.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is done for the purpose of opening up some old charges.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know what it is for, but it is very certain that if one district attorney has a right to have his accounts settled in this way every other district attorney should have the same right. The general law is that all the district attorneys and all the clerks of courts and all the marshals of the United States have a particular way of settling their accounts with the exception of one or two. All ought to be embraced in the law, and not make exceptional cases. Here is the general law—there cannot be any mistake about it—passed in 1856. It applies to the settlement of all accounts of marshals, district attorneys, and clerks of the United States, in the fourth section. I will read the whole of it. It is only two and a half lines:

"That in all cases before mentioned an appeal shall lie from the decision of the accounting officers to the Secretary of the Interior."

That is a general law passed ten years ago. Now, then, what is the object of this House amendment? The object is that the provision of that section which applies to all these cases, passed ten years ago, shall apply to marshals, district attorneys, and clerks under the law that was passed in 1853 as well as under the law passed in 1856. The law of 1853 is the general fee bill fixing the fees under which they settle accounts.

The general fee bill was passed in 1853 prescribing all the fees. Then comes the law of 1856. I will read the first section:

"That hereafter, before the accounts of United States marshals, district attorneys, and clerks are presented, the accounting officers of the Treasury—"

Before they are presented certain things must be done. Then the fourth section provides that an appeal shall lie to the Secretary of the Interior. Ought they not all to go there? If the law of 1856 is correct there cannot be any objection to this.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps the law of 1856 is wrong.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If you propose to repeal it that is another thing.

Mr. JOHNSON. This proposition seems to me to be correct. The explanation made by the chairman of the Judiciary committee, from the examination I have given those laws, appears to me to justify the passage of the amendment, indeed to require it, that justice may be done to all.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no doubt that this is right enough. Certainly the Senator from Illinois cannot be mistaken about it; but, at the same time, I must confess I do not understand it yet with all the explanation. The probability is that it will open up some old accounts, to be adjusted by the Secretary of the Interior without having them subjected to the inspection of the accounting officers, or rather it will give him the final determination of them after the examination by the accounting officers.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is done under the act of 1856.

Mr. HENDERSON. The difficulty is that it may open up some old accounts, and I do not know to what extent it may affect the Treasury, and therefore I think under the circumstances we had better not act before the next session, when we shall have time to examine this legislation and act advisedly. I think that would be better.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senate will reconsider its action, the bill can go to a committee of conference, and there gentlemen can be entirely satisfied, and then report as they see fit. I hope the question will be taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it better to reconsider it. Let it stand on its own footing. The military portion of the bill ought to pass, and it can be passed in a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, in order to pass the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

APPEALS TO THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to consider the amendment of the House to the bill in relation to appeals and writs of error, which was reported by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] a short time ago. It will take but a moment.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 576) relating to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court, which was to add as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted, That where an appeal has been or may be taken from any final judgment, decree, or order of the district court of the United States for any district to the circuit court, the cause appealed, by consent of parties, may be heard and disposed of by the circuit court held by the district judge at any time after the appeal, in the case of the absence at such term of the Chief Justice of the United States, or the associate justice allotted to the circuit in which such district is.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know nothing of that except hearing it read. I do not understand it. Does it provide that the district judge shall sit?

Mr. HARRIS. By consent of the parties. I will state how I understand the section to be. An appeal is brought from the district to the circuit court. There is no circuit judge present. The parties may agree that the appeal be heard before the district judge holding the circuit court, with a view to get the case into the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON. Depending upon the agreement of the parties?

Mr. HARRIS. By consent of the parties only.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was concurred in.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom were referred various resolutions, memorials, and petitions not heretofore reported upon, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be severally laid on the table; which was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom were referred the following bills, petitions, and memorials, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they lie on the table; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. No. 148) to prevent the perversion of the mails to fraudulent and illegal purposes;

A bill (S. No. 551) for the construction of a Government telegraph from Washington to New York city;

A bill (S. No. 579) to amend the post office laws;

A resolution of the Senate of December 21, 1865, instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the franking privilege now allowed to members of Congress except upon written communications;

The petition of the National Bank-Note Company of New York, asking that the Postmaster General may be authorized to settle their accounts with the Post Office Department upon an equitable and just basis;

A memorial of paper and envelope manufacturers and dealers and stationers, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 70) to amend the postal laws;

A memorial of paper and envelope manufacturers remonstrating against the bill (S. No. 70) to amend the postal laws; and

A memorial of the North American Lloyd Steamship Company, praying that a subsidy of $30,000 per annum for this and the next four years be granted for carrying the mail from New York to Southampton and Bremen and back twice per month each way, and that additional compensation be allowed them when the service shall be increased weekly.

He also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Norman Wiard, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

STOCKTON AND COPPEROPOLIS RAILROAD.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 865.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 865) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It seems to me to be rather late in the session to take up a bill granting lands for a railroad. I am very much opposed to legislative business at this time of the session. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator to allow me one moment. This is a bill that passed the Senate at the last session of Congress after its consideration by the Committee on Public Lands; and as it was read at the last session there is really no necessity for its being read again. As soon as the Senate know the description of the road and the termini they know all the provisions of the bill, for it contains the usual provisions; and I move that the Senate proceed, without the reading of the bill in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. SPRAGUE. No, sir.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that will not be done. I appeal to the Senator to withdraw the motion. All the other bills that we have passed of this class in the Senate have been defeated in the House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to say to the Senate, if the Senator from California will allow me, that California seems to have very great trouble in her land bills in the House, because of a strife on the part of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, Mr. JULIAN, with some California men.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must remind the Senator that it is not in order to refer to the action of members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I state this now as a reason why we should consider this one bill. This is about the only bill that has been allowed to pass there for California. It is a matter of fact known to us all. I am authorized in referring to that because of the character of a speech that was made by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the House at the last session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island withdraw his motion?

Mr. SPRAGUE. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill before the Senate will be read.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the reading of the bill at length, after the reading of the description of the road, be dispensed with.

Mr. SHERMAN. No bill has ever passed the Senate, to my knowledge, that has not been read.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This bill has once passed the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has it been read in the Senate?

Mr. HENDRICKS. A similar bill was read at great length at the last session. It has never been read at this session.

Mr. CONNESS. It is word for word the bill that we passed at the last session.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Let us have it read.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

The Secretary read the bill. It proposes to grant the right of way through the public lands to the Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, its successors and assigns, for the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California, by the most feasible route, to be selected by the company; and the right is given to the company to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of the road material for its construction. The right of way is granted to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of the road where it may pass through the public domain, and also all necessary ground for station buildings, workshops, side-tracks, &c.; but all the rights conferred upon the company by this bill are made upon the express condition that the company shall first be designated by the Legislature of the State of California as the company to be vested with the rights, privileges, franchises, and grants created or conferred by this act.

The bill further grants to the State of California, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the railroad, every alternate section of land designated by odd numbers to the extent of five alternate sections of land on each side of the railroad line as the company may adopt.

The railroad, or any part of it, is to be a post route and military railroad, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and all other Government service, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charges for such Government transportation, and all troops and munitions of war of the United States are to be transported over the railroad free of all expense or charge to the Government whenever it shall be required by the Government of the United States.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to ask the Senator from California if it is customary for the Government of the United States to cede its coal and lumber lands for railroad purposes, as provided in this bill?

Mr. CONNESS. This is drawn upon the terms of all the bills we have passed in that respect exactly.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It is customary, then, to cede coal and lumber lands for railroad purposes?

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. HENDERSON. I shall make no objection to the passage of this bill; but so far as I could understand its reading—the bill has not been printed—

Mr. CONNESS. Yes; it is printed and on our tables.

Mr. HENDERSON. It was printed at the last session. It has not been printed at this session.

Mr. CONNESS. It is in print here.

Mr. HENDERSON. Since it came from the House?

Mr. CONNESS. Just as it came from the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not examined it, and I suppose no other Senator has done so. I make no opposition to it. The Senator need not be at all uneasy. This is a road thirty-five miles in length, and they are required only to build ten miles a year. It will take about four years for the construction of a thirty-five mile road, keeping the lands withdrawn from market during that length of time. There is only the obligation to complete it by the year 1872. That is certainly four and a half years from the present time, nearly five years; and there is another provision in it that if the road is not completed the lands do not revert back to the Government.

Mr. CONNESS. They do.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is not my understanding. It says the United States shall take such course of action as will insure the completion of the road.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all; the Senator is entirely in error in that.

Mr. HENDERSON. As I understand, the lands are given directly to the company, and not to the State of California, and they are to be certified at the end of every ten miles, so that the company has a perfect right to go on and convey lands and make a good title to them. Therefore, if the road is not fully completed, of course the ten-mile tracts will have been sold, and the only security that the Government can take, that I can see under any circumstances, would be to forfeit the grant as to the remaining quantity of land on the length of the road not constructed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that at the last session he was the champion of a bill for a road running from Kansas City down South with the same provisions, and running within fifteen miles of another land-grant railroad.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am satisfied no such provision existed in that bill. Do I understand the Senator to say that the lands were granted directly to the company?

Mr. HENDRICKS. They were granted to the State for the benefit of a particular company.

Mr. CONNESS. That is the case here with this change of terms: that the grant is not made unless the Legislature of the State of California shall designate this company.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will state to the Senator from Missouri, that as a lawyer he will see the difference. In this case the grant is to a company, but upon condition that the Legislature of the State shall first designate that company as the one to enjoy the grant.

Mr. HENDERSON. An awkward affair.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Rather an awkward mode, but the result we know. In the case the Senator advocated the grant was to a State for the benefit of a named company.

Mr. HENDERSON. And if the road was not completed, then the land grant was forfeited.

Mr. HENDRICKS. And the beneficiary right of the company became fixed at once in that case.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator listen to the reading of a section of this bill?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. The sixth section is in these words:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That each and every grant, right, and privilege are so made and given to and accepted by said Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: that the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than ten miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, furnish, equip, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, 1872; and upon a failure of said company to comply with either of said conditions, the lands then unpatented to said company shall revert to the United States.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is just what I said: "the lands then unpatented;" and after the second year only are they required to complete ten miles of road per annum.

Mr. CONNESS. Those are the terms of all the bills passed. The Committee on Public Lands of this body have examined this bill carefully, and the honorable chairman declared to me that it was the most carefully drawn bill he had ever read.

Mr. HENDERSON. As I said before, I do not rise for the purpose of objecting to the passage of this bill, because the lands granted will not be a very large quantity; but I do rise for the purpose of objecting to any more legislation to-night; and I give notice now, I care not from what quarter a bill comes up, I shall object to it after the passage of this bill; because there are but a few of us here on Sunday night, and there are various nominations that we ought to attend to in executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of this bill.
The bill was passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HENDERSON. I now move an executive session.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator withdraw the motion for a moment?

Mr. HENDERSON. To pass a bill?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object to any debate.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator withdraw the motion for a moment?

Mr. HENDERSON. For what purpose?

Mr. WILSON. I want to make a statement about a little bill of one section which has no money in it or anything of that kind.

Mr. HENDERSON. I stated a while ago that I would not consent to any more legislation to-night, and I shall have to insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in the consideration of executive business, the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 1184, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1868.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 226) extending the provisions of section two of an act entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 620) for the relief of Joshua H. Butterworth; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 66) for the relief of Joseph R. Morris.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

A bill (S. No. 543) to abolish and forever prohibit the system of peonage in the Territory of New Mexico and other parts of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 563) supplementary to the several acts of Congress abolishing imprisonments for debt;

A bill (S. No. 595) regulating the disposition of an irregular fund in the custody of the Freedmen's Bureau;

A bill (H. R. No. 896) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1868; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 175) for the relief of Dyer B. Pettijohn.

CYRUS W. FIELD.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 148, presenting the thanks of Congress to Cyrus W. Field.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to present the thanks of Congress to Cyrus W. Field, of New York, for his foresight, courage, and determination in establishing telegraphic communication by means of the Atlantic cable, traversing mid-ocean and connecting the Old World with the New, and request the President of the United States to cause a gold medal to be struck, with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions, to be presented to Mr. Field. When the medal shall have been struck, the President is to cause a copy of this joint resolution to be engrossed on parchment, and transmit the same, together with the medal, to Mr. Field, to be presented to him in the name of the people of the United States of America.

Mr. MORGAN. When this joint resolution was favorably reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations I did not anticipate that there would be any serious objection to it, and I still trust there will be no objection to its passage in this or in the other branch of Congress.

The telegraphic cable lies concealed from public view somewhere upon the bed of the Atlantic ocean; yet the fact of its existence, of its perfect and complete success, and that it is now in constant daily and hourly use by the people of this country and by the people of all other countries is known throughout the civilized world.

Every member of this body, as he reads his morning newspaper, finds chronicled there the most important events that have occurred on the previous day all over the continent of Europe. The Government of the United States have used it and used it with effect, not frequently, because the appropriations annually made by Congress for this purpose are not large enough to admit of the frequent use of the Atlantic telegraph. Nevertheless, it has been used advantageously by the Government. John H. Surratt was arrested upon information conveyed through the Atlantic cable. By means of it also negotiations were suspended which were being conducted by a representative of this Government with a representative of a foreign Power, that, if consummated, would scarcely have met the approval of either the Government or people of the United States. So, too, when the Government of France changed its purpose in relation to the period for withdrawing the French troops from Mexico the telegraphic cable was used to make known to the French Emperor the dissatisfaction it would occasion to the Government and people of this country if the proposed change should be made.

All these matters are well known to the Senate and to the country. I hope it is equally well known to the Senate and to the country as it is to me that Cyrus W. Field, a citizen of New York, has been the prime mover in this enterprise from first to last.

I do not say that Mr. Field alone is entitled to all the credit; but I wish to be understood as expressing an opinion, which is largely shared by the whole country, that but for Mr. Field and Mr. C. M. Lampson, a merchant of London, and who is also a native of the United States, the enterprise would have failed. Mr. Lampson was exceedingly liberal in contributing to the cable company from his own private fortune a very large amount of funds. But he rendered still greater service in influencing others to subscribe to the object, which he was enabled to do on account of his high social and commercial standing. The Government of Great Britain has made Mr. Lampson a baronet, which is regarded as a mark of great distinction by the people of all monarchical Governments; and it is now left to the Government and people of the United States to take whatever measures they deem fit in recognition of the much greater part which was borne by one of their own citizens.

I will not trespass upon the Senate longer than to read a brief extract from the remarks made by the president of the Chamber of Commerce on the occasion of a recent banquet given to Mr. Field. On that occasion Mr. Low said:

"It was the office of Mr. Cyrus W. Field to organize and combine all the forces that were requisite to conduct this enterprise from its inception to the final and glorious issue. To it he devoted twelve years of his life, all his energy, and all his fortune. Forty times he crossed the Atlantic ocean for its sake; and as captain, now Sir James Anderson, in a recent letter, says: 'He worked hard and sacrificed the repose of his home and the repose of every one else who could bear influence on his darling scheme.' I venture to say there is not an emotion known to the human soul, whether of joy or sorrow, of pleasure or pain, of disappointment following high-wrought expectation, of anxiety bordering on despair, of hope mounting to the religion of sublimest faith, that during these twelve last years has not entered into the experience of our long-tried and well-proved champion."

By the passage of the joint resolution Congress will record its appreciation of the exertions and sacrifices made by Mr. Field in conducting to a successful result the greatest enterprise of the age, and which a distinguished member of the British Parliament has declared to be second only in importance to the discovery of the art of printing. By it also we mark the era of this great event, and establish in the most enduring form the paternity of the measure as belonging to a citizen of the United States, and we give encouragement and assurance to all of our enterprising countrymen, virtually saying to them that if they are faithful and endure to the end in laboring for the highest achievements of science and art, when successful, their toils, sufferings, and sacrifices shall not pass unnoticed and unrewarded.

Mr. SUMNER. I rejoice in every enterprise by which human industry is quickened and distant places are brought near together. In ancient days the builders of roads were treated with exalted honor. I offer them my homage now. The enterprise which is to complete the railroad connection between the Pacific and the Atlantic belongs to this class. But I believe that it is not so peculiar and exceptional as that which has connected the two continents by a telegraphic wire. It is not so historic. It is not in itself so great an epoch.

It is difficult to exaggerate the difficulty or the value of this new achievement which it is now proposed to honor.

The enterprise was original in its beginning and in every stage of its completion. It began by a telegraph line connecting St. John's, the most easterly port of America, with the main continent. This was planned by a few gentlemen at the house of Cyrus W. Field, among whom were Peter Cooper, Moses Taylor, Marshall O. Roberts, and David Dudley Field. New York and St. John's are twelve hundred miles apart. When they were brought into telegraphic association the first link was made in the chain destined to bind the two continents together. Out of this American beginning sprang those efforts which ended in the oceanic cable.

In other respects our country led the way. The first soundings across the Atlantic were made by American officers in American ships. The United States ship Dolphin first discovered the telegraphic plateau as early as 1853, and the United States ship Arctic sounded across from Newfoundland to Ireland in 1856, a year before her Majesty's ship Cyclops sailed the same course.

It was not until 1856 that this American enterprise showed itself in England, where it was carried by Mr. Field. Through his energies the Atlantic Telegraphic Company was organized in London, with a board of directors composed of English bankers and merchants, among whom was an American citizen, George Peabody. By conjoint exertions of the two countries the cable was stretched from continent to continent in 1858. Messages of good will traversed it. The United States and England seemed to be near together, while President and Queen interchanged salutations. Then suddenly the electric current ceased and the cable became a lifeless line. The enterprise itself hardly lived. But it was again quickened into being, and finally carried to a successful close. British capital contributed largely to this result, and the society had for its president an eminent Englishman, the Right Honorable James Stuart Wortley; but our countryman, Mr. Field, was the mainspring. His confidence never ceased; his energies never flagged. Twelve years of life and more than forty voyages across the Atlantic were woven into this work. It is not too much to say that he was the Alpha and the Omega of a triumph which has few parallels in history.

Englishmen who took an active part in this enterprise have received recognition and honor from the sovereign. Some have been knighted; others have been advanced in service. Meanwhile Cyrus W. Field, who did so much, has remained unnoticed by our Government. He has been honored by the popular voice; but it remains for Congress to embody this voice in a national testimonial. If it be said that there is no precedent for such a vote as that proposed, then do I reply that his case is without precedent, and it belongs to you to make a precedent by this expression of national gratitude. Thanks are given for victories in war. Give them now for a victory of peace.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. H. RILEY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 270) for the relief of J. H. Riley, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage; and as it is a small matter, to pay for services as a clerk of a committee in the other House, I ask that it be put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides that the sum of $200 be allowed and paid to J. H. Riley for services rendered by him as clerk to the House Committee on the Pacific Railroad during the first and second sessions of the present Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred the following resolutions of the Legislatures of the States of Indiana and Nevada and messages of the President of the United States, asked to be discharged from their further consideration and that they lie on the table; which was agreed to:

Resolutions of the Legislature of Indiana on the subject of foreign interference in Mexico, and the rule of neutral and belligerent rights;

Resolutions of the Legislature of Nevada in favor of the so-called Monroe doctrine and adverse to the establishment of any empire or other Government by the aid of foreign intervention on any portion of the American continent, and especially opposing the establishment of the empire of Maximilian in Mexico by French influence as an unfriendly act toward the United States;

Resolutions of the Legislature of Nevada in favor of the Monroe doctrine and against the establishment of any empire on the American continent by the aid of foreign intervention;

A message from the President of the United States informing the Senate that it is inconsistent with the public interest to communicate information in regard to the condition of affairs on the southern frontier, and especially in regard to any violation of neutrality by the Army on the Rio Grande; and

A message from the President, communicating information on the subject of a decree of the so-called Emperor of Mexico of the 3d of October, 1865.

SUPPLIES FOR WALLACE'S COMMAND.

Mr. POMEROY, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 226) extending the provisions of section two of an act entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution of the House No. 226, extending the provisions of section two of the act entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows, namely:

That the House agree to the first amendment of the Senate, with an amendment, which is to strike out the words of the said amendment and insert in lieu thereof these words: "and whose authority shall be proven to the satisfaction of the accounting officer;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its second amendment.

S. C. POMEROY,
IRA HARRIS,
LYMAN TRUMBULL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
ROBERT C. SCHENCK,
RALPH HILL,
A. J. KUYKENDALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the second amendment?

Mr. POMEROY. It is a mere verbal amendment, substituting "persons" for "officers." The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers, disagreed to by the Senate, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN L. DAWSON of Pennsylvania, Mr. J. F. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. WILLIAM B. ALLISON of Iowa, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 176) relative to the post office and sub-Treasury of the city of Boston.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue;

A bill (H. R. No. 1184) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 308) to enable the Secretary of War to carry out an agreement in relation to water-power for the arsenal at Rock Island.

COMPENSATION OF TENNESSEE SENATORS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution in relation to the compensation of the Senators from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to pay to the Senators from the State of Tennessee the compensation allowed by law, to be computed from the commencement of the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What committee has considered that?

Mr. HARRIS. I will state that this resolution is in conformity with a resolution that has been adopted by the House of Representatives in relation to the Representatives from that State. These Senators have been in attendance during the whole of this Congress. The State of Tennessee elected Senators, and it seems to me that these gentlemen are entitled to compensation as much as the members of the House of Representatives. The House have paid their members long since according to the principle of this resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "the commencement of the Thirty-Ninth Congress" and inserting "the date of the resolution of Congress recognizing Tennessee as entitled to representation."

If the resolution shall be adopted in its present form it will be a precedent for all the other States. I presume there can be no question about that; and I wish Senators to consider whether they are ready now to embark in that direction and with such a precedent. I think it is not advisable. If my amendment is adopted the allowance will be precisely according to the fact.

Mr. CONNESS. It is impossible that this resolution can be taken as a precedent if adopted in the form in which it is reported, because I think in the resolution of Congress admitting Tennessee to representation it was specially declared that Tennessee was an exceptional case, and the reasons were stated in the preamble. No argument can be deduced from it. I have not the preamble near me now; but I think it will be found that that sets the matter entirely right.

Mr. LANE. I shall vote to pay this compensation from the time of the election of these Senators. The fact that we admitted them to seats at all is a recognition direct that we regarded their election as legal. If legal, the legality commenced at the time of the election, and their claim for compensation must necessarily commence at the same time.

Mr. POMEROY. There was a little experience on this subject that was somewhat interesting to me, not personally, but to my State. The State of Kansas was here asking admission into the Union under the constitution with which she was admitted for a whole session. On the 26th of February, about six days before the adjournment, Kansas was admitted into the Union. A member of the House, Mr. Conway, had been here the whole session prosecuting our claim for admission. After the State was admitted he applied for compensation for that session, not for the whole Congress, but for the session that he was actually in attendance; and the House refused it to Mr. Conway. The Senators were not elected until after admission of the State. Mr. Conway then presented his case to the Committee of Claims of the House, and the Committee of Claims reported against it; and although he was duly elected, and prosecuted the claim for the admission of Kansas during the whole session, he was only able to draw his per diem pay for the time that he was actually a member, which, during that Congress, amounted to about a week. That having been the action of the House, I do not know whether there are any different rules in the Senate; but it occurs to me that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is in harmony with the precedents that have been set.

Mr. HOWE. I desire to remind the Senator from Kansas, of the difference, which, in my judgment, is very manifest, between the precedent which he states and the case before the Senate. When the Representative was elected from Kansas there was no law on the statute-book which authorized Kansas to send a Representative to Congress, and before the Representative from Kansas could claim any right to a seat or any pay as the Representative of a State there must be some law entitling Kansas to the prerogatives of a State?

Mr. POMEROY. How was it with Tennessee?

Mr. HOWE. I will remind my friend of what I understand to have been the case with regard to Tennessee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Wisconsin will allow me, I will read for the information of my friend from Kansas the joint resolution which restored Tennessee to her lost relations with the Union:

"Whereas in the year 1861 the government of the State of Tennessee was seized upon and taken possession of by persons in hostility to the United States, and the inhabitants of said State, in pursuance of an act of Congress, were declared to be in a state of insurrection against the United States; and whereas said State government can only be restored to its former political relations in the Union by the consent of the law-making power of the United States; and whereas the people of said State did, on the 22d day of February, 1865"

Which it will be noticed was prior to the commencement of the Thirty-Ninth Congress—

"by a large popular vote adopt and ratify a constitution of government whereby slavery was abolished, and all ordinances and laws of secession and debts contracted under the same were declared void; and whereas a State government has been organized under said constitution which has ratified the amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing slavery, also the amendment proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and has done other acts proclaiming and denoting loyalty: Therefore,

Be it resolved, &c., That the State of Tennessee is hereby restored to its former proper, practical relations to the Union, and is again entitled to be represented by Senators and Representatives in Congress."

I think that ought to settle the case.

Mr. HOWE. I have no doubt that settles the case in the judgment of a great many Senators. It does not exactly settle the case in my own judgment, because in my own judgment it is settled by other considerations.

The Senator from Kansas asked me how it was with Tennessee. I was about to state to him that when these Senators were elected from Tennessee there was on the statute-book of the United States a law authorizing the State of Tennessee to send representatives, or admitting Tennessee into the Union and entitling her, as a State of the Union, to a representation in the two Houses of Congress. The right which was conferred upon Tennessee by that statute never had been taken from Tennessee by statute. When these Senators were elected certain facts had transpired, certain events had happened, which, in my judgment, authorized the Congress of the United States to withdraw that right from Tennessee; but nothing had transpired which, in my judgment, authorized any other tribunal in the world to withdraw the right from Tennessee. The Executive, I think, could not do it; Tennessee could not abjure it in point of law; but upon the happening of certain facts I thought Congress could withdraw the right, and repeatedly during the time from 1861 to 1865 I urged, and I think the honorable Senator from New York, [Mr. HARRIS,] as well as many other Senators, urged, that Congress should take action in that direction. I know I urged it, that that right should be withdrawn. It was not; and, as I said before, no other tribunal could withdraw it. So when these Senators were elected Tennessee had no notice that she was to be deprived, or that that right was to be denied her; and in pursuance of the old statute she chose these Senators. They came here; they waited for the adjudication of the Senate upon her right to representation, and the Senate waited for an adjudication of Congress, as the Senate was bound to wait; for I think the Senate should not alone deny that right to Tennessee. The Senate should follow the direction of Congress and not dictate to Congress. The Senate waited for the decision of Congress upon that point, and finally the decision of Congress was made in the resolution which has just been read in the hearing of the Senate by the Senator from Vermont.

In this view of the case our action in reference to the Senators from Tennessee, it seems to me, can form no precedent whatever to guide us in reference to Senators who may hereafter come from others of those communities, because since then we have taken action, not the Senate alone, not the House alone, but the law-making power of the United States, has taken action in reference to all those communities, and has declared that they are not entitled to this right of representation nor to any of the other prerogatives which belong to an American State.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not exactly know to what conclusion the Senator arrives upon his argument; but I infer that he is of the opinion that these Senators are entitled to pay from the beginning of the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir, if they were elected. Mr. WILLIAMS. There are two considerations that occur to my mind bearing upon that question: one is, as to whether or not these men performed the services for which you propose to pay them—they did not perform those services, and therefore they are not entitled to pay upon that ground; the other, as to whether or not Tennessee was entitled to representation in Congress before they took their seats—if Tennessee was not entitled to representation in Congress prior to that time I do not know how it can be argued that these Senators are entitled to pay prior to that time. Is it true that the Senators from Nebraska, for instance, who are to be admitted to day, if you please, are entitled to pay for the whole of the Thirty-Ninth Congress? If they are, then of course it will follow that the Senators from Tennessee are entitled to pay for the entire Congress. But what is the reason that the Senators from Nebraska are not entitled to pay for the whole Congress? Is it not because Nebraska was not entitled to representation upon this floor until she was duly admitted according to law, and therefore the Senators are not entitled to pay? If that be true of Nebraska, it is equally true of Tennessee, for Tennessee was not entitled to representation in the Senate until by a law of Congress that right was determined, and then and there the right commenced of these persons to take their pay as well in the case of Tennessee as in the case of Nebraska, and not otherwise, as it seems to me. I think that the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts has force, that this will be a precedent. To say that there are some recitals in the preamble to the resolution admitting Tennessee amounts to nothing so far as the legal question is concerned, because the rights of these men and the rights of other men do not depend upon what the preamble may say as to the admission of a certain State. It is upon these grounds that it seems to me this pay ought not to extend beyond the time that Tennessee was recognized as entitled to representation.

Mr. HOWE. Addressing myself right to the two questions which the Senator from Oregon has started, I have to say this: that I do not think the right of these gentlemen to pay depends upon the question whether they have in fact rendered the service of Senators. If they were elected, if the State had the right to elect Senators, and did elect, and they were here ready to perform the duty of Senators, and we would not permit them to perform that duty, then I think they were entitled to pay, irrespective of the question whether they had in fact rendered the service or not.

The second question started by the Senator is whether Tennessee had the right to elect Senators.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The right of representation.

Mr. HOWE. The right of representation. Unquestionably that is a legitimate inquiry, and is a condition precedent to their being paid. How shall we determine the question of their right? I take it, it is to be determined in reference to Tennessee as it is to be determined in every other community within the jurisdiction of the United States—determined not by the Constitution, for the Constitution does not say who are or who are not entitled to representation; it says States generally; we are to look at the statutes of the United States, and not of any State nor of any local community, to determine who is entitled to choose representatives. Looking at the statutes as they stood when these Senators were elected, there was one which authorized Tennessee to choose Senators and to choose Representatives. I said in the case of Arkansas, and repeat now in the case of Tennessee, that that statute never had been repealed; that statute never could be repealed either by the President or by the Senate or by the House, nor by any tribunal save the Congress of the United States or the law-making power of the United States, and that tribunal had not repealed it. Facts, I repeat, had transpired which authorized, in my judgment, its repeal, which made it the duty of Congress to repeal it; but they did not do it; and while that statute stood these Senators were elected. They came here. The judgment of Congress upon those facts had not been pronounced, and the Senate withheld its adjudication upon their right to seats until Congress could adjudicate the right of Tennessee to send Senators here. Finally that adjudication came, and when it came it was not a judgment denying the right of Tennessee to representation, but a judgment conceding the right of representation, and then they were admitted to their seats, and then they began to discharge the duty of Senators. They had been prepared to discharge that duty from the beginning. We have now, as I repeat once more, determined the right as to all the rest of those communities by a legislative act, and this question cannot arise hereafter in any other case.

Mr. POMEROY. In a brief word I wish to reply to the Senator from Wisconsin. He said the case I cited was not parallel. I think there is not such a wide distinction between the two cases as he claims. We were entitled to representation under a law of Congress not less distinctive than was the State of Tennessee; because after having been rejected once in our application here without an enabling act we did come by an enabling act and by an act of Congress.

Mr. HOWE. Let me say to my friend right there that I simply misunderstood the facts. Of course as he states the facts now, I consider the case of Kansas as parallel to the case before the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. Then I do not choose to pursue the argument.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nobody is disposed at this time of night to listen to anything, unless it may be Scripture probably; but I wish to suggest to Senators on both sides of the question that this is not a strict question of law. We are not sitting here as a court or jury to determine according to the law of the land how much these persons are entitled to out of the Treasury; but we are sitting here in our legislative capacity to determine how much money it is fit and right, according to the usages and practices of the Government, to pay them. That is the question. We can make them a gift, if we please, or do any other thing in that respect which shall seem to us to be just.

Now, then, the State of Tennessee on the 22d of February, 1865, adopted a constitution which was thoroughly republican, or as thoroughly republican as that of most of the northern States, to state it a little more accurately; because I believe it did not grant universal suffrage as it ought to have done. Tennessee, we all know now, was then, and has ever since been, so far as its government is concerned, thoroughly loyal to the Constitution, thoroughly loyal to the country, thoroughly opposed to violence and disturbance of every description, as much so as the State of Vermont or the State of Massachusetts or the State of Wisconsin. I do not say that she did not have within her borders men who had been hostile to the Government and who were so still; but the government, the Legislature, the Governor, their members of Congress and their Senators were men who, as a whole—because we will not individualize exceptions—were just as true to the Government as any of us were; and I am free to say that the people of the State of Vermont, who are generally not over anxious about admitting these recusant States into representation, were anxious and impatient and dissatisfied during all the time that elapsed after Tennessee took her stand upon the side this joint resolution recites that she did, and truly, that her representatives were not admitted. They could not see the reason why they should not have been admitted. In my own opinion, it was wise that they should not be; but I am only now speaking of the sentiment of the country and the sentiment of the North. These Senators were elected. In the fulfillment of their functions, in doing their duty to their State, they came here and sought admittance. Finally we accorded it to them. Now, without going into a question of mere law to ascertain whether in point of strict law they are technically entitled to this compensation back to this time or not, I say that it seems to me it is fit and right that they should be paid; and it does not appear to me, upon the recitals of this joint resolution, upon the difference that exists between the case of Tennessee and that of these other southern States, in respect to whom we do not desire to make a precedent, there is any danger at all in doing them this justice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DOOLITTLE in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed to the resolution by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

The resolution was adopted.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, numbered one, three, four, five, six, seven, nine, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fifteen, sixteen, nineteen, twenty-two, twenty-three, and twenty-four, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered two, eight, ten, fourteen, seventeen, and eighteen.

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the twentieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: in line three of said amendment strike out the words "for the present fiscal year;" and after the word "clerks" in line four insert the following words: "to take effect from and after the 1st day of January, 1867."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the twenty-first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with amendments as follows: in line eight of said amendment, after the word "eastern," insert "and western;" and in same line strike out the word "district" where it first occurs and insert "districts."

W. P. FESSENDEN,

J. W. GRIMES,

W. M. STEWART,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

THADDEUS STEVENS,

JOHN A. KASSON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will answer any question any gentleman desires to ask me in regard to this report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Maine how this leaves the salaries of the United States judges?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Precisely as the clause was inserted by the Senate, except that the words "and western" are put in after the word "eastern," so as to include the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania in the same class.

The report was concurred in.

ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers, disagreed to by the Senate, and insisted upon by the House; and

On motion by Mr. WILSON, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the said resolution, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. GRIMES, and Mr. WILLIAMS.

DESTITUTION AT THE SOUTH.

Mr. STEWART. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Whereas it is reported from various sources deemed authentic that extreme want and danger of starvation exist extensively in several of the southern States, owing to the failure of the crops and to other causes;

Resolved, That Major General O. O. Howard be requested to report with the least practical delay what information he has from official sources with regard to the said extreme want, and what may be his estimate of the amount of funds necessary to purchase food to meet it if it should be found to exist.

I simply wish to remark that I am informed by General Howard that there are a large number of the people of the South suffering that he is unable to relieve. I desire to obtain accurate and reliable information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the resolution by inserting after General Howard's name the words "Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau," so that it shall be addressed to him in his official character, and not as a mere private person.

Mr. STEWART. I accept the amendment. The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, at twelve o'clock midnight, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

DUTIES ON WOOL AND WOOLENS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now ask leave to introduce the bill which I attempted to introduce early in the evening. I have modified it so as to make the extension of the time of the taking effect of the tariff act but five days. I believe the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is willing to agree to that. I hope it will be acted on at once.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 635) to extend the time for the taking effect of the act relating to wool and woollens; which was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the bill so as to make the time ten days.

Mr. FESSENDEN and others. The Senator from Vermont will object to that, and that will carry it over and we shall lose it.

Mr. CONNESS. Will Senators allow the Senator from Vermont to do his own objecting?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will state to the Senator that the Senator from Vermont did object decidedly and thoroughly to any bill of the sort, and I at least persuaded him to agree to five days, which was all he would agree to, and he withdrew his objection. If the Senator can persuade him to the contrary it will be all very well.

Mr. CONNESS. I rather think the Senator from Vermont, when having that under consideration, forgot the slight circumstance that there are two sides to this continent. I know that it is a circumstance that is liable to be forgotten. I try to keep it in Senator's memories. I hope I may succeed. If the Senator will say that he objects, of course I have nothing further to say; but it seems very strange that my honorable friend from Maine will do his objecting for him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DOOLITTLE.) The question is on the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is to strike out "five" and insert "ten" before the word "days."

Mr. ANTHONY. Of course it is useless to attempt to offer any amendment in the present stage of this bill, but I wish to state that when I voted for the act referred to I supposed it went into effect at the same time as the tariff bill which was lost between the two Houses. I supposed it went into effect on the 1st of April, and that the goods that are on their way would pay the duties which the Government agreed to let the goods in for when parties bought them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That shows you ought not to have passed the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. The bill was passed without consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. Unless it is the pleasure of the Senate and the Senator from Vermont to allow this to be done, I do not desire to harass the Senate, and I shall withdraw it.

Mr. MORGAN. If it is withdrawn I have nothing to say.

Mr. CONNESS. I say unless Senators assent to it.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the pleasure of the Senate, but not of the Senator from Vermont. This bill is all we can get.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator from Vermont speak on the subject?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir, I will speak. I am satisfied that I have made a mistake, a decided mistake; because if I allow this bill to pass and it goes to the House, I do not know what wisdom may penetrate that body; probably correct wisdom; and it may be sent back here with an amendment to make it ten days or thirty, and then it will be beyond my control entirely. I have made a mistake in yielding at all; and when the question shall be on reading the bill the third time I shall be ready to state whether I object or not. I shall be willing, however, because I want to keep faith with my friends—for of course it will be no use to pass this bill unless the House will pass it—if the House pass a bill so that there shall be an opportunity to know precisely what are our rights for five days, I will assent to its passage at once; but I perceive now what I did not think of when I consented before; I know no Senator here will take advantage of it; but if the House send back the bill with an amendment to make it ten days, what then?

Mr. SHERMAN. It can only pass there by unanimous consent. If any member of the House chooses, he can by his arbitrary will stop the passage of this bill. If the Senator from Vermont says one of his colleagues is decidedly opposed to it he can defeat the passage of the bill. I will state this, and it is for the Senator from Vermont to consider. I urged the Senate not to pass any amendment to the wool bill, knowing that the bill took effect from the date of the passage of the act; but at the same time I stated that I would be perfectly willing to vote for a joint resolution fixing a future time for it to take effect. If any other Senator had moved to amend this bill, postponing the date of its taking effect, it would have passed the Senate by a two-thirds or three-fourths vote; because it is utterly impossible for them in New York to know the rates of duty fixed by this bill, and they must have time. I therefore think the five days too short; but as the Senator thought he could not consent to more than five days, we had better take it at five days.

Mr. MORGAN. By all means take it at five days.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Cannot we dispense with the rule so as to pass such measures as we want to do?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am bound in justice to say to the Senator from Ohio that I do not assent to his proposition that it would pass by two thirds or three fourths at ten days or thirty days, because when we passed the main tariff bill with our amendments the 1st of April was stricken out on motion of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. HENDERSON,] and the act was required to take effect on its passage. The subject was discussed, it may be privately in conversation among Senators, and I was convinced it ought to take effect on its passage. I had the honor of an interview with an apparently very candid and fair constituent of my friend from Ohio, the president of the State Agricultural Association and Wool-Growers' Association, who, with other gentlemen, when the other bill was under consideration, urged me as one of the Senators of this body to be sure to have it take effect on its passage, on account of the fact that by the telegraph and other means of communication wool and woollens would be brought here and the market glutted; so that to pass a tariff bill of this description would be perfectly nugatory so far as the operations of this year were concerned. It met the approval of my judgment, and I concurred heartily with my friend from Missouri, and it was adopted in this body without a division. Therefore I think the Senator has no right to say that but for my arbitrary action, as he chooses to style it, it would pass by a two-thirds or a three-fourths majority.

Now, as to its being arbitrary, because we gain wisdom by experience, it is not many days since the Senator from Ohio made precisely this objection—objecting to the third reading of a bill which it did not appear to his judgment right to be passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not complain of the Senator objecting. I say he has a right to do it; and I would do it without a moment's hesitation if I thought a measure was wrong. I am not calling him to account for that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I have nothing more to say.

Mr. CONNESS. In that respect the two Senators are about alike. That is my opinion. I withdraw my amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before I consent to that, as I can still object to its third reading, I wish to have it understood, by general consent that the faith of the Senate or the gentlemen of the Senate is pledged to that fact, that if it should happen that this bill comes back to us making it ten, twenty, or any greater number of days the Senate shall feel itself bound to stick to five days.

Mr. CONNESS. I think that is an unwarrantable proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good; I object to the third reading of the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I shall certainly never make any such objection as the Senator suggests; but I think the Senator ought to draw on the good faith of his associates sufficiently without exacting a pledge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; I object to the third reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER pro tempore. Objection being made, the Chair rules that the bill cannot be read a third time on the day it is presented.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 746) for the organization of land districts in the Territories of Arizona, Idaho, Utah, and Montana.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 578) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and for other purposes."

A bill (S. No. 614) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to transfer the United States iron-clad Onondaga to George Quintard, of New York;

A bill (S. No. 625) to amend an act entitled "An act concerning the fire department of Washington city," approved February 18, 1867; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 181) concerning the right of way for the survey and construction of an inter-oceanic ship-caual through the Isthmus of Darien.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill of the Senate No. 603 to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1867.

MAIL SERVICE TO HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate No. 603, to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

BREVETS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 634) relating to brevets in the Army of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WILSON. If there be no objection, I should like to have the bill put upon its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to confer brevet rank on officers in the Army of the United States on account of gallant, meritorious, or faithful conduct in the volunteer service prior to their appointment in the Army of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. No. 577) to regulate the disposition of the proceeds of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under the laws relating to the customs, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

FINES, PENALTIES, AND FORFEITURES.

Mr. CRESWELL. The bill to regulate the disposition of fines, penalties, and forfeitures was passed in full Senate on a careful consideration, and it has been returned by the House of Representatives with certain amendments, which are merely verbal. I ask that those amendments be now concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until nine o'clock in the morning, leaving that matter as the unfinished business.

Mr. CRESWELL. We may as well take up the bill and dispose of the amendments; it will take but a few minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a motion that the Senate take a recess until nine o'clock.

Mr. CRESWELL. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not insist upon his motion until this bill shall be taken up. The amendments of the House are merely verbal.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. CRESWELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 577) to regulate the disposition of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under laws relating to the customs, and for other purposes.

The first amendment was in line seven of page 1, after the word "merchandise" to insert "of greater value than $500."

The next amendment was on page 3, section two, line thirteen, to strike out the words "distinctly and specifically" and to insert "the same."

The next amendment was on page 4, section four, to strike out from the words "the ninety-first" to the words "ninety-nine" in line four, inclusive.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. I renew my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and at one o'clock and thirty-five minutes a. m. the Senate took a recess till nine o'clock a. m.

MONDAY MORNING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at nine o'clock a. m., (Monday, March 4.)

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Ceran St. Vrain, for himself and the heirs of Ignatio Vigil, praying for the confirmation of a private land claim in New Mexico, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, requesting the commissioners of the land office of that State and the commissioners of the sinking fund of New York city to execute to the United States the proper conveyances for a portion of land within the limits of what is known as the battery extension, and asking an appropriation to complete the improvements and buildings upon the land so conveyed, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, inasmuch as when the deed is executed and the title approved by the Attorney General steps will be at once taken to commence the work under an appropriation already made.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the following bills; which was agreed to, and they were ordered to lie on the table:

A bill (S. No. 111) to provide for the national defense by establishing a uniform militia and organizing an active volunteer militia force throughout the United States;

A bill (S. No. 540) to amend an act entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished by the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864; and

A bill (S. No. 32) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri river at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the following bills and joint resolution, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 633) in relation to certain public buildings in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 1001) for the relief of William B. Todd;

A bill (H. R. No. 1234) to incorporate the joint stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) instructing the Secretary of the Interior to order a survey for a bridge or bridges across the Potomac.

DISTRICT JAIL.

Mr. MORRILL. I am further instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 304) in relation to the erection of a jail in the District of Columbia, to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration, and I will state to the Senate what the exigency seems to be. Last session the erection of a jail was authorized and its location left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. The House Committee on the District of Columbia have an apprehension, from facts reported to them, that this jail is being located at a very inconvenient and unsuitable place, inconvenient in that its distance is a mile or a mile and a half from the court-house, unsuitable in that it is a very low, wet piece of ground. This resolution contemplates a reëxamination of that subject by engineers at the head of whom is to be Quartermaster General Meigs, and the postponement of the subject until a report from that commission at the next session. I hope the Senate will consent to the passage of the resolution.

By unanimous consent the joint resolution (H. R. No. 304) in relation to the erection of a jail in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that no money shall be paid from the Treasury toward the erection of a new jail for the District of Columbia under the act of July 28, 1866, unless the letting of the contract shall be delayed until perfect plans shall have been completed and approved by a board of three disinterested and competent engineers and architects, of whom Quartermaster General Meigs and A. B. Mullet, architect of the Treasury Department, shall be two; nor unless the letting of the contract shall have been open to fair and equal competition on reasonable notice printed in two leading newspapers in the city of Washington after such approval of the new and perfected plans, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to select a new site.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia where it has been proposed to erect this jail, and where it would be erected if some legislation was not had?

Mr. MORRILL. Just at the junction of K street west and the boundary of the city.

Mr. GRIMES. This subject was under consideration some years ago when I had the honor to be a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I think the present chairman of the committee was also a member at that time. The Senate agreed to appropriate $100,000 for the purpose of aiding in the erection of a jail, but that appropriation failed in the House of Representatives. While the subject was under consideration then the committee gave considerable attention to it and examined the proposed sites for the jail. I believe they were unanimous in the opinion that the present location of the jail was very inappropriate; and that it was very desirable that when a new jail should be constructed it should not be upon Judiciary square nor the jail square, and they were also unanimous in the opinion that the present structure was wholly unadapted to the purpose for which it is used and is a disgrace to the country, and that a new jail ought to be built. They were equally unanimous, I think, that it ought to be built upon a public square belonging to the United States, a piece of reserved ground to the east of the Capitol, and in the neighborhood, I think, of the Congressional burying ground; and if it is proposed to locate it at the place stated by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I trust this joint resolution will not pass until there can be a further examination as to sites. The place where it is proposed to put it, according to his statement, is certainly not the best adapted to the purpose, especially in view of the fact that the Government now owns a place that is well adapted to the purpose.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate take a recess for half an hour.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of half an hour the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to take up House bill No. 1234, and I will say that it is a very small affair any way. The corporators of the proposed company are gentlemen of the very highest respectability, and they seem very solicitous that the bill should pass in order to enable them to purchase a certain hall contemplated by the bill. I hope there will be no objection to its consideration at the present moment.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1234) to incorporate the joint stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The incorporators are S. P. Chase, O. O. Howard, John R. Elvans, S. L. Brown, H. D. Cooke, James Harlan, George P. Fisher, O. H. Browning, James A. Ekin, A. R. Shepherd, B. H. Steinmetz, William Ballantyne, A. C. Richards, F. A. Lutz, L. Clephane, and Samuel Norment, their associates and successors. The purpose of the company is to erect a suitable building for the meetings of the association, a hall, reading-rooms, and library. The capital stock is to be $200,000, in shares of twenty-five dollars each.

Mr. CRESWELL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine if that bill does not exempt all the property belonging to this association from taxation of every kind?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, to the amount of the capital stock, $200,000—all property used for this specific purpose.

Mr. CRESWELL. To the amount of $200,000?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRESWELL. I very much question the propriety of entering upon that sort of thing in this District at this time. It seems to me all property should be held liable to its proper share of taxation.

Mr. MORRILL. The honorable Senator will find that heretofore, by act of Congress, all property dedicated to charitable uses is exempt.

Mr. CRESWELL. The difficulty is that the thing is liable to abuse. I have known several States in which after having begun that policy they were obliged to abandon it by reason of the almost certain abuse to which it is apt to run.

Mr. MORRILL. The correction of that in this case is that the matter is in the power of Congress. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is reserved.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the reading of the part of the bill referred to by my colleague.

The Secretary read the seventh section, as follows:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the building and grounds, the rents and revenues of the same, and the stock issued to erect said building, shall be forever exempt from taxation.

Mr. GRIMES. That seems to imply that this corporation can put up buildings for rent, and I understand from the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] that they do intend to put up buildings so as to rent stores. If they are going to do that why should not such property be taxed as well as if it was owned by individuals?

Mr. HENDERSON. I have glanced over this bill. If I remember it aright it is intended to have an institution where the young men of this city can have a library. It is an institution I think quite desirable in the city. I do not see why it should be taxed any more than a church or a school-house. It is true there is a provision in the bill enabling the association to rent part of the building. I apprehend that the building they intend to put up will perhaps have a hall and a lecture-room, a library and reading-rooms above, and that the lower rooms will be rented. That, I presume, is the whole intention. The building is limited in value to $200,000, cannot exceed that, and the bill will to that extent exempt property in the District of Columbia from taxation, but really I can see nothing objectionable in the measure. It is a thing that is quite desirable if the purposes of the bill are carried out strictly, and I cannot see any authority to transgress the principles of the bill. As the Senator from Maine says, the power is reserved to Congress to repeal, alter, or modify the act at any time. If at any time it should appear that instead of being an institution for the cultivation of the minds of young men by the collection of a library where young men can be, instead of spending their evenings in playing billiards, &c., if such should turn out to be the case, then of course the provision may be altered and the property subjected to taxation. The lower story of the proposed building will probably be rented, but that will only be a means of collecting together money to add to the library instead of getting it up by subscription. Really I can see no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator if he understands that there is any obligation in this bill to apply these rents to the purpose in view?

Mr. HENDERSON. They cannot go outside of it.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 557) for the relief of James Fulton, paymaster United States Navy;

A bill (S. No. 588) for the relief of William H. Webb; and

A bill (S. No. 609) allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into the port of Albany to be secured and paid at that place.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 746) to create the office of surveyor general in the Territory of Montana, and establish a land office in the Territories of Montana and Arizona;

A bill (H. R. No. 1173) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 1227) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 226) extending the provisions of section two of an act entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 270) for the relief of J. H. Riley.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. JOHNSON, it was Ordered, That the levee commissioners of the State of Louisiana have leave to withdraw their petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON presented a memorial of Major General Sheridan, Major General Ord, and other officers of the United States Army, praying that officers withdrawn from the active service and placed upon the retired list may be allowed to retain their service or longevity rations; which was ordered to lie on the table, the subject having been acted on.

DISBURSING OFFICERS.

Mr. WILSON, from the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate joint resolution No. 173, to facilitate the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, that the House of Representatives recede from their amendment to said resolution.

HENRY WILSON,
GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
JAMES W. GRIMES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN L. DAWSON,
JAMES F. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

THOMAS D. BURRALL.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 591) for the relief of Thomas D. Burrall, which has been reported favorably from the Committee on Patents—a very just measure.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 591) for the relief of Thomas D. Burrall was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The letters-patent granted to Thomas D. Burrall, on the 6th day of December, 1845, for improvements in corn-shellers, and which was extended by the Commissioner of Patents, and afterward surrendered and reissued, which reissue bears date the 10th day of October, 1865, and will expire the 6th day of December, 1866, will be by the bill extended for the term of seven years, commencing on the 6th day of December, 1866, and ending on the 6th day of December, 1873, for the benefit of Burrall, his heirs and legal representatives, upon the conditions set forth. The Commissioner of Patents, upon the presentation of the patent and the payment of the fees and charges provided by law, is to extend the patent by making a certificate thereon, or upon a certified copy thereof, of such extension in the name of Burrall, if in his judgment, upon full hearing, the same should be granted. The patent so extended is to have the same effect as if originally granted for the term extending to the end of the term to which it is extended by the act; but the extended patent is to be open to legal inquiry and decision in the same manner as if issued under the general law relating to patents, and all persons enjoying the lawful use of the improvements secured by the patent, and the purchaser of any machine so in use, may continue to use the same as if the act had not passed.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of the report in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that there is no report from the Senate Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, but there is a report from the House Committee.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us hear that.

The Secretary read the report made by the House Committee on Patents. The committee believe that Burrall was the original and first inventor of the improvement in corn-shellers, which was described in his original specification. He endeavored to bring it into general use; but owing to the fact that he was extensively engaged in improving and manufacturing other agricultural implements he did not for several years press his improvement in corn-shellers as he otherwise would have done. By reason of losses sustained by him in endeavoring to improve implements of agriculture, and particularly in his endeavors to improve the mower and reaper, he was subjected to heavy losses, which compelled him to suspend his business. When he again attempted to introduce his improved sheller into general use he found that it had been extensively imitated; and when preparing to enforce his patent he was advised that it was invalid by reason of defective claim, which rendered it necessary that he should surrender it and have it reissued with amended claims, which was done, and a reissue granted, bearing date October 10, 1865, leaving the patent less than eighteen months to run. The committee, being satisfied that the invention is useful and will be of much advantage to the public, and that the inventor has received no remuneration, recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to make some inquiry in regard to this bill. I understand the Senator from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] was a member of the Patent Committee when this bill was considered, and has examined it, and perhaps he can enlighten the Senate. It provides that a patent shall be renewed to Thomas D. Burrall for an improvement in corn-shell-ers. It would seem from the bill that a reissue has already been made, and that he has had the benefit of this patent for twenty-one years, the original patent having been issued in 1845, and it expired in 1866 on the 6th day of December. It was intended that this bill should take effect before the expiration of the patent, and I suppose it will now be necessary to amend it so as to protect parties who have been going on and making corn-shell-ers since the expiration of the patent.

Mr. POLAND. The bill contains that provision now.

Mr. GRIMES. I am not so sure of that. It seems to me to be rather inartificially drawn. It declares absolutely by law that the patent shall be extended for seven years, and then authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to extend it if in his judgment it is a proper case.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT RILEY RESERVATION.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 267, which was under consideration some days ago, but the morning hour expired before we reached a vote upon it.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 267) for the reduction of the military reservation of Fort Riley, and to grant land for bridge purposes to the State of Kansas, was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GRIMES. I would inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether or not the opinion of the Secretary of War has been obtained in regard to this matter?

Mr. POMEROY. Yes, sir. In the first place the Committee on Military Affairs of the other House referred the question to the Secretary of War, and he consulted the commanding officers, got their report and the report of General Grant. Then he sent all the papers, with a map, to the committee of the House. The resolution was passed by the House, and then the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate went through the same process, and sent it to the Department for the second time. The Government built a bridge there some years ago at great expense, but it was taken off by a flood. It is on a reserve where the State has not a right, and the citizens have not the right to build a bridge. If you give us the right to build a bridge and allow us to tax the Government toll for its use of it we shall not ask any land. The Government for the last ten or twelve years has been paying on an average $6,000 a year to a private company, whose only rights consisted in a permit from the commander of the fort to put up a temporary bridge.

Mr. GRIMES. Amend it so as to charge toll.

Mr. POMEROY. This spring the freshet has taken off all the bridges, so that there is nothing left there now. The Government has either got to pay the expense it has been to the last few years in tolls or it has got to put up a bridge which cannot cost less than $60,000, or it has got to let the State do it. The Committee on Military Affairs, after full investigation—the Senator from Michigan [Mr. HOWARD] had it in charge—reported this joint resolution.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe the question pending is on an amendment offered by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. CONNESS. I withdraw the amendment, for it is clear that the bill cannot pass if amended; and upon the statement made by the honorable Senator from Kansas, that the people there are more interested in having it a free bridge than even we can be, and that the Legislature of Kansas will make that provision without any doubt, I beg leave to withdraw the amendment.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolutions of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 463) for the relief of Samuel M. Beatty, of Ohio;

A bill (S. No. 606) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts," approved July 27, 1866;

A bill (S. No. 611) to extend to and for the benefit of Eliza Wells letters-patent heretofore issued to Henry A. Wells, deceased;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 178) in relation to national banking associations; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 179) to provide for the exchange of certain public documents.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

An act (S. No. 578) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri," and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 614) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transfer the United States iron-clad Onondaga to George Quintard, of New York;

An act (S. No. 577) to regulate the disposition of the proceeds of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under the laws relating to the customs, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 603) to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands;

An act (S. No. 620) for the relief of Joshua H. Butterworth;

An act (S. No. 625) to amend an act entitled "An act concerning the fire department of Washington city," approved February 18, 1867;

An act (S. No. 576) relating to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 66) for the relief of Joseph R. Morris;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 176) relative to the post office and sub-Treasury of the city of Boston;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 181) concerning the right of way for the survey and construction of an inter-oceanic ship-canal through the Isthmus of Darien;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 304) in relation to the erection of a jail in the District of Columbia; and

An act (H. R. No. 865) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California.

POTOMAC BRIDGES.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 297. It is for the purpose of getting a survey of the best locality for a bridge across the Potomac. The Long bridge has been washed away, as Senators are aware, and this is a matter that should be attended to immediately.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) instructing the Secretary of the Interior to order a survey for a bridge or bridges across the Potomac was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSOCIATED PRESS REPORTS.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I desire to make a correction in fact of a statement which I see in the reports of the Associated Press of the proceedings last evening, and I desire to get the correction into those reports if I can. I have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with the gentleman who furnishes those reports. I have thought on several occasions that I was a little unfortunate in the character of those reports.

I noticed yesterday morning that it was stated in substance that, not upon the motion, but upon the argument of my friend from California, [Mr. CONNESS,] the Senate was induced to proceed to the consideration of business from the Committee on Claims. That was very true in itself, because I think it was upon the argument of my friend from California that the Senate concluded to enter upon that business. Nevertheless, as a fact, the Senate did enter upon the consideration of that business, did proceed in it for something like an hour, and the fact was stated to the country through those reports without my name getting into the reports at all.

But that is not the point. I will enter into good bonds never to make any complaint of these reports, nor of any reports, so long as they offend only by not telling what I do do. I am entirely content with that; but I do dislike to have them ascribe to me some things which I do not do. Last night a resolution was introduced here providing for the payment of the Senators from Tennessee. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] moved an amendment to that resolution limiting their right to pay to the time when the joint resolution passed Congress authorizing the admission of Senators and Representatives from that State. That amendment was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, as I have said; but I see in the reports that it is attributed to myself. It did seem to me that this was an unnecessary mistake to make, because it was not only at war with my whole theory touching the relations existing between the Government of the United States and those several communities, but it was a proposition which I spoke against twice while it was pending here last evening; and on this one point I am a little anxious that the country should not understand that that amendment came from me. So far as believed it would place me in a very extraordinary light in the judgment of a great many men who have known intimately and familiarly what my opinions upon these questions were.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I wish to make a single remark on the matter brought before the Senate by the Senator from Wisconsin, as I see I shall not now interrupt business by doing so.

The reports of the Associated Press have pretty uniformly ignored my existence, or rather my presence, as a member of the Senate. The thing has been so marked on several occasions that I could not escape noticing it; but I have not complained, nor do I intend to complain. Very much like the Senator who has spoken, from Wisconsin, the only thing I complain of is that upon two or three occasions, when the public have ascertained from those reports that such an humble person as myself was in existence, I have had words thrust into my mouth which I never uttered and which were exactly contrary to what I did say. For instance, upon one occasion I insisted that suffrage in this country was upon the proper basis at this time, and that I was agreed to maintain the present arrangement until the several States should change it. I was reported as insisting that suffrage was too extensive in this country, and that it ought to be taken away from a portion of those who now possess it. Upon another occasion recently I argued in the case of a bill which was pending that it put our citizens in the northern States upon the same footing with rebels, and therefore it was objectionable because there was a wide difference between the two sections of the country. I was reported as having said that the bill was a cruel and oppressive thing because it subjected rebels to indignities or restrictions which did prevail upon men of the North.

I think, sir, one thing is very manifest: the reports obtained by the Associated Press, a great and important association as a public institution, must be made more accurate or we must abolish them as very inconvenient and productive of general injustice. Somebody more competent must make reports of what we do and say here, or we must refuse the privilege of having our proceedings reported.

Mr. SHERMAN. A word on this matter. Senators seem to forget that the reports of the Associated Press are not paid for by Congress. Congress has nothing to do with them. That association employs its own agents to make them, and it has them telegraphed at its own expense. We have nothing to do with them, and I think all reference to those reports by us is entirely of our own motion. These reports are not made by anybody responsible to Congress or by anybody that Congress has anything to do with. We may complain if injustice is done, but unless we provide some mode of furnishing accurate reports we cannot complain of those that are made; and if we do provide them they need not publish them, and need not telegraph them. What they do is a private transaction of their own. I am inclined to think, therefore, that all complaints by us assume the appearance of complaints of the right of the people to be here and report and print what they choose about us.

Mr. HOWE. I did not rise for the purpose of making any complaint or of suggesting any remedy. I rose for the purpose of correcting a mistake, and relying upon the justice of the reporters of the Associated Press to correct it. I should have gone to the gentlemen themselves and asked the correction if I had had the advantage of an acquaintance with them, which I have not. I was quite aware of what the Senator from Ohio says, that we do not pay for these reports. Nevertheless, if we do not pay for them, we have a right to ask—it is a right which belongs not to our official position here, but to a common humanity—not a right to demand that they shall say or tell of anything we do as individuals, but we have a right to ask that they shall not ascribe to us what we do not do. Of course their own discretion must govern them in selecting such transactions which take place here as they will communicate to the country. I take it no Senator has a right to complain that the things he does are not detailed in these reports, but I think every one of us has a right to complain when they ascribe to us the doing of that which we do not do. But for the happening of this latter case I should not have thought of troubling the Senate with any remarks.

RETIREMENT OF PRESIDENT FOSTER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, at half past ten o'clock a. m., rose and addressed the Senate as follows:

SENATORS: The hour for the final adjournment of the Thirty-Ninth Congress is near at hand, and as my official connection with this body will then terminate, I shall now vacate the chair, to the end that you may elect a President of the Senate.

Twelve years have elapsed since I was first honored with a seat in this Chamber. During this period great events—events of the most intense and painful interest to our country—events as imposing in their character, as instructive in their teachings, as momentous in their consequences, as any recorded in human history—have passed before us in rapid succession. Surely we have great reason for gratitude and thanksgiving to Almighty God that hitherto His hand has upheld us.

For the past two years, by your favor, I have occupied the chair of the Senate. My grateful acknowledgments are due to you for the uniform courtesy and forbearance which you have manifested toward me. In the performance of such duties as have been devolved upon me, occasional errors and mistakes, in the imperfection of our nature, are probably inevitable. No doubt I have committed my full share. My honest purpose has been to act fairly and impartially toward all. I have wronged no one intentionally, and if at any time it has seemed otherwise I sincerely regret it.

In casting my eyes over the body I recognize but four members who were here when I first entered the Senate. Since that time eighteen of our number have been removed by death. These changes are admonitory, and must impress the mind with a sense of the fleeting and transitory character of this stage of our being.

Though the greatest statesmen, the wisest Senators speedily pass away, as all men must, institutions founded on principles of right and truth and justice may remain until time shall be no longer. May our Government rest on these sure foundations. May this Senate ever maintain its early renown for courtesy, decorum, dignity, and all the proprieties and amenities which adorn the senatorial character. May you be enabled to do much to establish, and may you soon see established, harmonious and amicable relations between all portions of our country. May all causes of alienation and estrangement be speedily and effectually removed, and a spirit of concord and fraternal love be everywhere diffused and ever abide in the hearts of all our people.

May God preserve our Republic, and make it a perpetual glory among the nations.

Senators, with feelings of the utmost respect and kindness toward you personally, I bid you farewell.

Mr. FOSTER having concluded, retired from the chair.

ELECTION OF A PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Secretary, I move that the Senate proceed to the election of a President pro tempore.

The SECRETARY (JOHN W. FORNEY) put the question, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Secretary, I nominate for President pro tempore Hon. BENJAMIN F. WADE, one of the Senators from the State of Ohio. If there be no counter-nomination, I will put it in the form of a resolution, so as to dispense with balloting. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That Hon. BENJAMIN F. WADE, of the State of Ohio, be, and he is hereby, chosen President of the Senate pro tempore.

The resolution was agreed to; and Mr. WADE was conducted to the chair by Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. WADE, on taking the chair, said: Before entering upon the duties of the great office with which you have invested me, I desire to express to you my profound and grateful acknowledgments for this token of your confidence and respect. You all know that I am no parliamentarian, and I shall be obliged to draw largely on your forbearance and indulgence. I therefore accept the position with great diffidence. I can only promise that I will endeavor to make myself familiar with those rules and principles which this body has provided for its government at the earliest period, and I will administer them with promptness and impartiality.

On motion by Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That the Secretary inform upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate had chosen Hon. BENJAMIN F. WADE, one of the Senators from the State of Ohio, President of the Senate pro tempore.

On motion by Mr. ANTHONY, it was

Ordered, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that the Senate had chosen Hon. BENJAMIN F. WADE, one of the Senators from the State of Ohio, President of the Senate pro tempore.

THANKS TO PRESIDENT FOSTER.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I know that I speak the sentiment of every Senator upon this floor, to whichever party he may belong, when I bear testimony to the high ability, the uniform courtesy, and the unvarying impartiality with which the duties of Presiding Officer have been discharged during the Congress that is about to close. The chair, sir, to which you have been just called by the unanimous voice of your peers in this Chamber has been filled, by election of the Senate, by some of the most eminent men who have embellished the annals of American statesmanship. John Langdon, Richard Henry Lee, Theodore Sedgwick, James Barbour, Nathaniel Macon, William H. Crawford, William R. King, Samuel L. Southard, Willie P. Mangum, Hugh L. White, Solomon Foot, and others not less eminent, have been President pro tempore of the Senate. It is safe to say that by none of them have the duties of the Chair been performed more to the credit of the officer or more to the satisfaction of the Senate than by the retiring President. Fortunate will it be for those who shall succeed him if, when they come to lay down the high dignity which he has just resigned, they shall take with them so large a share of the respect, the confidence, and the affection of their associates in this Chamber. Fortunate will it be for the Senate if the same intimate knowledge of parliamentary law and the same prompt application of its principles shall guide their discussions, and the same impartial dignity preside over their deliberations.

Mr. President, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are due, and they are hereby tendered, to Hon. LA FAYETTE S. FOSTER, President of the Senate pro tempore, for the able, dignified, and impartial manner in which he has discharged the responsible duties of the Chair.

The resolution was unanimously adopted, and it was further

Ordered, That the Secretary communicate a copy of the foregoing resolution to Hon. LA FAYETTE S. FOSTER.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolutions of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 634) in relation to brevets in the Army of the United States;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 148) presenting the thanks of Congress to Cyrus W. Field;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 183) thanking the Chambers of Senators and Deputies of Brazil for their resolutions of sorrow and sympathy on the death of President Lincoln; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 184) authorizing Gustavus V. Fox, late Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and the officers of the iron-clad Miantonomoh and gunboat Augusta to accept presents tendered them by the Emperor of Russia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

An act (S. No. 609) allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into the port of Albany to be secured and paid at that place;

An act (S. No. 557) for the relief of James Fulton, paymaster in the United States Navy;

An act (S. No. 588) for the relief of William H. Webb; and

An act (H. R. No. 1234) to incorporate the joint stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. No. 438) for the relief of the heirs of John E. Bouligny;

A bill (S. No. 499) for the relief of Frank Pugsley, late a private soldier in company I of the third regiment of New Hampshire volunteers:

A bill (S. No. 532) for the relief of the inhabitants of cities and towns upon the public lands;

A bill (S. No. 543) to abolish and forever prohibit the system of peonage in the Territory of New Mexico and other parts of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 503) supplementary to the several acts of Congress abolishing imprisonment for debt;

A bill (S. No. 576) relating to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court;

A bill (S. No. 577) to regulate the disposition of the proceeds of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under the laws relating to the customs, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 578) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and for other purposes;"

A bill (S. No. 595) to regulate the disposition of an irregular fund in the custody of the Freedmen's Bureau;

A bill (S. No. 603) to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands;

A bill (S. No. 614) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transfer the United States iron-clad Onondaga to George Quintard, of New York;

A bill (S. No. 620) for the relief of Joshua H. Butterworth;

A bill (S. No. 625) to amend an act entitled "An act concerning the fire department of Washington city," approved February 18, 1867;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 66) for the relief of Joseph R. Morris;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 167) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the seventh regiment of West Virginia volunteers;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 175) for the relief of Dyer B. Pettjohn;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 176) relative to the post office and sub-Treasury of the city of Boston; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 181) concerning the right of way for the survey and construction of an inter-oceanic ship-canal through the Isthmus of Darien.

NAVAL LAWS.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate No. 509, to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy, reported them with the recommendation that the Senate agree to the same; and the amendments were concurred in.

RESCUE OF THE CREW OF THE E. H. FITLER.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 283) authorizing the Secretary of State to present to Captain James G. Smith, of the British brig Victoria, a gold chronometer in token of appreciation of his services in rescuing from death the master, officers, crew, and passengers on board of the American brig E. H. Fitler, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPENSATION FOR ENLISTED SLAVES.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 235.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope that will not be done. I made a motion before your predecessor retired from the chair to proceed to the consideration of executive business, which I withdrew under the circumstances. I hope it will not now be crowded out by any legislative business. I therefore renew the motion to go into executive session.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The resolution to which

I have called attention is one from the House of Representatives, which I think ought to pass promptly. It is a resolution to which I have called attention in the Senate more than once, suspending the action of certain commissioners who are assessing damages to persons claiming to be the loyal owners of slaves who entered the Union Army. The law providing for the payment to the masters for their slaves who entered our service has been suspended; no money can be paid; but we have at this time several boards of commissioners who are taking testimony, as I understand, in several of the States. Of course it is to no purpose; there can be no object in it, and I understand that very great abuses are being practiced in some of the States. I have in my possession a letter, which I could read to the Senate if it were not taking up too much of its time, from the State of Kentucky, indorsed by one of the members of the House of Representatives, which states that in his county, a majority of which was secession, not one single loyal man has made proof to claim pay for his slaves that entered the service, but that several disloyal owners have, and that great abuses are being practiced by the commissioners. I think the resolution ought to pass. It needs only the concurrence of this body; the House have already passed it. I have tried repeatedly to get attention to it during the session, and once moved it as an amendment to an appropriation bill, but I was persuaded to withdraw it at the instance of the chairman of the committee who had that bill in charge. I trust the Senate will take up this joint resolution and pass it.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Illinois must know very well that if he could succeed in getting the Senate to take up that proposition it would occupy the entire session, and he would probably get no action of the Senate upon it before we adjourn, but it would crowd out all other business. He will have an opportunity to introduce that subject and to discuss it at the session of the Senate beginning to-morrow. I hope the Senate will adopt the motion I have made, to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will read to the Senate the letter which I have received and to which I have already alluded:

"I live in a county whose population is about three fifths rebels; the greater portion of them were once slave-owners and I do not know of a single instance where the slave of a rebel was recruited for the United States service but what the former owner is now making application for pay under the $300 act. If the Government allows this it is an outrage, in my opinion. Furthermore, I by inheritance was interested in twenty-five slaves, some of whom went into the United States Army; but I am willing and believe that this compensation act should be repealed."

This letter is indorsed by a member of the House of Representatives, who authorizes me to read it, and says:

"I indorse every word he says as true."

Mr. HARRIS. I insist on my motion.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the honorable Senator from Illinois give the name of the writer of the letter?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir, I will give the name of the writer of the letter—Samuel Martin—and it is indorsed by Mr. McKee of the House of Representatives. Now, the Senator from Kentucky has got it.

Mr. DAVIS. Neither the writer of the letter nor the indorser is entitled to any trust whatever.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I call the Senator to order. He has no right to use such language in reference to a member of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will come to order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after an hour spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 584) for the relief of Elias Beale, late captain of company H, eighth regiment of Tennessee volunteer infantry; and had also passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 164) supplementary to other joint resolutions to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the Universal Exhibition at Paris in 1867, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON ORDNANCE.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the following be added to the joint rules of the two Houses, namely:

RULE —. There shall be appointed a joint committee on ordnance, to consist of three members of the Senate and three members of the House, to whom shall be referred all matters in relation to ordnance stores which shall come in question and be referred to them by either House; and also to report from time to time such measures in reference to those subjects as to the said committee may seem advisable.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. No. 463) for the relief of Rev. Samuel M. Beatty, of Ohio;

A bill (S. No. 606) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts," approved July 27, 1866;

A bill (S. No. 611) to extend to and for the benefit of Eliza Wells letters-patent heretofore issued to Henry A. Wells, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 591) for the relief of Thomas D. Burrall;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 178) in relation to national banking associations;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 179) to provide for the exchange of certain public documents;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 267) for the reduction of the military reservation of Fort Riley, and to grant land for bridge purposes to the State of Kansas;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 283) authorizing the Secretary of State to present to Captain James G. Smith, of the British brig Victoria, a gold chronometer, in token of appreciation of his services in rescuing from death the master, officers, crew, and passengers on board of the American brig E. H. Fitler;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) instructing the Secretary of the Interior to order a survey for a bridge or bridges across the Potomac;

A bill (S. No. 509) to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy;

A bill (S. No. 584) for the relief of Elias Beale, late captain of company H, eighth regiment Tennessee volunteer infantry;

A bill (S. No. 634) relating to brevets in the Army of the United States;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 148) presenting the thanks of Congress to Cyrus W. Field; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 184) authorizing Gustavus V. Fox, late Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and the officers of the iron-clad Miantonomah and gunboat Augusta to accept presents tendered them by the Emperor of Russia.

PARIS EXHIBITION.

On motion of Mr. SUMNER, the Senate proceeded to consider and concurred in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 164) supplementary to other joint resolutions to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the Universal Exhibition at Paris in 1867.

PREPARATION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two members be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States, and inform him that unless he may have some further communication to make, the two Houses of Congress, having finished the business before them, are ready to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore was, by unanimous consent, authorized to appoint the committee, and Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. HENDRICKS were appointed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. JOHNSON, his Secretary, announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed this day the following acts and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. No. 463) for the relief of Rev. Samuel M. Beatty, of Ohio;

A bill (S. No. 611) to extend to and for the benefit of Eliza Wells letters-patent heretofore issued to Henry A. Wells, deceased;

A bill (S. No. 606) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts," approved July 27, 1866;

A bill (S. No. 557) for the relief of James Fulton, paymaster United States Navy;

A bill (S. No. 509) to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy;

A bill (S. No. 584) for the relief of Captain Elias Beale, company H, eighth regiment Tennessee volunteer infantry;

A bill (S. No. 588) for the relief of William H. Webb;

A bill (S. No. 609) allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into the port of Albany to be secured and paid at that place;

A bill (S. No. 634) relating to brevets in the United States Army;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 148) presenting the thanks of Congress to Cyrus W. Field;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settlements of accounts of disbursing officers;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 178) in relation to national banking associations;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 179) for the exchange of certain public documents;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 183) thanking the Chambers of Senators and Deputies of Brazil for their resolutions of sorrow and sympathy on the death of President Lincoln; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 184) authorizing Gustavus V. Fox, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and the officers of the iron-clad Miantonomah and gunboat Augusta, to accept presents tendered them by the Emperor of Russia.

CLOSE OF THE SESSION.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the resolution of the Senate for the appointment of a committee to wait upon the President of the United States, and inform him that unless he may have some further communication to make the two Houses of Congress, having finished the business before them, are ready to adjourn; and that it had appointed Mr. H. L. DAWES of Massachusetts and Mr. F. C. LE BLOND of Ohio the committee on its part.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the joint committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that, unless he had some further communication to make, the two Houses of Congress, having finished the business before them, are ready to adjourn, reported that they had performed the duty assigned them, and that the President had replied "that he had no further communication to make to Congress, and that he wished the Senators and Representatives a safe return to their families and homes."

The hour of twelve, noon, having arrived—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore declared that the allotted term of the Thirty-Ninth Congress having expired, the Senate was adjourned sine die.

SENATE & HO. OF REPS.

MESSAGE

OF THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

After a brief interval the Congress of the United States resumes its annual legislative labors. An all-wise and merciful Providence has abated the pestilence which visited our shores, leaving its calamitous traces upon some portions of our country. Peace, order, tranquillity, and civil authority have been formally declared to exist throughout the whole of the United States. In all of the States civil authority has superseded the coercion of arms, and the people, by their voluntary action, are maintaining their governments in full activity and complete operation. The enforcement of the laws is no longer "obstructed in any State by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings;" and the animosities engendered by the war are rapidly yielding to the beneficent influences of our free institutions, and to the kindly effects of unrestricted social and commercial intercourse. An entire restoration of fraternal feeling must be the earnest wish of every patriotic heart; and we will have accomplished our grandest national achievement when, forgetting the sad events of the past, and remembering only their instructive lessons, we resume our onward career as a free, prosperous, and united people.

In my message of the 4th of December, 1865, Congress was informed of the measures which had been instituted by the Executive with a view to the gradual restoration of the States in which the insurrection occurred to their relations with the General Government. Provisional Governors had been appointed, conventions called, Governors elected, Legislatures assembled, and Senators and Representatives chosen to the Congress of the United States. Courts had been opened for the enforcement of laws long in abeyance. The blockade had been removed, custom-houses reestablished, and the internal revenue laws put in force, in order that the people might contribute to the national income. Postal operations had been renewed, and efforts were being made to restore them to their former condition of efficiency. The States themselves had been asked to take part in the high function of amending the Constitution, and of thus sanctioning the extinction of African slavery as one of the legitimate results of our internecine struggle.

Having progressed thus far, the executive department found that it had accomplished nearly all that was within the scope of its constitutional authority. One thing, however, yet remained to be done before the work of restoration could be completed, and that was the admission to Congress of loyal Senators and Representatives from the States whose people had rebelled against the lawful authority of the General Government. This question devolved upon the respective Houses, which, by the Constitution, are made the judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their own members; and its consideration at once engaged the attention of Congress.

In the mean time, the executive department—no other plan having been proposed by Congress—continued its efforts to perfect, as far as was practicable, the restoration of the proper relations between the citizens of the respective States, the States, and the Federal Government, extending, from time to time, as the public interests seemed to require, the judicial, revenue, and postal systems of the country. With the advice and consent of the Senate, the necessary officers were appointed, and appropriations made by Congress for the payment of their salaries. The proposition to amend the Federal Constitution, so as to prevent the existence of slavery within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction, was ratified by the requisite number of States; and on the 18th day of December, 1865, it was officially declared to have become valid as a part of the Constitution of the United States. All of the States in which the insurrection had existed promptly amended their constitutions so as to make them conform to the great change thus effected in the organic law of the land; declared null and void all ordinances and laws of secession; repudiated all pretended debts and obligations created for the revolutionary purposes of the insurrection; and proceeded, in good faith, to the enactment of measures for the protection and amelioration of the condition of the colored race. Congress, however, yet hesitated to admit any of these States to representation; and it was not until toward the close of the eighth month of the session that an exception was made in favor of Tennessee, by the admission of her Senators and Representatives.

I deem it a subject of profound regret that Congress has thus far failed to admit to seats loyal Senators and Representatives from the other States, whose inhabitants, with those of Tennessee, had engaged in the rebellion. Ten States—more than one fourth of the whole number—remain without representation; the seats of fifty members in the House of Representatives and of twenty members in the Senate are yet vacant, not by their own consent, not by a failure of election, but by the refusal of Congress to accept their credentials. Their admission, it is believed, would have accomplished much toward the renewal and strengthening of our relations as one people, and removed serious cause for discontent on the part of the inhabitants of those States. It would have accorded with the great principle enunciated in the Declaration of American Independence, that no people ought to bear the burden of taxation, and yet be denied the right of representation. It would have been in consonance with the express provisions of the Constitution, that "each State shall have at least one Representative," and "that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate." These provisions were intended to secure to every State, and to the people of every State, the right of representation in each House of Congress; and so important was it deemed by the framers of the Constitution that the equality of the States in the Senate should be preserved, that not even by an amendment of the Constitution can any State, without its consent, be denied a voice in that branch of the national Legislature.

It is true it has been assumed that the existence of the States was terminated by the rebellious acts of their inhabitants, and that, the insurrection having been suppressed, they were thenceforward to be considered merely as conquered territories. The legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government have, however, with great distinctness and uniform consistency, refused to sanction an assumption so incompatible with the nature of our republican system, and with the professed objects of the war. Throughout the recent legislation of Congress the undeniable fact makes itself apparent, that the ten political communities are nothing less than States of this Union. At the very commencement of the rebellion, each House declared, with a unanimity as remarkable as it was significant, that the war was not "waged upon our part in any spirit of oppression, nor for any purpose of conquest or subjugation, nor purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of those States, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution and all laws made in pursuance thereof, and to preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired; and that as soon as these objects" were "accomplished the war ought to cease." In some instances Senators were permitted to continue their legislative functions, while in other instances Representatives were elected and admitted to seats after their States had formally declared their right to withdraw from the Union and were endeavoring to maintain that right by force of arms. All of the States whose people were in insurrection, as States, were included in the apportionment of the direct tax of $20,000,000 annually laid upon the United States by the act approved 5th August, 1861. Congress, by the act of March 4, 1862, and by the apportionment of representation thereunder, also recognized their presence as States in the Union; and they have, for judicial purposes, been divided into districts, as States alone can be divided. The same recognition appears in the recent legislation in reference to Tennessee, which evidently rests upon the fact that the functions of the State were not destroyed by the rebellion, but merely suspended; and that principle is of course applicable to those States which, like Tennessee, attempted to renounce their places in the Union.

The action of the executive department of the Government upon this subject has been equally definite and uniform, and the purpose of the war was specifically stated in the proclamation issued by my predecessor on the 22d day of September, 1862. It was then solemnly proclaimed and declared that "hereafter, as heretofore, the war will be prosecuted for the object of practically restoring the constitutional relation between the United States and each of the States and the people thereof, in which States that relation is or may be suspended or disturbed."

The recognition of the States by the judicial department of the Government has also been clear and conclusive in all proceedings affecting them as States, had in the Supreme, circuit, and district courts.

In the admission of Senators and Representatives from any and all of the States, there can be no just ground of apprehension that persons who are disloyal will be clothed with the powers of legislation; for this could not happen when the Constitution and the laws are enforced by a vigilant and faithful Congress. Each House is made the "judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," and may, "with the concurrence of two thirds, expel a member." When a Senator or Representative presents his certificate of election he may at once be admitted or rejected; or, should there be any question as to his eligibility, his credentials may be referred for investigation to the appropriate committee. If admitted to a seat, it must be upon evidence satisfactory to the House of which he thus becomes a member, that he possesses the requisite constitutional and legal qualifications. If refused admission as a member for want of due allegiance to the Government, and returned to his constituents, they are admonished that none but persons loyal to the United States will be allowed a voice in the legislative councils of the nation, and the political power and moral influence of Congress are thus effectively exerted in the interests of loyalty to the Government and fidelity to the Union. Upon this question, so vitally affecting the restoration of the Union and the permanency of our present form of Government, my convictions, heretofore expressed, have undergone no change; but, on the contrary, their correctness has been confirmed by reflection and time. If the admission of loyal members to seats in the respective Houses of Congress was wise and expedient a year ago, it is no less wise and expedient now. If this anomalous condition is right now—if, in the exact condition of these States at the present time, it is lawful to exclude them from representation, I do not see that the question will be changed by the efflux of time. Ten years hence, if these States remain as they are, the right of representation will be no stronger; the right of exclusion will be no weaker.

The Constitution of the United States makes it the duty of the President to recommend to the consideration of Congress "such measures as he shall judge necessary or expedient." I know of no measure more imperatively demanded by every consideration of national interest, sound policy, and equal justice, than the admission of loyal members from the now unrepresented States. This would consummate the work of restoration, and exert a most salutary influence in the reestablishment of peace, harmony, and fraternal feeling. It would tend greatly to renew the confidence of the American people in the vigor and stability of their institutions. It would bind us more closely together as a nation, and enable us to show to the world the inherent and recuperative power of a Government founded upon the will of the people, and established upon the principles of liberty, justice, and intelligence. Our increased strength and enhanced prosperity would irrefragably demonstrate the fallacy of the arguments against free institutions drawn from our recent national disorders by the enemies of republican government. The admission of loyal members from the States now excluded from Congress, by allaying doubt and apprehension, would turn capital, now awaiting an opportunity for investment, into the channels of trade and industry. It would alleviate the present troubled condition of those States, and, by inducing emigration, aid in the settlement of fertile regions now uncultivated, and lead to an increased production of those staples which have added so greatly to the wealth of the nation and the commerce of the world. New fields of enterprise would be opened to our progressive people, and soon the devastations of war would be repaired, and all traces of our domestic differences effaced from the minds of our countrymen.

In our efforts to preserve "the unity of government which constitutes us one people," by restoring the States to the condition which they held prior to the rebellion, we should be cautious, lest, having rescued our nation from perils of threatened disintegration, we resort to consolidation, and in the end absolute despotism, as a remedy for the recurrence of similar troubles. The war having terminated, and with it all occasion for the exercise of powers of doubtful constitutionality, we should hasten to bring legislation within the boundaries prescribed by the Constitution, and to return to the ancient landmarks established by our fathers for the guidance of succeeding generations. "The Constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all." "If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be, in any particular, wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way in which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for" "it is the customary weapon by which free Governments are destroyed." Washington spoke these words to his countrymen, when, followed by their love and gratitude, he voluntarily retired from the cares of public life. "To keep in all things within the pale of our constitutional powers, and cherish the Federal Union as the only rock of safety," were prescribed by Jefferson as rules of action to endure to his "countrymen the true principles of their Constitution, and promote a union of sentiment and action equally auspicious to their happiness and safety." Jackson held that the action of the General Government should always be strictly confined to the sphere of its appropriate duties, and justly and forcibly urged that our Government is not to be maintained nor our Union preserved "by invasions of the rights and powers of the several States. In thus attempting to make our General Government strong, we make it weak. Its true strength consists in leaving individuals and States as much as possible to themselves; in making itself felt, not in its power, but in its beneficence; not in its control, but in its protection; not in binding the States more closely to the center, but leaving each to move unobstructed in its proper constitutional orbit." These are the teachings of men whose deeds and services have made them illustrious, and who, long since withdrawn from the scenes of life, have left to their country the rich legacy of their example, their wisdom, and their patriotism. Drawing fresh inspiration from their lessons, let us emulate them in love of country and respect for the Constitution and the laws.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury affords much information respecting the revenue and commerce of the country. His views upon the currency, and with reference to a proper adjustment of our revenue system, internal as well as impost, are commended to the careful consideration of Congress. In my last annual message I expressed my general views upon these subjects. I need now only call attention to the necessity of carrying into every department of the Government a system of rigid accountability, thorough retrenchment, and wise economy. With no exceptional nor unusual expenditures, the oppressive burdens of taxation can be lessened by such a modification of our revenue laws as will be consistent with the public faith and the legitimate and necessary wants of the Government.

The report presents a much more satisfactory condition of our finances than, one year ago, the most sanguine could have anticipated. During the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1865, the last year of the war, the public debt was increased $941,902,537, and on the 31st of October, 1865, it amounted to $2,740,854,750. On the 31st day of October, 1866, it had been reduced to $2,551,310,006, the diminution, during a period of fourteen months, commencing September 1, 1865, and ending October 31, 1866, having been $206,379,565. In the last annual report on the state of the finances it was estimated that during the three quarters of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June last, the debt would be increased $112,194,947. During that period, however, it was reduced $31,196,387, the receipts of the year having been $89,905,905 more, and the expenditures $200,529,235 less, than the estimates. Nothing could more clearly indicate than these statements the extent and availability of the national resources, and the rapidity and safety with which, under our form of government, great military and naval establishments can be disbanded, and expenses reduced from a war to a peace footing.

During the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1866, the receipts were $558,032,620, and the expenditures $520,750,940, leaving an available surplus of $37,281,680. It is estimated that the receipts for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1867, will be $475,061,386, and that the expenditures will reach the sum of $316,428,078, leaving in the Treasury a surplus of $158,633,308. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, it is estimated that the receipts will amount to $436,000,000, and that the expenditures will be $350,247,641—showing an excess of $85,752,359 in favor of the Government. These estimated receipts may be diminished by a reduction of excise and import duties; but after all necessary reductions shall have been made the revenue of the present and of following years will doubtless be sufficient to cover all legitimate charges upon the Treasury and leave a large annual surplus to be applied to the payment of the principal of the debt. There seems now to be no good reason why taxes may not be reduced, as the country advances in population and wealth, and yet the debt be extinguished within the next quarter of a century.

The report of the Secretary of War furnishes valuable and important information in reference to the operations of his Department during the past year. Few volunteers now remain in the service, and they are being discharged as rapidly as they can be replaced by regular troops. The Army has been promptly paid, carefully provided with medical treatment, well sheltered and subsisted, and is to be furnished with breech-loading small-arms. The military strength of the nation has been unimpaired by the discharge of volunteers, the disposition of unserviceable or perishable stores, and the retrenchment of expenditure. Sufficient war material to meet any emergency has been retained, and from the disbanded volunteers standing ready to respond to the national call, large armies can be rapidly organized, equipped, and concentrated. Fortifications on the coast and frontier have received or are being prepared for more powerful armaments; lake surveys and harbor and river improvements are in course of energetic prosecution. Preparations have been made for the payment of the additional bounties authorized during the recent session of Congress, under such regulations as will protect the Government from fraud, and secure to the honorably discharged soldier the well-earned reward of his faithfulness and gallantry. More than six thousand maimed soldiers have received artificial limbs or other surgical apparatus; and forty-one national cemeteries, containing the remains of one hundred and four thousand five hundred and twenty-six Union soldiers, have already been established. The total estimate of military appropriations is $25,205,669.

It is stated in the report of the Secretary of the Navy that the naval force at this time consists of two hundred and seventy-eight vessels, armed with two thousand three hundred and fifty-one guns. Of these, one hundred and fifteen vessels, carrying one thousand and twenty-nine guns, are in commission, distributed chiefly among seven squadrons. The number of men in the service is thirteen thousand six hundred. Great activity and vigilance have been displayed by all the squadrons, and their movements have been judiciously and efficiently arranged in such manner as would best promote American commerce and protect the rights and interests of our countrymen abroad. The vessels unemployed are undergoing repairs, or are laid up until their services may be required. Most of the iron-clad fleet is at League Island, in the vicinity of Philadelphia, a place which, until decisive action should be taken by Congress, was selected by the Secretary of the Navy as the most eligible location for that class of vessels. It is important that a suitable public station should be provided for the iron-clad fleet. It is intended that these vessels shall be in proper condition for any emergency, and it is desirable that the bill accepting League Island for naval purposes, which passed the House of Representatives at its last session, should receive final action at an early period, in order that there may be a suitable public station for this class of vessels, as well as a navy-yard of area sufficient for the wants of the service, on the Delaware river. The naval pension fund amounts to $11,750,000, having been increased $2,750,000 during the year. The expenditures of the Department for the fiscal year ending 30th June last were $43,324,526, and the estimates for the coming year amount to $23,568,436. Attention is invited to the condition of our seamen, and the importance of legislative measures for their relief and improvement. The suggestions in behalf of this deserving class of our fellow-citizens are earnestly recommended to the favorable attention of Congress.

The report of the Postmaster General presents a most satisfactory condition of the postal service, and submits recommendations which deserve the consideration of Congress. The revenues of the Department for the year ending June 30, 1866, were $14,386,986, and the expenditures $15,352,079, showing an excess of the latter of $965,093. In anticipation of his deficiency, however, a special appropriation was made by Congress in the act approved July 28, 1866. Including the standing appropriation of $700,000 for free mail matter, as a legitimate portion of the revenues yet remaining unexpended, the actual deficiency for the past year is only $265,093—a sum within $51,141 of the amount estimated in the annual report of 1864. The decrease of revenue compared with the previous year was one and one fifth per cent., and the increase of expenditures, owing principally to the enlargement of the mail service in the South, was twelve per cent. On the 30th of June last there were in operation six thousand nine hundred and thirty mail routes, with an aggregate length of one hundred and eighty thousand nine hundred and twenty-one miles, an aggregate annual transportation of seventy-one million eight hundred and thirty-seven thousand nine hundred and fourteen miles, and an aggregate annual cost, including all expenditures, of $8,410,184. The length of railroad routes is thirty-two thousand and ninety-two miles, and the annual transportation thirty million six hundred and ninety thousand four hundred and sixty-seven miles. The length of steamboat routes is fourteen thousand three hundred and forty-six miles, and the annual transportation three million four hundred and eleven thousand nine hundred and sixty-two miles. The mail service is rapidly increasing throughout the whole country, and its steady extension in the southern States indicates their constantly improving condition. The growing importance of the foreign service also merits attention. The Post Office Department of Great Britain and our own have agreed upon a preliminary basis for a new postal convention, which it is believed will prove eminently beneficial to the commercial interests of the United States, inasmuch as it contemplates a reduction of the international letter postage to one half the existing rates; a reduction of postage with all other countries to and from which correspondence is transmitted in the British mail, or in closed mails through the United Kingdom; the establishment of uniform and reasonable charges for the sea and territorial transit of correspondence in closed mails; and an allowance to each Post Office Department of the right to use all mail communications established under the authority of the other for the dispatch of correspondence, either in open or closed mails, on the same terms as those applicable to the inhabitants of the country providing the means of transmission.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior exhibits the condition of those branches of the public service which are committed to his supervision. During the last fiscal year 4,629,312 acres of public land were disposed of, 1,892,516 acres of which were entered under the homestead act. The policy originally adopted relative to the public lands has undergone essential modifications. Immediate revenue, and not their rapid settlement, was the cardinal feature of our land system. Long experience and earnest discussion have resulted in the conviction that the early development of our agricultural resources, and the diffusion of an energetic population over our vast territory, are objects of far greater importance to the national growth and prosperity than the proceeds of the sale of the land to the highest bidder in open market. The preemption laws confer upon the pioneer who complies with the terms they impose the privilege of purchasing a limited portion of "unoffered lands" at the minimum price. The homestead enactments relieve the settler from the payment of purchase money, and secure him a permanent home, upon the condition of residence for a term of years. This liberal policy invites emigration from the Old and from the more crowded portions of the New World. Its propitious results are undoubted, and will be more signally manifested when time shall have given to it a wider development.

Congress has made liberal grants of public land to corporations in aid of the construction of railroads and other internal improvements. Should this policy hereafter prevail, more stringent provisions will be required to secure a faithful application of the fund. The title to the lands should not pass, by patent or otherwise, but remain in the Government and subject to its control until some portion of the road has been actually built. Portions of them might then, from time to time, be conveyed to the corporation, but never in a greater ratio to the whole quantity embraced by the grant than the completed parts bear to the entire length of the projected improvement. This restriction would not operate to the prejudice of any undertaking conceived in good faith and executed with reasonable energy, as it is the settled practice to withdraw from market the lands falling within the operation of such grants, and thus to exclude the inception of a subsequent adverse right. A breach of the conditions which Congress may deem proper to impose should work a forfeiture of claim to the lands so withdrawn but un conveyed, and of title to the lands conveyed which remain unsold.

Operations on the several lines of the Pacific railroad have been prosecuted with unexampled vigor and success. Should no unforeseen causes of delay occur, it is confidently anticipated that this great thoroughfare will be completed before the expiration of the period designated by Congress.

During the last fiscal year the amount paid to pensioners, including the expenses of disbursement, was $13,459,996; and fifty thousand one hundred and seventy-seven names were added to the pension-rolls. The entire number of pensioners, June 30, 1866, was one hundred and twenty-six thousand seven hundred and twenty-two. This fact furnishes melancholy and striking proof of the sacrifices made to vindicate the constitutional authority of the Federal Government and to maintain inviolate the integrity of the Union. They impose upon us corresponding obligations. It is estimated that $33,000,000 will be required to meet the exigencies of this branch of the service during the next fiscal year.

Treaties have been concluded with the Indians who, enticed into armed opposition to our Government at the outbreak of the rebellion, have unconditionally submitted to our authority, and manifested an earnest desire for a renewal of friendly relations.

During the year ending September 30, 1866, eight thousand seven hundred and sixteen patents for useful inventions and designs were issued, and at that date the balance in the Treasury to the credit of the patent fund was $228,297.

As a subject upon which depends an immense amount of the production and commerce of the country, I recommend to Congress such legislation as may be necessary for the preservation of the levees of the Mississippi river. It is a matter of national importance that early steps should be taken, not only to add to the efficiency of these barriers against destructive inundations, but for the removal of all obstructions to the free and safe navigation of that great channel of trade and commerce.

The District of Columbia, under existing laws, is not entitled to that representation in the national councils which, from our earliest history, has been uniformly accorded to each Territory established from time to time within our limits. It maintains peculiar relations to Congress, to whom the Constitution has granted the power of exercising exclusive legislation over the seat of Government. Our fellow-citizens residing in the District, whose interests are thus confided to the special guardianship of Congress, exceed in number the population of several of our Territories, and no just reason is perceived why a Delegate of their choice should not be admitted to a seat in the House of Representatives. No mode seems so appropriate and effectual of enabling them to make known their peculiar condition and wants, and of securing the local legislation adapted to them. I therefore recommend the passage of a law authorizing the electors of the District of Columbia to choose a Delegate, to be allowed the same rights and privileges as a Delegate representing a Territory. The increasing enterprise and rapid progress of improvement in the District are highly gratifying, and I trust that the efforts of the municipal authorities to promote the prosperity of the national metropolis will receive the efficient and generous coöperation of Congress.

gress in its efforts to encourage those States which, scourged by war, are now earnestly engaged in the reorganization of domestic industry.

It is a subject of congratulation that no foreign combinations against our domestic peace and safety, or our legitimate influence among the nations, have been formed or attempted. While sentiments of reconciliation, loyalty, and patriotism have increased at home, a more just consideration of our national character and rights has been manifested by foreign nations.

The entire success of the Atlantic telegraph between the coast of Ireland and the Province of Newfoundland, is an achievement which has been justly celebrated in both hemispheres as the opening of an era in the progress of civilization. There is reason to expect that equal success will attend, and even greater results follow, the enterprise for connecting the two continents through the Pacific ocean, by the projected line of telegraph between Kamshatka and the Russian possessions in America.

The resolution of Congress protesting against pardons by foreign Governments of persons convicted of infamous offenses, on condition of emigration to our country, has been communicated to the States with which we maintain intercourse, and the practice, so justly the subject of complaint on our part, has not been renewed.

The congratulations of Congress to the Emperor of Russia, upon his escape from attempted assassination, have been presented to that humane and enlightened ruler, and received by him with expressions of grateful appreciation.

The Executive, warned of an attempt by Spanish-American adventurers to induce the emigration of freedmen of the United States to a foreign country, protested against the project as one which, if consummated, would reduce them to a bondage even more oppressive than that from which they have just been relieved. Assurance has been received from the Government of the State in which the plan was matured, that the proceeding will meet neither its encouragement nor approval. It is a question worthy of your consideration whether our laws upon this subject are adequate to the prevention or punishment of the crime thus meditated.

In the month of April last, as Congress is aware, a friendly arrangement was made between the Emperor of France and the President of the United States for the withdrawal from Mexico of the French expeditionary military forces. This withdrawal was to be effected in three detachments, the first of which, it was understood, would leave Mexico in November, now past, the second in March next, and the third and last in November, 1867. Immediately upon the completion of the evacuation, the French Government was to assume the same attitude of non-intervention, in regard to Mexico, as is held by the Government of the United States. Repeated assurances have been given by the Emperor, since that agreement, that he would complete the promised evacuation within the period mentioned, or sooner.

It was reasonably expected that the proceedings thus contemplated would produce a crisis of great political interest in the republic of Mexico. The newly-appointed minister of the United States, Mr. Campbell, was therefore sent forward, on the 9th day of November last, to assume his proper functions as minister plenipotentiary of the United States to that republic. It was also thought expedient that he should be attended in the vicinity of Mexico by the Lieutenant General of the Army of the United States, with the view of obtaining such information as might be important to determine the course to be pursued by the United States in reestablishing and maintaining necessary and proper intercourse with the republic of Mexico. Deeply interested in the cause of liberty and humanity, it seemed an obvious duty on our part to exercise whatever influence we possessed for the restoration and permanent establishment in that country of a domestic and republican form of government.

Such was the condition of affairs in regard to Mexico, when, on the 22d of November last, official information was received from Paris that the Emperor of France had some time before decided not to withdraw a detachment of his forces in the month of November past, according to engagement, but that this decision was made with the purpose of withdrawing the whole of those forces in the ensuing spring. Of this determination, however, the United States had not received any notice or intimation; and, so soon as the information was received by the Government, care was taken to make known its dissent to the Emperor of France.

I cannot forego the hope that France will reconsider the subject, and adopt some resolution in regard to the evacuation of Mexico which will conform as nearly as practicable with the existing engagement, and thus meet the just expectations of the United States. The papers relating to the subject will be laid before you. It is believed that, with the evacuation of Mexico by the expeditionary forces, no subject for serious differences between France and the United States would remain. The expressions of the Emperor and people of France warrant a hope that the traditional friendship between the two countries might in that case be renewed and permanently restored.

A claim of a citizen of the United States for indemnity for spoiliations committed on the high seas by the French authorities, in the exercise of a belligerent power against Mexico, has been met by the Government of France with a proposition to defer settlement until a mutual convention for the adjustment of all claims of citizens and subjects of both countries, arising out of the recent wars on this continent, shall be agreed upon by the two countries. The suggestion is not deemed unreasonable, but it belongs to Congress to direct the manner in which claims for indemnity by foreigners, as well as by citizens of the United States, arising out of the late civil war, shall be adjudicated and determined. I have no doubt that the subject of all such claims will engage your attention at a convenient and proper time.

It is a matter of regret that no considerable advance has been made toward an adjustment of the differences between the United States and Great Britain, arising out of the depredations upon our national commerce and other trespasses committed during our civil war by British subjects, in violation of international law and treaty obligations. The delay, however, may be believed to have resulted in no small degree from the domestic situation of Great Britain. An entire change of ministry occurred in that country during the last session of Parliament. The attention of the new ministry was called to the subject at an early day, and there is some reason to expect that it will now be considered in a becoming and friendly spirit. The importance of an early disposition of the question cannot be exaggerated. Whatever might be the wishes of the two Governments, it is manifest that good-will and friendship between the two countries cannot be established until a reciprocity, in the practice of good faith and neutrality, shall be restored between the respective nations.

On the 6th of June last, in violation of our neutrality laws, a military expedition and enterprise against the British North American colonies was projected and attempted to be carried on within the territory and jurisdiction of the United States. In obedience to the obligation imposed upon the Executive by the Constitution, to see that the laws are faithfully executed, all citizens were warned, by proclamation, against taking part in or aiding such unlawful proceedings, and the proper civil, military, and naval officers were directed to take all necessary measures for the enforcement of the laws. The expedition failed, but it has not been without its painful consequences. Some of our citizens who, it was alleged, were engaged in the expedition, were captured, and have been brought to trial, as for a capital offense, in the Province of Canada. Judgment and sentence of death have been pronounced against some, while others have been acquitted. Fully believing in the maxim of government, that severity of civil punishment for misguided persons who have engaged in revolutionary attempts which have disastrously failed, is unsound and unwise, such representations have been made to the British Government, in behalf of the convicted persons, as, being sustained by an enlightened and humane judgment, will, it is hoped, induce in their cases an exercise of clemency, and a judicious amnesty to all who were engaged in the movement. Counsel has been employed by the Government to defend citizens of the United States on trial for capital offenses in Canada; and a discontinuance of the prosecutions which were instituted in the courts of the United States against those who took part in the expedition has been directed.

I have regarded the expedition as not only political in its nature, but as also in a great measure foreign from the United States in its causes, character, and objects. The attempt was understood to be made in sympathy with an insurgent party in Ireland, and, by striking at a British province on this continent, was designed to aid in obtaining redress for political grievances which, it was assumed, the people of Ireland had suffered at the hands of the British Government during a period of several centuries. The persons engaged in it were chiefly natives of that country, some of whom had, while others had not, become citizens of the United States under our general laws of naturalization. Complaints of misgovernment in Ireland continually engage the attention of the British nation, and so great an agitation is now prevailing in Ireland that the British Government have deemed it necessary to suspend the writ of habeas corpus in that country. These circumstances must necessarily modify the opinion which we might otherwise have entertained in regard to an expedition expressly prohibited by our neutrality laws. So long as those laws remain upon our statute-books, they should be faithfully executed, and if they operate harshly, unjustly, or oppressively, Congress alone can apply the remedy, by their modification or repeal.

Political and commercial interests of the United States are not unlikely to be affected in some degree by events which are transpiring in the eastern regions of Europe, and the time seems to have come when our Government ought to have a proper diplomatic representation in Greece.

This Government has claimed for all persons not convicted, or accused, or suspected of crime, an absolute political right of self-expatriation, and a choice of new national allegiance. Most of the European States have dissented from this principle, and have claimed a right to hold such of their subjects as have immigrated to and been naturalized in the United States, and afterward returned on transient visits to their native countries, to the performance of military service in like manner as resident subjects. Complaints arising from the claim in this respect made by foreign States, have heretofore been matters of controversy between the United States and some of the European Powers, and the irritation consequent upon the failure to settle this question increased during the war in which Prussia, Italy, and Austria were recently engaged. While Great Britain has never acknowledged the right of expatriation, she has not practically insisted upon it. France has been equally forbearing; and Prussia has proposed a com-

These statements are in the highest degree encouraging. They are conclusive evidence of the greatness of our resources, and they clearly indicate the patience of the people under self-imposed burdens, and their unwillingness that this debt should be a perpetual incumbrance upon the country.

It is not expected, nor is it perhaps desirable, that the same rate of reduction should be continued. A considerable diminution of taxes was effected by the amendments of the internal revenue law at the last session of Congress. A further diminution of internal taxes, and a modification of the tariff, which will doubtless lead to a reduction of customs duties on many articles, will be required in order that production may be increased and new life infused into certain branches of industry that are now languishing under the burdens which have been imposed upon them. But, after the proper and necessary reductions shall have been made, the revenues will doubtless be sufficient, if the Government shall be economically administered, to pay the current expenses, the interest on the public debt, and reduce the principal at the rate of from four to five millions per month. In order that this may be done, however, there must be no additional donations to railroads, no payments but in the fulfillment of contracts, and no unnecessary expenditure of money for any purpose whatever. With proper economy in all the departments of the Government the debt can be paid by the generation that created it, if wise and equal revenue laws shall be enacted and continued by Congress, and these laws are faithfully enforced by the officers charged with their execution. That it is the will of the people that it should be paid, and not perpetuated, is clearly indicated by the favor with which its rapid reduction during the past year has been regarded. The idea that a national debt can be anything else than a burden—in which there are some compensations, but still a burden, a mortgage upon the property and industry of the people—is fortunately not an American idea. In countries in which the public expenditures are so heavy or the resources are so small that no reduction of their public debts is practicable, and where national securities become monopolized capital in the hands of moneyed aristocracies, who not only absorb the means, but give direction to the sentiment of the people, public debts may be regarded as public blessings; but no such fallacy will ever be countenanced by the free and intelligent people of the United States.

Nothing in our history has created so much surprise, both at home and abroad, as the reduction of our national debt. The wonder excited by the rapidity with which it was created is greatly exceeded by the admiration of the resolution of the tax-payers themselves that it shall be speedily extinguished. The conviction is becoming fastened upon the popular mind that it is important—for economy in the national expenses, for the maintenance of a true democracy in the administration of the Government, for the cause of good morals and of public virtue—that the policy of a steady annual reduction of the debt should be definitely and inexorably established. Nothing short of this, and that economy in the national expenditures which will render it practicable, will reconcile the people to the burdens of taxation. A national debt must ever be a severe strain upon republican institutions, and ours should not be subject to it one day longer than is necessary. To the perpetuation of the existing debt of the United States there are also, it may be proper to remark, serious objections growing out of the circumstances under which it was created. Although incurred in a great struggle for the preservation of the Government, and therefore especially sacred in its character, its burdens are to be shared by those to whom it is a reminder of humiliation and defeat. It is exceedingly desirable that this, with other causes of heart-burnings and alienation, should be removed as rapidly as possible, and that all should disappear with the present generation, so that there may be nothing in the future to prevent that unity and good feeling between the sections which are necessary for true national prosperity.

The Secretary regrets, notwithstanding the large reduction of the national debt, and the satisfactory condition, in other respects, of the national Treasury, that little progress has been made since his last report toward specie payments. The views presented by him in that report, although indorsed in the House of Representatives by a nearly unanimous vote, were not sustained by corresponding legislation. Instead of being authorized to reduce the paper circulation of the country, according to his recommendations, the amount of United States notes which he was permitted to retire was limited to $10,000,000 for the six months ending October 12, and to $4,000,000 per month thereafter. In the mean time the reduction of these notes and of the notes of the State banks has been nearly balanced by the increase of the circulation of the national banks; and specie commands about the same premium it did when the last Treasury report was prepared. Having been thus prevented from taking the first important step toward a return to specie payments, the Secretary has mainly directed his attention to measures looking to an increase of efficiency in the collection of the revenues, to the conversion of interest-bearing notes into five-twenty bonds, and to a reduction of the public debt. What has been accomplished in these respects, and is not already understood by the country, is explained elsewhere in this report. The Secretary has also deemed it to be his duty to use such means within his control as were, in his judgment, best calculated to keep the business of the country as steady as possible, while conducted on the uncertain basis of an irredeemable currency. To accomplish this, he has thought it necessary to hold a handsome reserve of coin in the Treasury. For doing so, he has been criticised by many very intelligent persons, some of whom have condemned the policy as involving a heavy loss to the country in the way of interest; others have objected to it as a failure on his part to avail himself of means within his control for reducing the price of coin, and thus approximating specie payments; on the contrary, not a few have pronounced all sales of gold by the Government unwise, on the theory that if the coin received from customs, and not required for the payment of interest, should be permitted to accumulate until it should reach about the same proportion to the outstanding United States notes that, in former days, the coin in the vaults of well-managed banking institutions sustained to their immediate liabilities, specie payments might be resumed without a reduction of the currency and without regard to the condition of trade between the United States and other nations.

Under these circumstances, feeling sensible of the great responsibility of his position, the Secretary has deemed it safer and better for the country to act according to the dictates of his own judgment, carefully regarding the condition of the markets and of the Treasury, rather than to take his direction from those who, however intelligent and able, were under no official obligations to the Government, and might be less accurately advised in regard to the actual state of its financial affairs. He has regarded a steady market as of more importance to the people than the saving of a few millions of dollars in the way of interest; and observation and experience have assured him that, in order to secure this steadiness in any considerable degree, while business is conducted on a paper basis, there must be power in the Treasury to prevent successful combinations to bring about fluctuations for purely speculative purposes. He has also been clear in his convictions that specie payments are not to be restored by an accumulation of coin in the Treasury, to be paid out at a future day in the redemption of Government obligations; but rather by quickened industry, increased production, and lower prices, which can alone make the United States what they ought to be—a creditor and not a debtor nation. These views explain the course that has been pursued with the gold which, during his administration of the Department, has come into the Treasury. He has permitted it to accumulate when the use or the sale of it was not necessary for paying Government obligations, or to prevent commercial panics, or successful combinations against the national credit; and he has sold whenever sales were necessary to supply the Treasury with currency, to ward off financial crises, or to save the paper circulation of the country, as far as practicable, from unnecessary and damaging depreciation. For making sales he alone is responsible. If, in conducting them, any favoritism has been shown, or if the interests of any particular class have been especially regarded, it has been without his knowledge, and in violation of his instructions. He has not the slightest reason to suppose, however, that they have not been conducted honestly, fairly, and judiciously.

It may be hardly necessary for the Secretary to remark that his opinions have undergone no change in regard to the importance of a restoration of the specie standard, or the means necessary to effect it. He trusts, however, that he has not been understood as entertaining the opinion that a reduction of the currency would of itself necessarily bring about specie payments, although the chief and essential means to effect the desired result. He regards a redundant legal-tender currency as the prime cause of our financial difficulties, and a curtailment thereof indispensable to an increase of labor and a reduction of prices, to an augmentation of exports and a diminution of imports, which alone will place the trade between the United States and other nations on an equal and satisfactory footing.

In order that his views on this point may not be misapprehended, the Secretary trusts that he will be pardoned for referring (even at a risk of a repetition of what he has heretofore presented in other communications to Congress and in other ways to the country) to certain laws, well understood, but too often disregarded, which regulate international trade and control the movements of coin. We have traveled so far from the specie standard, and are so blinded in regard to our actual financial condition and our relations with other countries, by an inflated and irredeemable currency, and by the exportation of our securities, that frequent recurrence to inexorable commercial and financial laws is necessary.

Ever since trade commenced between the people of different nations, gold and silver have been the only reliable and recognized measure of value and medium of exchanges. While in their internal trade other representatives of value have, to a greater or less extent, been used by all nations, money made of these metals has been pronounced by the judgment of the world the only currency possessing the attributes necessary for a uniform and universal circulating medium. From this judgment there is no appeal. Not only is it the true and universally acknowledged measure of value and medium of exchanges, but by its regulating flow it indicates the condition and the results of trade between different nations. Water does not more naturally seek a level than does specie flow from one nation to another for the payment of balances created by an unequal exchange of commodities. Trade between nations is generally and chiefly conducted by an exchange of their productions; but as these exchanges are never exactly equal, there are constantly occurring balances to be paid in something else; and, in their payment, nothing but the precious metals is a legal tender. It is this necessity for paying balances in coin which regulates the trade of nations. It is this great commercial and financial law which makes the nation that sells more than it buys the creditor nation, and the nation that buys more than it sells the debtor nation, and recognizes no medium but coin in the payment of balances, that determines the question of the ability of the United States to resume and maintain specie payments. If the balance is in our favor, or, if not in our favor, if the balance against us is so small that it can be paid without an exhausting drain upon our precious metals, specie payments can at once be resumed. Such, unfortunately, is not the fact. Notwithstanding our heavy exports during the past year, (that of cotton having been 650,672,820 pounds, or nearly 1,600,000 bales, a quantity greater than our entire crop of the present year,) the United States are largely a debtor to Europe.

A few facts will put us right on this point. Between the year 1848, when gold was first discovered in California, and the 1st of July, 1866, the product of the gold and silver mines of the United States was about $1,100,000,000, nearly all of which has gone into the world's general stock; and it is not probable that the amount of gold and silver now in the United States is very much larger than it was eighteen years ago.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, the United States imported:

Foreign merchandise free of duty.....	$58,891,759
Foreign merchandise paying duty.....	388,508,051
	427,399,810

Of foreign merchandise there was reexported:

Free of duty.....	$1,997,157
Dutiable.....	9,434,263

Total (mixed gold and currency value).....	11,341,420
Which, reduced to currency value, was equal to.....	10,263,233

Total net imports foreign merchandise, valued in gold.....	$417,046,577
--	---------------

Amount brought over.....	$417,046,577
Imports, specie.....	$10,329,156
Of which there was reexported.....	3,400,697
Net imports, specie.....	6,928,459
Total net imports, foreign merchandise, and specie.....	423,975,036
During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, the United States exported:
Domestic merchandise, currency value, $168,040,903, reduced to gold value,.....	$333,322,085
Specie exported.....	82,643,374
Total domestic exports, valued in gold.....	415,965,459
Apparent balance of trade, valued in gold.....	$8,009,577

But these figures, taken from the reports of the custom-houses, do not present the whole truth. For many years there has been a systematic undervaluation of foreign merchandise imported into the United States, and large amounts have been smuggled into the country along our extended sea-coasts and frontiers. To make up for undervaluations and smuggling, and for cost of transportation paid to foreign ship-owners, twenty per cent. at least should be added to the imports, which would make the balance for the past year against the United States nearly $100,000,000. It is evident that the balances have been largely against the United States for some years past, whatever may have been the custom-house returns. On no other ground can the fact be accounted for, that a very large amount of American bonds is now held in Europe, which are estimated as follows, to wit:

United States bonds.....	$350,000,000
State and municipal bonds.....	150,000,000
Railroad and other stock and bonds.....	100,000,000
	$600,000,000

It is evident, from these figures, that the balances are against us, and, chiefly by the exportation of our Government bonds, are being temporarily and improvidently arranged; temporarily, because a large portion of these bonds have been bought on speculation, and will be likely to be returned whenever financial troubles in the countries in which they are held shall make it necessary for the holders to realize upon them, or whenever satisfactory profits can be made by returning them, which will be when they nearly approach their par value in coin; improvidently, because they are being purchased at very low prices, and because their exportation stimulates imports, and thus cripples home industry. Nothing is more certain than the fact that there can be no permanent resumption of specie payments in the United States until the balances between them and other nations shall be made easy by an exportation of commodities, including the products of the mines, equal at least to our importations, and until provision shall be made for returning bonds, or for preventing their return at unpropitious times. This state of things, it is conceived, cannot be effected without a change in our financial policy.

There being but one universally recognized measure of value, and that being a value in itself, costing what it represents in the labor which is required to obtain it, the nation that adopts, either from choice or temporary necessity, an inferior standard, violates the financial law of the world and inevitably suffers for its violation. An irredeemable, and consequently depreciated currency, drives out of circulation the currency superior to itself; and if made by law a legal tender, while its real value is not thereby enhanced, it becomes a false and demoralizing standard, under the influences of which prices advance in a ratio disproportioned even to its actual depreciation. Very different from this is that gradual, healthy, and general advance of prices which is the effect of the increase of the precious metals. The coin which is obtained in the gold and silver-producing districts, although it first affects prices within such districts, following the course of trade, and in obedience to its laws, soon finds its way to other countries and becomes a part of the common stock of the nations, which, increasing in amount by the regular product of the mines, and in activity by the growing demands of commerce, advances the price of labor and commodities throughout the commercial world. Thus the products of the American, Australian, and Russian mines tend first to advance prices in their respective localities, but the operation of trade soon distributes these products, and enterprise everywhere feels and responds to the increase of the universal measure of value. All this is healthful, because slow, permanent, and universal. The coin produced in any country will be retained there no longer than its productions and sales keep the balance of trade in its favor. As soon as it becomes cheaper—if this word can be properly used in regard to the standard of value—in the country in which it is produced than in other accessible countries, or rather when it will purchase more in other countries—adding interest, the cost of transportation, duties, and other necessary expenses—than in that in which it is produced, or when it is required to pay balances to other countries, it flows to them by a law as regular and ascertain as gravitation. Hence, although the precious metals are produced in considerable quantities in but a few countries, they affect the prices in all. Not so with a paper currency, which is local in its use and in its influence. Its advantages, when convertible, are admitted; for, if convertible, although it swells the volume of currency, it rather increases enterprise than prices. Its convertibility prevents expansion, while its larger volume gives impetus to trade and creates greater demand for labor. But when a paper currency is an inconvertible currency, and especially when, being so, it is made by the sovereign power a legal tender, it becomes prolific of mischief. Then specie becomes demonetized, and trade is uncertain in its results, because the basis is fluctuating; then prices advance as the volume of currency increases, and require as they advance further additions to the circulating medium; then speculation becomes rife, and "the few are enriched at the expense of the many;" then industry declines and extravagance is wanton; then, with a diminution of products, and consequently of exports, there is an increase of imports, and higher tariffs are required on account of the general expansion to which they, in their turn, give new stimulus and support, while the protection intended to be given by them to home industry is in a great measure rendered inoperative by the expansion. This, notwithstanding our large revenues and the prosperity of many branches of industry, is substantially the condition of the United States, and the important question arises, what are the remedies?

With entire deference to Congress, the Secretary suggests that they are to be found—

First. In compelling the national banks to redeem their notes at the Atlantic cities, or, what would be better, at a single city.

Second. In a curtailment of the currency to the amount required by legitimate and healthful trade.

Third. In a careful revision of the tariff, for the purpose of harmonizing it with our internal taxes—removing the oppressive burdens now imposed upon certain branches of industry, and relieving altogether, or greatly relieving, raw materials from taxes, in order that the product of labor may be enhanced and production and exportation increased.

Fourth. In the issue of bonds, payable in not over twenty years and bearing interest at the rate of not over five per cent., payable in England or Germany, to an amount sufficient to absorb the six per cent. bonds now held in Europe, and to meet the demand there for actual and permanent investment; and—

Fifth. In the rehabilitation of the southern States.

First. The utility of compelling national banks to redeem their notes at commercial centers, as well as at their own counters, is apparent. The object of Congress, in the establishment of the national banking system, was to furnish the people with a solvent currency of uniform value throughout the United States. The solvency of the notes of the national banks is secured by a deposit of bonds with the Treasurer at Washington; but, as the banks are scattered throughout the country, and many of them are in places difficult of access, a redemption of their notes at their respective counters is not all that is required to make them throughout the United States a par circulation. It is true that the notes of all national banks are receivable for all public dues, except duties upon imports, and must be paid by the Treasurer in case the banks which issued are unable to redeem them, but it will not be claimed that the notes of banks, although perfectly solvent, but situated in interior towns, are practically as valuable as the notes of banks in the sea-board cities.

It may be urged that, to compel remote banks thus to redeem, would be a hardship; but as very few well-managed banking institutions in the United States fail to keep accounts and balances in some of the Atlantic cities, this hardship would be found, upon trial, to be imaginary, rather than real. But if it should be a hardship, it would be a necessary one, and the interests of the banks must bend to the interests of the people. Besides, without such redemption, there will be practically none at all, at least until specie payments are resumed; and when there are no redemptions there is always a constant tendency to inflation and illegitimate banking. The frequent and regular return of their notes is needed to keep the business of the banks in a healthy condition, and thus invariably proves no less advantageous to the stockholders than to the public. Unless the banks shall be compelled to redeem in United States notes, many of them will neither lend their influence in favor of a return to specie payments, nor be prepared for them when without their agency specie payments shall be brought about. If the determination of the question was left to the Secretary, all the banks would be required to redeem in New York, the acknowledged commercial metropolis of the Union. The designation of that city as the redeeming point for all national banks would not only give absolute uniformity to their circulation, but would so facilitate the assorting and returning of notes that practical and general redemption would be enforced. It is certain that this will not be done under the existing provisions of the law; it is not certain that it will be unless all banks shall be compelled to redeem at a single point. This might be objected to by the banks in other Atlantic cities on the ground that it would aggrandize New York at their expense. But New York is already the financial and commercial emporium of the Union. Most of the interior banks keep their chief balances in that city, because they are more available and valuable there than elsewhere, and in compelling all the banks to redeem at the metropolis of trade, Congress would be only yielding to an unwritten but controlling law to which statutes should conform. The course of trade compels, and will compel, those national banks whose business is based upon the products of the country—and these must always constitute a majority—to keep their chief balances in New York, whether they redeem there or not. If exchanges between that city and other cities should be in favor of the latter, the redemption by their banks would be made at their own counters, and no sacrifice but that of local pride would be involved in their being required by law to redeem at the common center. When New York shall be a debtor city to Boston and Philadelphia, the notes of the Boston and Philadelphia banks will go home, and not to New York, for payment. What is required is an active, regular, and actual redemption of the notes of all the national banks. To effect this, local pride should be sacrificed and minor interests should be disregarded. What is said upon this subject by the acting Comptroller of the Currency is fully indorsed.

The second remedy suggested is a curtailment of the currency.

The views of the Secretary upon the question of a reduction of the currency have been so frequently expressed that it is only necessary now to consider whether the curtailment should be of the United States notes or of the notes of the national banks. On this subject his opinions have undergone no change since he communicated them in his reports as Comptroller of the Currency. Banks of issue, organized under State laws, have been in existence ever since the formation of the Government. By the decisions of the highest tribunals of the country their constitutionality has been affirmed, and they have become so interwoven with the business of the country, and such large investments have been made in them, that their destruction would involve consequences of a very serious character. Whether or not the country would have been more prosperous without them—whether the stimulus they have given to enterprise and the facilities they have extended to trade have or have not been counterbalanced by the artificial prices which they have created, and the actual losses which the people have sustained by the crises they have occasioned, and by their suspensions and failures—it is too late to consider. When the national currency act was passed by Congress, State banks were in full operation, and not less than $400,000,000 were invested in them as capital. In some States, by judicious legislation and careful management, they had afforded a local circulation satisfactory and safe. In other States, where no reliable security, or insufficient security, had been required for the protection of the public, and their management had been confided to incompetent or dishonest hands, there had been numerous failures, and heavy losses had been sustained by the holders of their notes.

Soon after the commencement of the rebellion, it became apparent that a heavy national debt was to be created, the interest and principal of which could only be paid by a general system of internal taxes, involving a necessity for a circulating medium equal in value throughout the country, and safe for the Government to receive in payment of dues. This subject, of course, demanded and received the earnest and careful consideration of the distinguished gentleman at that time the financial minister of the Government, who caused to be prepared and submitted to Congress a bill "to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," which, after having been carefully considered and thoroughly discussed, became a law on the 25th of February, 1863. Prior to the passage of this act, issues by the Government had been authorized, and a large amount of Government notes had been put into circulation. But there is nothing in the acts authorizing their issue, or in the communications of the Secretary, or in the discussions in Congress, to justify the opinion that they were intended to be a permanent circulation. On the contrary, the provisions in the law for their conversion into bonds, and the arguments of the advocates of their issue, afford ample evidence that they were regarded as merely temporary, and justifiable only by an emergency which it was supposed nothing else could so adequately meet. Had it been proposed that these notes should be a permanent circulation and take the place of bank notes, there is good reason to suppose that the proposition would have had few, if any, advocates. Nor was the national banking system prepared by its author, nor adopted by Congress, to destroy the State banks, nor to divert capital from banking, but rather to compel all banking institutions issuing notes as money to secure them, beyond any conceivable contingency, by deposits with the Treasurer of the United States; thus, without the agency of a national bank, providing a national currency which would save the Government and people from losses, of which there was constant danger, from a local and unsecured circulation. The national banking system was intended, while not invading the rights of the States, nor damaging private interests, to furnish the people with a permanent paper circulation. The United States notes were intended to meet a temporary emergency, and to be retired when the emergency had passed.

The present Secretary was not the advocate of the national banking system, and claims only the credit of having used his best efforts, as Comptroller, to put it into successful operation. But he has no hesitation in pronouncing it a vast improvement upon the systems which it superseded, and one admirably adapted to our peculiar form of Government. There are substantial objections to all banks of issue, and if none existed in the United States it might be very questionable if any should be introduced; but having taken the place of the State banks, and furnishing as they do a circulation as free from objection as any that is likely to be provided, the Secretary is of the opinion that the national banks should be sustained, and that the paper circulation of the country should be reduced, not by compelling them to retire their notes, but by the withdrawal of the United States notes.

The Secretary is not unmindful of the saving of interest which results to the Government by the use of its own currency, nor of the favor with which this currency is regarded by the people; but all considerations of this nature are more than counterbalanced by the discredit which attaches to the Government by failing to pay its notes according to their tenor, by the bad influence of this voluntary discredit upon the public morals, and the wide departure which a continued issue of legal-tender notes involves from past usages, if not from the teachings of the Constitution itself. The Government cannot exercise powers not conferred by its organic law or necessary for its own preservation, nor dishonor its own engagements when able to meet them, without either shocking or demoralizing the sentiment of the people; and the fact that the indefinite continuance of the circulation of an inconvertible but still legal-tender currency is generally advocated, indicates how far we have wandered from old landmarks both in finance and ethics. The views of the Secretary on this point were so fully expressed in his former report that it is not necessary to restate them. It is sufficient to say that his opinions are unchanged, and that reflection and observation during the past year have assured him of their correctness. Anxious as he is to lighten the public burdens and reduce the public debt, he does not hesitate to advise that these notes be withdrawn from circulation, and that the furnishing of what paper currency may be required be left to corporations, under existing laws and such amendment of these laws as experience may dictate for the better protection and advancement of the public interest. How rapidly they may be retired must depend upon the effect which contraction may have upon business and industry, and can be better determined as the work progresses. The reduction could probably be increased from four millions per month, as contemplated by the act of April 12, 1866, to six millions per month for the present fiscal year, and to ten millions per month thereafter, without preventing a steady conversion of the interest-bearing bonds, or injuriously affecting legitimate business. No determinate scale of reduction would, however, in the present condition of our affairs, be advisable. The policy of contracting the circulation of Government notes should be definitely and unchangeably established, and the process should go on just as rapidly as possible without producing a financial crisis or seriously embarrassing those branches of industry and trade upon which our revenues are dependent. There is a great adaptability in the business of the United States, and it will easily accommodate itself to any policy which the Government may adopt. That the policy indicated is the true and safe one the Secretary is thoroughly convinced. If it shall not be speedily adopted and rigidly but judiciously enforced, severe financial troubles are in store for us.

The Secretary cordially approves what is said by the acting Comptroller of the Currency, in his report, in regard to the importance of furnishing the people of the South with the bank-note circulation which their business may require, and agrees with him in the opinion which he expresses of the beneficial results, political, financial, and social, to be effected by the organization of national banks in the southern States, but he cannot recommend an increase of the bank-note circulation of the country beyond $300,000,000, and hopes that the necessities of those States may be supplied rather by a reduction of the amount awarded to other States than by an increase of the volume of currency.

The third remedy suggested is a revision of the tariff for the purpose of harmonizing it with internal taxes, a reduction of taxes upon raw material, &c.

The sixty-sixth section of the act entitled "An act to reduce internal taxation, &c.," approved July 13, 1866, provides: "That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint an officer in his Department, who shall be styled 'special commissioner of the revenue,' whose office shall terminate in four years from the 30th day of June, 1866. It shall be the duty of the special commissioner of the revenue to inquire into all the sources of national revenue, and the best method of collecting the revenue; the relation of foreign trade to domestic industry; the mutual adjustment of the systems of taxation by customs and excise, with the view of insuring the requisite revenue with the least disturbance or inconvenience to the progress of industry and the development of the resources of the country; and to inquire, from time to time, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, into the manner in which officers charged with the administration and collection of the revenues perform their duties. And the said special commissioner of the revenue shall, from time to time, report through the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress, either in the form of a bill or otherwise, such modifications of the rates of taxation, or of the methods of collecting the revenues, and such other facts pertaining to the trade, industry, commerce, or taxation of the country, as he may find, by actual observation of the operation of the law, to be conducive to the public interest."

On the 16th day of July last, Mr. David A. Wells was appointed special commissioner of the revenue, under the authority above recited, and he was instructed to proceed at once to perform the contemplated work, giving his chief attention to the tariff, with the view of ascertaining what modifications are required to adjust it to the system of internal taxes, stimulate industry, and make labor more productive.

The ability displayed by Mr. Wells in the performance of his duties as one of the commissioners for the revision of the internal revenue laws, and the heartiness with which he is prosecuting his investigations, give the best assurance that he will perform the work in a manner creditable to himself, and satisfactory to Congress and the people. The Secretary addressed to him on the 14th day of September, 1866, a letter, from which the following is extracted: "In view of the fact that the revision of the tariff is certain to engage the attention of Congress at its next session, I consider it especially desirable that the Treasury Department should be prepared to furnish as much information pertinent to the subject as can be obtained and collected within the limited time available for the necessary investigations. You are, therefore, hereby requested to give the subject of the revision of the tariff especial attention, and to report a bill which, if approved by Congress, will be a substitute for all acts imposing customs duties, and which will render the administration of this branch of the revenue system more simple, economical, and effective.

"In the discharge of this duty, you will consider the necessity of providing for a large, certain, and permanent revenue, recollecting the fact that the existing tariff has proved most effective in this direction. You will, therefore, endeavor, first, to secure for the Government a revenue commensurate with its necessities; and secondly, to propose such modifications of the tariff laws now in force as will better adjust and equalize the duties upon foreign imports with the internal taxes upon home productions. If this last result can be obtained without detriment to the revenue, by reducing taxation upon raw materials and the machinery of home productions, rather than by increasing the rates of imports, it would, in my opinion, by decreasing the cost of production and increasing the purchasing power of wages, greatly promote the interests of the whole country."

There is no subject which has in times past provoked so much discussion, and in regard to which opinions have differed so widely, as the tariff. It has been a standing matter of sectional and political strife for nearly half a century, and the sentiment of the people in regard to it is still quite as much divided as when the discussion of it commenced. Always a complex and difficult question, it is particularly so at the present time. Prior to the rebellion it had no relation to internal taxes, for this form of Federal taxation was then unknown to our people. It had little connection with the currency, for, until the year 1862, although the banks had repeatedly suspended specie payments, specie was the only legally recognized standard of value in the United States. Now, the question of the tariff is to be considered in connection with a permanent system of internal taxes and a depreciated, but, it is hoped, a temporary, legal-tender currency. It is obvious that a scale of duties upon imports which might have been sufficient, judicious, and beneficial when there were no internal Federal taxes, and business was conducted upon a specie basis, may be insufficient, injudicious, and injurious now. A large revenue is at present indispensable for the payment of the ordinary expenses of the Government, the interest upon the public debt, and for a gradual and regular reduction of the principal. Free trade, although in accord with the principles of the Government and the instincts of the people, cannot be adopted as a policy as long as the public debt exists in anything like its present magnitude. The long-hoped for period when there shall be no legal obstructions to a free exchange of commodities between the United States and other countries is still far in the future. Duties upon imports are not only necessary for revenue, but also for the protection of those home interests upon which heavy internal taxes are to be assessed. The question now before the country is, therefore, one of adaptation rather than principle. How shall the necessary revenue be raised under a system of internal and external taxes without sustaining monopolies, without repressing industry, without discouraging enterprise, without oppressing labor? In other words, how shall the revenue be raised in a manner the least oppressive to the people, without checking the prosperity and growth of the country? The Secretary is not disposed to discuss the question in this report. This will, it is expected, be done elaborately and thoroughly in the report of the commissioner. He desires, however, to call attention to a few important facts in regard to some branches of business in the United States, the consideration of which may tend to give a proper direction to the public mind upon a question so absorbing and important.

No single interest in the United States, fostered although it may be by legislation, can long prosper at the expense of other great interests. Nor can any important interests be crushed by unwise or unequal laws, without other interests being thereby prejudiced. For illustration: the people of the United States are naturally a commercial and maritime people—fond of adventure, bold, enterprising, persistent. Now, the disagreeable fact must be admitted, that, with unequalled facilities for obtaining the materials, and with acknowledged skill in ship-building; with thousands of miles of sea-coast, indented with the finest harbors in the world; with surplus products that require in their exportation a large and increasing tonnage, we can neither profitably build ships nor successfully compete with English ships in the transportation of our own productions. Twenty years ago it was anticipated that ere this the United States would be the first maritime Power in the world. Contrary to our anticipations, our foreign commerce has declined nearly fifty per cent. within the last six years. The tonnage of American vessels engaged in the foreign carrying trade which entered United States ports was—

In 1860.....	5,921,285 tons.
In 1865.....	2,943,661 "
In 1866.....	3,372,000 "

The tonnage of such vessels which were cleared from the United States was—

In 1860.....	6,165,924 tons.
In 1865.....	3,625,134 "
In 1866.....	3,383,176 "

The tonnage of foreign vessels which entered our ports was—

In 1860.....	2,353,911 tons.
In 1865.....	3,216,967 "
In 1866.....	4,410,424 "

The tonnage of foreign vessels which were cleared was—

In 1860.....	2,624,005 tons.
In 1865.....	3,635,123 "
In 1866.....	4,438,384 "

It is true that a large proportion of this diminution of shipping and ship-building was the effect of the war. The great destruction of merchant vessels by rebel cruisers, not only induced sales to neutrals, but discouraged building. After the war, however, the scarcity of American vessels ought to have produced, and, but for a redundant currency and high taxes would have produced, activity in our ship-yards and a rapid increase of tonnage; but this has not been the case. The prices of labor and materials are so high that ship-building cannot be made profitable in the United States, and many of our ship-yards are being practically transferred to the British Provinces. It is only a few years since American ships were sought after on account of their superiority and cheapness; and large numbers of vessels were built in Maine and other States on foreign account, or sold to foreigners, while, at the same time, our own mercantile marine was being rapidly increased. Now many of our ship-yards are abandoned, and in others very little activity prevails. It is true there has recently been some increase in our foreign tonnage, but a good part of this increase is apparent only, and is the result of the new rule of admeasurement. It is an important truth that vessels can be built very much cheaper in the British Provinces than in Maine. Nay, further, that timber can be taken from Virginia to the Provinces, and from these Provinces to England, and there made into ships which can be sold at a profit; while the same kind of vessels can only be built in New England at a loss by the most skillful and economical builders. But the evil does not stop here; if the only loss was that which the country sustains by the discontinuance of ship-building, there would be less cause of complaint. It is a well-established general fact that the people who build ships navigate them, and that a nation which ceases to build ships ceases, of consequence, to be a commercial and maritime nation. Unless, therefore, the causes which prevent the building of ships in the United States shall cease, the foreign carrying trade, even of our own productions, must be yielded to other nations. To this humiliation and loss the people of the United States ought not to be subjected. If other branches of industry are to prosper, if agriculture is to be profitable, and manufactures are to be extended, the commerce of the country must be restored, sustained, and increased. The United States will not be a first-class Power among the nations, nor will her other industrial interests continue long to prosper as they ought, if her commerce shall be permitted to languish.

The same causes—a redundant currency and high taxes—that prevent ship-building, tend to prevent the building of houses and even of manufactories. So high are prices of every description that men hesitate to build dwellings as fast as they are required, and thus rents are so advanced as to be oppressive to lessees, and the healthy growth of towns and cities is retarded. So it is in regard to manufactories. Mills which were built before the war can be run profitably, but so expensive are labor and materials that new mills cannot be erected and put into operation with any prospect of fair returns upon the investment, unless upon the expectation that taxes will remain as they are, and prices be sustained, if they are not advanced. The same causes are injuriously affecting agriculture and other interests which it is not necessary to particularize. It is everywhere observed that existing high prices are not only oppressing the masses of the people, but are seriously checking the development, growth, and prosperity of the country. It is not denied that the losses which the country has sustained of able-bodied men by the war is one cause of existing high prices; but mainly they are the result of a redundant currency and high taxes.

To raise the large revenue which is now required, by systems of internal and external duties, which, working in harmony, shall neither repress industry nor check enterprise, and which shall be so devised as to make taxation bear most heavily upon those who are most benefited by taxes and by the debt which renders taxation necessary, requires great practical knowledge and wise statesmanship. This subject, always an interesting one to the heavily indebted nations of Europe, has become, as one of the results of the war, deeply interesting to the people of the United States. The Secretary does not, as before stated, intend to discuss it, but he ventures to suggest that the following general principles, some of which have been acted upon by Congress, and the correctness of all of which have been proved by other nations, may be safely adopted as a guide to the legislation that is now required:

1. That the fewest number of articles, consistent with the amount of revenue to be raised, should be subjected to internal taxes, in order that the system may be simple in its execution, and as little offensive and annoying as possible to the tax-payers.

2. That the duties upon imported commodities should correspond and harmonize with the taxes upon home productions; and that these duties should not be so high as to be prohibitory, nor to build up home monopolies, nor to prevent that free exchange of commodities which is the life of commerce. Nor, on the other hand, should they be so low as to seriously impair the revenues, nor to subject the home manufacturers, burdened with heavy internal taxes, to a competition with cheaper labor and larger capital which they may be unable to sustain.

3. That the raw materials used in building and manufacturing, and which are to be largely expended upon them, should be exempted from taxation, or that the taxes upon them should be low in comparison with the taxes upon other articles. This is the policy of other enlightened nations, and it is believed that the diminution of direct revenue which it would involve, if adopted by the United States, would be more than made up by the augmented value which it would give to labor, and by the increase of productions and of exports which would be sure to result from it. It should be constantly borne in mind that taxes upon raw materials directly increase the cost of production, and thus tend either to reduce the product of labor or to prevent exportations to foreign markets.

4. That the burdens of taxes should fall chiefly upon those whose interests are protected by taxation, and upon those to whom the public debt is a source of wealth and profit, and lightly upon the laboring classes, to whom taxation and the debt are without so many compensatory advantages.

The next of the proposed remedies is an issue of bonds, bearing interest at the rate of not exceeding five per cent. and payable in Europe, to an amount sufficient to absorb the six per cent. bonds in foreign hands, and supply the European demand for United States securities for permanent investment. No one regrets more than the Secretary the fact that so large an amount of our bonds is held abroad, or the unfortunate condition of our trade that has transferred them thither. The opinion that the country has been benefited by the exportation of its securities is founded upon the supposition that we have received real capital in exchange for them. This supposition is, to a large extent, unfounded. Our bonds have gone abroad to pay for goods, which, without them, might not have been purchased. Not only have we exported the surplus products of our mines and our fields, with no small amount of our manufactures, but a large amount of securities also, to pay for the articles which we have purchased from other countries. That these purchases have been stimulated and increased by the facility of paying for them in bonds can hardly be doubted. Our importations of goods have been increased by nearly the amount of the bonds which have been exported. Not one dollar in five of the amount of the five-twenties now held in England and upon the Continent has been returned to the United States in the form of real capital. But if this were not a true statement of the case, the fact exists, as has been already stated, that some three hundred and fifty millions of Government bonds—not to mention State and railroad bonds and other securities—are in the hands of the citizens of other countries, which may be returned at any time for sale in the United States, and which, being so held, may seriously embarrass our efforts to return to specie payments.

After giving the subject careful consideration, the Secretary has concluded that it is advisable that he should be authorized to issue bonds not having more than twenty years to run, and bearing a low rate of interest, payable in England or Germany, to be used in taking up the six per cents now held abroad, and in meeting any foreign demand for investment that may exist. The question now to be considered is not, how shall our bonds be prevented from going abroad, for a large amount has already gone, and others will follow as long as our credit is good and we continue to buy more than we can pay for in any other way, but how shall they be prevented from being thrown upon the home market to thwart our efforts in restoring the specie standard. The Secretary sees no practicable method of doing this at an early day, but by substituting for them bonds which, being payable principal and interest in Europe, will be less likely to be returned when their return is the least desired. The holders of our securities in Europe are now subject to great inconvenience and not a little expense in collecting their coupons; and it is supposed that five per cent., or perhaps four and a half per cent. bonds, payable in London or Frankfort, could be substituted for our six per cents without any other expense to the United States than the trifling commissions to the agents through whom the exchanges might be made. The saving of interest to be thus effected would be no inconsiderable item; and the advantages of having our bonds in Europe placed in the hands of actual investors is too important to be disregarded.

Fifth. The fifth and last remedy suggested is, the rehabilitation of the States recently in insurrection.

In alluding to this subject, the Secretary feels that he steps upon dangerous ground, and that he may be charged with introducing a political topic in a financial report; but, in his opinion, there is no question now before the country more important in its bearings upon our finances than the political and consequently industrial status of the southern States. Embracing, as they do, one third part of the richest lands of the country, and producing articles of great value for home use and for exportation to other countries, their position with regard to the General Government cannot remain unsettled, and their industrial pursuits cannot continue to be seriously disturbed, without causing such a diminution of the production of their great staples as must necessarily affect our revenues, and render still more unsatisfactory than they now are, our trade relations with Europe. As long as the present anomalous condition of these States continues—as long as they have no participation in the Government, to the support of which they are compelled to contribute—it is idle to expect that their industry will be restored or their productions increased. On the contrary, there is reason to apprehend that until harmonious relations again exist between the Federal Government and these States, the condition of their industrial interests will become day by day more uncertain and unsatisfactory. There will be no real prosperity in these States, and consequently no real prosperity in one third part of the United States, until all possess again equal privileges under the Constitution. Can the nation be regarded as in a healthy condition when the industry of so large a portion of it is deranged? And can the labor question at the South be settled as long as the political status of the South is unsettled? Can the national credit be elevated and the public debt be rapidly reduced unless the southern States shall largely contribute to the public revenues; and can such contributions be relied upon as long as they remain in their present disfranchised condition? Will the tax-payers of the North continue to be patient unless their burdens of taxation can be lessened by being equally shared by the people of the South? Regarded thus as a purely financial question, the relation of these States to the Federal Union is an exceedingly interesting and important one, and as such it demands the calm and careful consideration of Congress.

The Secretary has thus presented, in such manner as his pressing official duties would permit, his views of the financial condition of the country, the causes of trouble, present and prospective, and the remedies for the same. If these remedial measures shall be approved by Congress, and enforced by appropriate legislation, he is confident that specie payments may be resumed by the time our interest-bearing notes are retired, which must be done in less than two years, and probably will be in a much shorter period.

These measures look to an increase of labor, and consequently of production; to a fulfillment of obligations by the Government and the banks; to a reduction of the public debt at the same time that taxes are being equalized and lessened; to lower prices, and apparently harder, but really more prosperous times; to a restoration of specie payments without the financial troubles which usually precede a resumption after a long period of suspension and inflation. The Secretary does not mean to assert that the adoption of all these measures (although he regards each as important) is absolutely necessary to a return to specie payments, nor that other remedies may not be adopted by Congress to rescue the country from impending financial troubles. He presents, as he considers it to be his duty to do, his own views, and asks that they may receive careful consideration, and be adopted if they commend themselves to the wisdom of Congress, and rejected if measures better calculated to secure the desired end can be devised. The most sanguine and hopeful must perceive that the business of the country cannot for a much longer time be run upon the present high level with safety. The speculative interest, large and powerful in itself, is receiving daily new accessions of strength by the increase of individual credits; and when speculators and debtors control the financial policy of the country a financial collapse is inevitable. These untoward and dangerous influences can now be resisted, and the true interests of the people require that they should be resisted promptly and decisively.

Unsatisfactory as is, in many respects, our condition, there is cause for congratulation that we have thus far escaped those severe financial troubles which usually befall nations at the close of expensive and protracted wars. With our vast resources and the buoyant and persistent energy of a free people, it will be our own fault if we do not escape them altogether.

The Secretary has pointed out the financial dangers around and before us, in order that they may be considered and avoided before they culminate in general disaster. Strong as is his conviction that we have been for some time, and still are, moving in the wrong direction, and that much of our prosperity is unreal and unreliable, his confidence in the ability of the country to right itself speedily is unshaken. We have but touched the surface of our resources—the great mines of our national wealth are yet to be developed. The experiences of the past four years have only assured us of our strength. It is only necessary that our true situation be understood in order that the proper remedies may be applied. There is no insurmountable obstacle in the way of restoration to perfect financial health, without the painful trials to which it has been apprehended we must first be subjected. To be a co-worker with Congress and the people in effecting this most desirable result has been, and will continue to be, the highest aim of the Secretary.

After a careful survey of the whole field, the Secretary is of the opinion that specie payments may be resumed, and ought to be resumed, as early as the 1st day of July, 1868, while he indulges the hope that such will be the character of future legislation, and such the condition of our productive industry, that this most desirable event may be brought about at a still earlier day.

The following is a statement of the public debt, June 30, 1866, exclusive of cash in Treasury:

For interest on the public debt	133,678,243 00
	350,247,641 32

Leaving a surplus of estimated receipts over estimated expenditures of..... $85,752,358 68

In regard to the commercial intercourse between the United States and British America, the Secretary adheres to the general opinion expressed in his report of 1865, that until our revenue system is fully revised and adjusted to the financial situation of the country, this subject should not be placed beyond the control of Congress, but should be left to concurrent legislation and such regulations as the Treasury Department may be authorized by law to prescribe. Another reason for arrangements thus flexible is presented by the uncertainty of the political situation of British America. The scheme of confederation, which proposes to transfer questions of revenue and external trade to a single central authority, has not been adopted, and the opposition to the measure may prevail with the new ministry of England, either to modify materially the terms of the Quebec convention, or to subject the whole measure to the hazards of a popular vote in the Provinces.

However the political problem may be solved, it is not unlikely that when the United States shall have simplified existing methods, and reduced existing rates of taxation, so as to receive the largest amount of revenue with the least burden to industry, British America will be prepared to undertake a system of public improvements along the channel of the St. Lawrence and through northwest British America to the Pacific coast, which, by the financial necessities attending its adoption and the administration of a federal government, will suggest a Zollverein, or a complete assimilation of excise and custom duties on each side of the northern frontier. At present, inaction upon this subject would appear to be the true policy of the United States.

Under the authority conferred by Congress at its last session, the marine hospitals at Burlington, Vermont, at Charleston, South Carolina, and at Cincinnati, Ohio, have been sold, and proceedings have been taken to dispose of others not required for service, when it shall be found possible to obtain fair prices for them.

A sale has also been effected of the old marine hospital at Chelsea, Massachusetts, on satisfactory terms. The new hospital building at Chelsea, and that at Cleveland, Ohio, have received such additions and repairs as were necessary to put them in serviceable condition, and all marine patients within practicable reach of them have been gathered there for treatment.

A similar plan of concentrating the patients at prominent points has been as far as practicable pursued throughout the country, by which, together with a rigid adherence to the fundamental principles on which relief should be afforded, the expenses of the establishment in the northern States have been materially reduced, although the enlarged demand for hospital privileges at the South, consequent upon the reopening of that section to commerce, in connection with the very exorbitant prices prevailing there, will cause the total expenditures to be somewhat increased. It is hoped, however, that this increase will be attended by a corresponding addition to the collection of taxes from the seamen.

The revenue-cutters on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and on the lakes, have been diligently and usefully employed in preventive service during the last year.

It was found inexpedient to sell, as authorized by Congress at its last session, the vessels heretofore reported as unsuitable for the cutter service, (with the exception of the Cuyahoga, the largest of the class, which has been offered for sale, but has not yet been disposed of,) until their places should be supplied by others. Consequently they have been kept on active duty, and will not be withdrawn until the small sailing vessels, eight in number, which have been recently contracted for, shall be completed, as they are expected to be, in the course of two or three months. So soon as these can be assigned to duty the others will be withdrawn and sold.

On the 2d day of August last, in accordance with the provision contained in the civil appropriation act, approved on the 28th of July, 1866, Mr. J. Ross Browne was appointed a special commissioner to collect reliable statistical information concerning the gold and silver mines of the States and Territories west of the Rocky mountains; and on the 12th day of September last Mr. James W. Taylor was appointed a commissioner to perform the same work in the States and Territories east of the mountains. Their preliminary reports have not yet been received, but it is expected that they will be in season to be laid before Congress early in the session. The well-known energy of these gentlemen, and their familiarity with the subject of mines and mining, leads the Secretary to expect that their investigations will be thorough, and their full reports interesting and valuable. A copy of the instructions (which contain an outline of the duties devolved upon them) accompanies this report.

On the 3d day of June last, Mr. John Jay Knox, a clerk in this Department, a gentleman of excellent judgment and business habits, was sent to California to examine into the condition of the mint and of the office of the Assistant Treasurer in San Francisco, and to look after some other matters in that quarter, of interest to this Department. His report contains so many valuable suggestions that it has been thought advisable to append it to the report of the Director of the Mint. Particular attention is requested to that part of it which refers to assay offices, and their inutility in remote districts. If, as he concludes, the business of assaying can, not only without detriment, but with positive advantage to the mining interest, be left entirely to private enterprise, where there are no established mints, the Government should be disconnected from it in such districts without delay.

The Statistical Bureau, authorized by the act entitled "An act to protect the revenue, and for other purposes," approved July 28, 1866, was organized on the 5th day of September last by the appointment of Mr. Alexander Delmar as Director. Mr. Delmar deservedly enjoys a high reputation as a statistician, and it is expected that, under his direction, this bureau will be of great benefit to this Department and to the country.

After putting in proper condition the numerous books relating to commerce and navigation, which have been transferred to this bureau, the Director will prepare reliable statistics of the resources of the country and the extent to which they are being developed. Monthly reports of imports and exports, taxes, imposts, wages, products, and markets will also be regularly prepared, and every means employed to ascertain the progress of population and industry. The Secretary is happy to be able to state, although little more than two months have elapsed since the bureau was organized, that good progress has been made in the work devolved upon it.
